Let me forbear my own words, and beg a most earnest consideration of the following brief but important passages, which I have extracted from a paper by the Bishop of Liverpool, delivered in 1890. I venture to think and to pray that these extracts may incite particular prayer for London, and for the whole world, by many a Christian, and especially at the coming prayer meetings in the Great Assembly Hall on May 1.

EXTRACTS.

"I dwell in Liverpool, the second city in the Queen's dominions, and I know what I say. There is a state of things in some quarters of all our great cities, within a short walk of grand town halls and palaces, which cries to heaven against England, and is enough to make an angel weep....

"The mental position of the immense majority is utter indifference to all religion. They are not touched either by church or chapel...

"I believe, however, that there is nothing in the condition of these huge masses of English humanity which cannot be reached, if we use rightly the right means...

"We need nothing new, nothing but the old story of the cross, the blood, the love, the power of our Lord Jesus Christ...The old Gospel is not worn out, and what it has done, it can do again...

"The true solution of the problem is to arouse our lay communicants all over the land, and awaken them to a sense of their responsibilities and duties, This is the true alternative."

WE REST ON THEE.

2 Chron. xiv. 11.

"We rest on Thee," our Shield and our Defender,
We go not forth alone against the foe;
Strong in thy strength, safe in thy keeping tender,
"We rest on Thee, and in thy Name we go."

Yea, "in thy Name," O Captain of Salvation,
In thy dear Name, all other names above;
Jesus, our Righteousness, our Sure Foundation,
Our Prince of Glory and our King of Love.

"We go," in faith, our own great weakness feeling,
And needing more each day thy grace to know;
Yet from our hearts a song of triumph pealing;
"We rest on Thee, and in thy Name we go."

"We rest on Thee," our Shield and our Defender,
Thine is the battle, thine shall be the praise,
When passing through the gates of pearly splendour,
Victors, we rest with Thee, through endless days.

THE UNVEILING.—13.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—THE FIRST WOE.

I.

No vision has generally been found more difficult of interpretation than the one before us; in none have the expositions of the symbolic features been more varied or in some cases more grotesque; in none has the principle that "the interpretation must be governed by the symbol, and not the symbol forced into agreement with the interpretation" (see No. 3, Jan. 17, p. 10), been more departed from; and yet in none is the true exposition more capable of proof by the rule that the interpretation which accounts satisfactorily for each symbolic feature, and harmonises them all in one ideal, is the true one.

Such proof is here of a two-fold character. (1) The whole vision is the first of a series of three Woes, and its interpretation must be tested by its consistency with that of the two which follow. (2) There are numerous symbolic features, the meaning of nearly every one of which is fixed by its previous use in the Old Testament; and the interpretation by which these are all brought into line, and accounted for, will be authenticated by the process of cumulative proof.

The star which, when the fifth Trumpet sounded, John saw as having already fallen to the earth, is to be identified with the great star which under the third Trumpet fell from heaven burning as a torch, and which, as we then perceived, was Lucifer, the light-bearer: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning . . . For thou saidst . . . I will ascend above the clouds: I will be like the Most High. Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell; to the sides of the pit." (Isa. xiv.)

This pit of the abyss is figured as being in the heart of the earth. "Hell (Sheol, the grave) from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming." "I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit . . . in the nether parts of the earth." (Isa. xiv., Ezek. xxxi.)

But there is a close connection and parallel between the earth and ourselves—between our mother earth which lies beneath our feet, and us who walk upon her bosom. Thus the Psalmist says (cxxxix. 15): "Thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. . . . My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth."

In like manner, there is a bottomless pit, a heart of desperate wickedness and unfathomable depth (who can know it?), in fallen man, as well as in the midst of the earth. Indeed, we continually say that the real hell is within. If there were no bottomless pit within, there would be none without, into which impenitent sinners will be cast.

The pit of the abyss, of which the key is given to the fallen star, is the abyss within, and the key is temptation. He tried it upon the Lord Jesus, but there was no pit or abyss within Him who knew no sin; the prince of this world came and had nothing in Him. The Man who is Jehovah's Fellow was as pure and holy when on the cross the flaming sword awoke against Him and was quenched in his precious blood, as is He that sitteth upon the throne.

The first result of the opening of the abyss within by the key of temptation is the issue of a smoke, like the smoke of a great furnace, so that the sun and the air are darkened by the smoke of the pit. Thus Hosea says (vii.):—

> They have made ready their heart like an oven heated by the baker, whiles they lie in wait: their baker sleepeth all the night; in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire.

This is a graphic picture of the abyss within. The first effect in the heating of the oven is smoke. The first effect of temptation is that nothing is seen clearly, or in its due proportion. The sun and the air are darkened. For example, a youth comes up from a quiet home to a great city. Immediately he is met by the devil with his key of temptation. If he yields, the first thing is a smoke which obscures everything. He sees nothing clearly. He sees the pleasures of sin, but does not see that they are only for a season; he sees the immediate gratification, but not the bitter consequences. "With her much fair speech the stranger [who is the impersonation of Folly], caused him to yield; with the flattering of her lips she forced him. He goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks." Wisdom says, "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee." But this is impossible when the sun and the air are darkened by the smoke which temptation has caused to arise from the pit of the abyss within—the heart deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked.

THE LOCUSTS IN JOEL.

"And out of the smoke there came forth locusts; and unto them was given power as the scorpions of the earth have power." All that natural history and all that Scripture elsewhere had said about the locust was gathered up by the Prophet Joel; but to all the terrible and disastrous ravages wrought by those locusts, several further horrors are added in this vision of the last Seer. Before we consider these, however, let us get all the instruction we can from Joel.

First, the natural insect is a terrible scourge, and its swarms were one of the devastating plagues of Egypt, and are still a most dreaded visitation in the East.

Joel's locusts also evidently symbolize a hostile invasion, "describing the inroad of the Assyrian host under Sennacherib in figures borrowed from those insect swarms." (Dean Vaughan.)

But we have not yet reached the core and essence of Joel's mystic and appalling delineation. Indeed, there are few spiritually exercised readers of Joel who have not instinctively used his searching words in their inmost and personal meaning, even though they may not have observed that there are features of these terrible armies which are not true either of insects or armed men: "If they fall upon the sword they shall not be wounded," is not poetical hyperbole. It is a statement in symbolic language of an absolute truth, as we shall see as we proceed.

Let us briefly consider the three following verses:—

> That which the palmerworm hath left hath the locust eaten, and that which the locust hath left hath the cankerworm eaten, and that which the cankerworm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten (Joel i. 4).
> The land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness (id. ii. 3).
> And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the caterpillar and the cankerworm, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you (id. ii. 25).

To take the last first. Are we not all familiar with the prayer that our wonder-working God may restore to us the years that the locust hath eaten? And when we so pray do we not mean that as the fruits and vegetation of the earth have been eaten up by these destructive creatures, and God has promised to restore those devastated years: so the best possibilities of our past lives have been devoured by the lusts of the flesh and the desires of the mind; and out of our remorse and self-despair we hope in God, cast ourselves upon his seemingly impossible promises that wasted years shall be restored, until

> Faith laughs at impossibilities
> And says, "It shall be done."

Because He who said, and made good the saying, "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction," is able to restore our devoured years.

Have we not among our personal acquaintances and friends and relatives seen the land as the Garden of Eden before them and behind them a desolate wilderness? Is not the parable of the Prodigal Son, and are not the thousands of lives whose story is condensed into that proverbial parable, told essentially in these pregnant words: "The land as the Garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness"? And what is the book of Ecclesiastes, or the whole history of Israel and of man, but the self-same story? Have not our eyes been wet with sympathetic tears, as we have heard a thousand hearts express themselves in the words of one—

> My birthday! What a different sound
> That word had in my youthful ears:
> But now each time the day comes round
> Less and less bright its mark appears.

Or of another—

> I remember, I remember,
> The fir-trees green and high;
> I used to think their slender tops
> Were close against the sky.
> It was a childish ignorance,
> But yet 'tis little joy
> To think I'm farther off from heaven
> Than when I was a boy.

Or the concentrated misery of Byron's dying wail—

> My days are in the yellow leaf;
> The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
> The worm, the canker, and the grief,
> Are mine alone.

Let us ask men whose life was less hasty, and their thinking not less profound than ours, what interpretation they put upon Joel's swarming armies. Dr. Pusey, in his "Minor Prophets," says on Joel i.:—

> Actual locusts were very likely one of the scourges intended by the prophet. They certainly were not the whole; but pictured others fiercer, more desolating, more overwhelming. The proverbial dress gained and fixed men's attention on the truth, which, if it had been presented to the people nakedly, they might have turned from. Yet as in God's wisdom what is said generally is often fulfilled specially, so here there were four great invaders which in succession wasted Judah: the Assyrian, Chaldean, Macedonian, and Roman.
> Morally also four chief passions desolate successively the human heart. "For what is designated by the palmerworm, which creeps with all its body on the ground, except it be lust, which so pollutes the heart which it possesses that it cannot rise up to the love of heavenly purity? What is expressed by the locust, which flies by leaps, except vain glory, which exalts itself with empty presumptions? What is typified by the cankerworm, almost the whole of whose body is gathered into its belly, except gluttony in eating? What but anger is meant by mildew, which burns as it touches? What the palmerworm then hath left the locust hath eaten, because when the sin of lust has retired from the mind vain glory often succeeds."—St. Gregory.

The writer then goes on to complete his illustration, and thus concludes: "When, then, some vices succeed to others, one plague devours the field of the mind, while another leaves it."

On the passage "They shall enter in at the windows," Pusey says:—

As the windows are to the house, so are the senses, and especially the sight, to the soul. As the strongest walls and battlements and towers avail not to keep out an enemy, if there be an opening or chink through which he can make his way, so in vain is the protection of God's providence or his grace, if the soul leaves the senses unguarded to admit unchallenged sights, sounds, touches, which may take the soul prisoner.

From the days of our mother Eve till now the Garden of Eden has been changed into a desolate wilderness through the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life.

Enough has been said to prove to the thoughtful and spiritual reader that behind the literal insects and the devastating armies of which they were the type, the Spirit in the prophet intends to portray the secret springs of action, the powers and influences that pull the wires of human life. Just as in the later dispensation the Apostle James asks the members of the Church of Christ, "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts which war in your members?" And the Apostle Peter entreats: "Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul."

In the next of these papers it will be shown that this interpretation finally satisfies the Scriptural symbolism of the vision of Rev. ix. and accounts for not some, but all, of the numerous features which constitute its graphic but terrific picture. M.

CANON WILBERFORCE ON PURITY.

A correspondent writes:—On Sunday I heard Canon Wilberforce preach on the subject of Purity. He treated it with refined delicacy, but with a manly fidelity which I never heard surpassed in the pulpit. The main substance of his discourse was the duty of cultivating purity of heart as a condition of seeing God in the present life as well as the future, and in reference to all righteousness and not merely to one particular form of it. The heart is the fountain of action; and we might, from circumstances, be blameless in outward conduct, while desperately depraved inwardly, delighting in defiling imaginations, and desirous to realise them if it were possible without too great a cost.

In reference to one particular sin, he said that men should be judged not more leniently than their victims, who are generally less guilty. Any men, however high in rank, or wealth, or fame, or culture, who, to gratify their appetite, dragged a fellow human being to the dust, instead of being courted and flattered, should be treated no less sternly than if they were detected hiding a card in their sleeve. Such a crime was far more culpable than theft; silence on such subjects, screening the criminal, was a sanction of impurity.

There should be an open protest against a prevailing laxity in literature, in pictures, and in amusements. Such an atmosphere pervaded the theatre of the present day that any representation which a young girl could attend without danger to her modesty was talked about in society as quite a remarkable event.

A BETHLEHEM COT has been started in the Mildmay Hospital in Bethnal Green. In this cot many a little Hebrew child will, with God's blessing, be nursed back to health and strength.

A CHEAP CHILDREN'S DINNER.—A well-known man, who, however, desires that his name should not be disclosed, gave a dinner a week or two ago to 400 East End children, at the Ragged Schools, George Yard, Whitechapel. As the entertainment cost so little, in order to encourage others who might wish to do a little kindness, but are deterred by the fear of expense, it is permitted to me (says a writer in Truth) to make the following public:—Meat 16s. 3d., vegetables and pearl barley, 5s. 3d., bread, 8s. 4d., oranges, 16s., sundries, 6d., women for helping, 2s. 6d., total, £2 8s. 10d. For that trifling amount 400 ill-fed children had a hearty meal, and in the many days of their misery were provided with one day of comparative happiness.

Temperance Legislation.

Those of us who for many years have laboured in the cause of temperance have long been convinced that the constant presence of temptation forms our greatest hindrance in all attempts at reform. To give illustrations on this point is superfluous, they are known to every one. It would be hard to find one more terrible, or more condemnatory of ourselves, than was contained in The Times article, lately reprinted in The Christian, describing the awful "demoralisation and degradation of native races" caused by the African liquor trade. The present cry of "unemployed" emphasises the passage which follows: "The existence of the spirit trade destroys every other trade. The native who buys spirits rarely buys anything else." According to this statement, not only have our English merchants inflicted cruel injury on the African natives, but in doing so they have shut out from us a mass of useful and beneficial trade. Our capital, our clever artisans now unemployed, might have been kept busy in preparing general goods for a people who could supply materials, but as yet have little knowledge how to use them for themselves.

That a nation like England, to whom God has given such large resources—wealth, ability to direct, skilful hands to perform—should use their gifts to bring destruction and misery in their most dreadful forms on unoffending races less gifted—far less able than ourselves to "march o'er the dead and hasten on"—is a crime so cowardly, one only marvels that the punishment wrapped up in the act should not be even heavier.

Our Foreign Mission work gives us cause for much thankfulness; yet side by side with this we have the grief of learning that those saved by the teaching of our missionaries are far fewer in number than those destroyed by drink.

Some races have been so deeply injured that they are even asking for "compensation." Who can ever convince those who have done this injury that any compensation is due?

There is a Power—and because I believe in it I write as I do—that can convince us as a nation of our sin before God in this thing. If He, the Spirit of Truth, proceeding from the Father of all peoples and nations, whose will it is that not one little one should perish, if He would come to us and show us how these our actions stand in his sight, surely, like Job, we should abhor ourselves and repent in dust and ashes.

When Christ, the night before He suffered, gathered his disciples around Him, and spoke to them of the nature and extent of the opposition they would certainly meet with from the world, He did not direct them to any system or plan of operations. What He again and again brought before them was the existence of a spiritual Power direct from God; and one of three things mentioned as pre-eminently the work of this Spirit of Truth is, "When He is come He will convince the world of sin." This implies a deeper meaning given to the word, a new gravity attaching itself to the fact of sin—a clearer vision of its blighting influence upon humanity.

The disciples to whom Christ spoke had not by any means been always successful teachers, but on the day of Pentecost, when their former hearers, with thousands of others of all nationalities and languages, were gathered around them, teachers and hearers alike, under the power of the Spirit of Truth, who convinces of sin, a new sense of responsibility and of danger came over those who heard, and they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

This Holy Spirit has not been without witness amongst us in regard to our national besetting sin. The article above referred to shows that the national conscience is not wholly asleep as to the sale of drink abroad; and after long years of effort a Bill has been framed, and now waits to pass into law, enabling our people to protect themselves in some measure against the sale of drink at home. "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

In this country the action of government largely depends on the impulse of a strong mandate from the people. Comparatively few can attend the great meetings called together to protest before men; but let all cry mightily to Him who is able to change our national indifference into the cry, "How shall I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" Mary Bayly.

TONGOA, NEW HEBRIDES.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, writing from Tongoa, New Hebrides, in December last, reported that although the influenza had left the island, its after-effects were still apparent in much sickness and weakness among the people. Personally, he had been brought very low, but again the Lord had restored him to health and vigour. He writes:—

"The Bible-class continues to be the most interesting part of our work. On a fairly good day we have 200, who have left off work even at this busy season to come up to the class on Friday afternoon. They come from all parts of the island. The Master is present with us at these solemn meetings (the life of Christ is our subject), and the influence will be carried away to every village. Beside the ordinary six o'clock school, attended by the whole village, Mrs. Michelsen has commenced a children's school at 9 o'clock at the station. Our native population on the station is now twenty-eight, men, women, and children, from various parts of our district, but we shall soon have to reduce this number, as it goes beyond our means to provide food for them. Owing to the prevalence of illness on the island, very few of the natives have been able to make plantations, so that very little native food is procurable, and we are almost entirely dependent on what we import from Sydney.

"The most interesting person on the station, I suppose, is the baby. Five weeks ago two of my men asked leave to go to another part of the island to a funeral. They told me that a woman had died in childbirth. 'But what about the baby?' said I. 'It is still alive,' they answered. So I told them to bring it back with them. He was a miserable little thing, and not many expected him to live. He is, however, growing to be a fine little fellow. Mrs. Michelsen would not like to part with him for anything, though he is black. We have called him Oscar Spence. He may some day grow up to be the pastor of Tongoa. Pray for him, that he may get the mental and spiritual equipment for it.

"The Viking, a splendid oak-built boat, has just arrived from Norway. It is valued at £100, landed in Sydney. Most of the cost has been, or will be, raised by my brother, who is struggling hard, giving magic lantern lectures on the Tongoa Mission. This is slow work in a country where 10 öre (one-ninth part of a shilling) is a respectable coin on the plate, not to speak of 1 or 2 öre! This boat was a welcome gift, and we are now preparing for our trial trip—a visit to our station on Epi.

"Our people are now in good spirits, and so are we. Everything seems bright and hopeful. Mr. Annand's training institution for native teachers and pastors is going forward at Santo. He has got nearly £300 (mostly from Canada) out of the £500 required for buildings, &c. I sent him eight of my best workmen by the last steamer. They will help him to clear land, make fences, and build houses. He expects several students after New Year. There is good news of progress at Malo, Malekula, and other islands. The great want of our Mission is efficient teachers. For the lack of these I would blame Queensland alone. Scores of half-trained young men are let to go away, and very few ever return."

The Keynote of Revival.

GOD! This is the one emphatic word in the Bible. Throughout the Scriptures, everywhere and always, God is in the foreground, and man in the background. All the inspired writers, without exception, have God for their theme and text. From the beginning of Genesis to the end of Revelation we are constantly bidden to take our eyes off men and centre them upon God. In the Lord Jesus we behold the brightness of His glory and the express image of His person. "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." The purpose of Christ's death upon the cross was to restore us to God, and not to some man-made creed. "Christ once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, who raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God." "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His Name together."

Hearts have been stirred recently, in reading and hearing of past revivals, into longing for something greater and deeper in life and work than has yet been seen. We yearn to hear more distinctly the goings of God; that once more Jesus of Nazareth should manifestly pass by in saving power and grace; that in all of us, and all around us, "instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the briar the myrtle-tree, to be to the Lord for a name."

But "how can these things be?" says the objector. How! Is God dead? Shame on us for our unbelief. When God comes in, difficulties vanish. "My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart and my portion for ever." Trembling one, encourage yourself in the Lord. Never be led into the sin of forgetting omnipotence. It was a happy day for Job when he could honestly say, "I know that Thou canst do everything." We never know what great things God will do, nor all that He can do; but we do believe that to Him all things are possible.

The beginning, the middle, and the end of all true revival is in God. And every tide of grace which overflows in blessing to a lost world is an incoming of God. "Thou wentest forth for the salvation of Thy people." We cannot have revival apart from Him. He is the Blesser and the Blessing, the Giver and the Gift. Too often in our meetings, in church and hall, the awful sense of the presence of God is not realised, and the terrible realities of eternity are not felt. Much is made of the creature and little of the Creator. But why should this continue? When the people lamented after God, He delivered them. If we glorify Him by giving Him his rightful place, will He not do so again?

But the cost to us of a revival is great. It is no light matter to pray for times of refreshing. God will come when we have been brought down low enough. The exaltation of God can only be through the humiliation of man. When our self-sufficient hearts have been emptied of all their human resources the Lord will enter and take to Himself his great power and reign. "The prayer meeting has got very low," said an earnest Christian to his pastor just before the last remarkable outpouring of the Spirit of grace and supplication. "It seems to me it is going down altogether." "Not at all," replied the pastor. "The fact is, we are being reduced, like Gideon's host, and when we are brought sufficiently low to appreciate blessing, and have no hope but in God, there will be a great reviving and that you will see. Those who hold on through the bad time are the first to see the good." So it happened; for the Lord graciously sent down blessing, which caused the ordinary channels to overflow; and in less than six months the minister added one hundred and fifty to the roll of the church's membership. So it will be again when we have been brought to an end of ourselves and of our own power and resources. Therefore let us get low down before God, and wait upon God, and cry to God. "We have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, WHAT WORK THOU DIDST in their days, in the times of old." "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice IN THEE?"

O Lord, revive thy work,
Thy mighty arm make bare,
Speak with a voice that wakes the dead,
And make thy people hear.

O Lord, revive thy work,
And give refreshing showers,
The glory shall be all THINE OWN,
The blessing, Lord, be ours.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

LOOKING in, unannounced, the other morning on Mr. Wheatley, we found him busy dealing with a host of applicants for counsel and practical help. He finds the work grow on his hands—so far as numbers go. It is becoming generally known among "men who have gone wrong" and parents and guardians of wayward boys, that this mission has found a way to help such, by setting them on their feet and giving them a fresh start in life. Hence hosts of those who are "in trouble" find their way to 29, Brooke-street, and being there hear what they did not reckon upon, the way of salvation put plainly before them; for now, as ever, this is felt to be the only hope of security for tempted ones.

Amongst the letters on the table, we lighted on the following from a large firm:—

"We have had the boy from your Home in our employ nine months, and are highly pleased with his conduct and work. We hope to give him a better place, and shall certainly ask you to provide us another lad to do his present work." What was this boy's history? Two years ago, at the age of fifteen, he was charged at the Mansion House Court with stealing. He had been utterly neglected in early days, and seemed to have no chance in life. He was committed to the care of the Mission, and as the letter shows, has, after careful training, done well.

Another well-known firm writes in the following terms:—

"The lad we had from your Home has now been with us over a year, and has been punctual, honest, and industrious, and has never given us cause for complaint." This boy, at the age of sixteen, was found homeless and uncared for. Being charged at Clerkenwell Court, he was committed to the care of the Mission, to which he is now doing credit.

Facts such as these show that, apart from the great work of this Mission among discharged prisoners and convicts, a most remarkable and resultful rescue-preventive service is being done among boys likely, if left alone, to ripen into full-blown criminals. In doing such work, doing it on a large scale, and doing it thoroughly, this Mission surely deserves generous and hearty support. Full information as to the operations may be had from Mr. Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

LIVING PICTURES IN NEW YORK.—At the close of a recent performance at the New York Casino Mr. Rudolph Aronson, the manager, was arrested and taken before a magistrate, when he was released on bail. "The cause of the trouble," says a Dalziel telegram, "was that one of the living pictures was found to be objectionable to some who follow the lead of Mr. Anthony Comstock." It has been hitherto extremely difficult to take any action in New York owing to the unsatisfactory condition of the State law touching indecent theatrical performances. The "fanatics" who follow Mr. Anthony Comstock, the well-known reformer, are among the finest men and women in New York. They have a hard fight before them, and we heartily wish them success in their endeavours to purify the American stage.—Woman's Signal.

MADAGASCAR.

ON Thursday last the President of the French Republic reviewed at Sathonay, near Lyons, the troops which are being despatched "to win the great African island"—Madagascar. They are said to be "picked, seasoned men, provided for, against Madagascar bullets and fevers, with fatherly care, full of patriotism, and impatient to be off." Our chief alarm at this intelligence arises from the fact that Madagascar has been largely Christianized by the labours of Protestant missionaries, and that we have thousands of fellow-believers there whose peace is imperilled, and whose faith will be more severely tried than ever by the Jesuits, who will follow in the wake of this expedition.

Just at this juncture the London Missionary Society's Chronicle for April appears, giving a valuable account of the "Christian Interests in the Island of Madagascar." It informs us that there are 2000 Protestant churches, with more than 300,000 adherents. More than 1300 of these churches are connected with the L.M.S., and have 280,000 adherents, and 60,000 church members; 803 congregations are in the central province of Imerina, where Christian work was begun in 1820. The native churches themselves, not the missionaries, have been the great converting agency in the island. It is to the strengthening, teaching, and guiding of the churches that the missionaries have mainly given their attention.

In the capital of Imerina, Antananarivo, church buildings are the most conspicuous objects, four stone memorial churches to the martyrs, the Cathedral of St. Lawrence belonging to the Anglican Mission, and the great Roman Catholic Cathedral. "Anyone standing on the higher parts of the city may count well-built village chapels by the dozen; almost every village around Antananarivo has its Protestant place of worship." And they are well attended. "The Sunday morning is ushered in by the church-going bell, and the streets of the capital are crowded before and after service time by hundreds of neatly-dressed worshippers; even casual visitors are struck with the air of order and quiet that reigns in the great Hova city," which has 100,000 inhabitants.

The Bible, which kept religion alive in the old days of persecution when there was no missionary to guide, to comfort, and to teach the handful of believers, has been made the great instrument of instruction. The strength of the Protestant services has been the supreme place given to the reading and explanation of God's Word. Eleven years were spent in making the translation of it as perfect as possible. Rev. W. E. Cousins is of opinion that the knowledge of Holy Scripture possessed by the people, the way in which the Bible has rooted itself in their reverence and love, will now prove their safeguard." Roman Catholic missionaries have nothing to offer that would take the place of the free, healthy Church life they now enjoy, and of the supreme place the Bible has taken in all their services, and in their religious life."

The extensive educational work carried on is another guarantee of the fidelity of the people. There is a college for the training of young men for the ministry and also for secular callings; there is a normal school, which has trained 500 schoolmasters; there are two high schools for boys and young men, one of them where the relatives of the Queen and the sons of the chief officers are mostly trained; there are two high schools for girls; there is a mixed school in connection with every one of the nine city churches; and there are nearly 800 village mixed schools. Hundreds of thousands of educational books are issued yearly by four printing establishments belonging to the L.M.S., the Friends, the Norwegian Mission, and the S.P.G.

There is no space to speak of the medical mission work and of the general work done in other parts of the island. We commend this "Madagascar Number" of the Chronicle to all who wish to understand how great are the issues at stake, how serious is the injury which this invading army of the French may do, and how urgent is the call to prayer. An invasion cannot but have a disturbing and hindering effect upon the best work that is going on. But there is a clause in the Anglo-French Convention to which missionaries cling: "In Madagascar the missionaries of both countries shall enjoy complete protection. Religious toleration and liberty for all forms of worship and religious teachings shall be guaranteed."

The Missionary Prayer Union.

It will be seen from a brief report on another page, that the Missionary Prayer Union, inaugurated by the pastor of the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, continues its good work. Its membership now numbers ninety. Of these the majority give only a halfpenny a day, a few give a penny, and a few even more than that. The income realised by this simple means is between £25 and £30 each quarter, and is sufficient for the support of a missionary, whom the members can regard as their own.

To us it appears that by this simple method the difficulty which now meets all missionary work could be met. No one doubts that there is money enough among our church members to support a largely-increased staff of missionary workers. Two things seem to be necessary: first, the true interest in missions which will make the people willing to give; and, secondly, a method, by which their gifts can be gathered without difficulty. Both these needs are met by this scheme. The daily prayer, not only for mission work generally, but for a missionary who depends upon the members for support, and the quarterly letter from the missionary, tend to awaken and perpetuate and increase the missionary spirit; while the box, with which every member is provided, and in which the daily gifts are deposited, renders it easy to collect the amounts at the end of each quarter. If all other churches adopted a similar plan, the missionary problem would be solved.

The remedy for the missionary block is very largely in the hands of the pastors of the churches. Of course, little can be expected from a church whose pastor has no sympathy with missionary work. How such a man can be a pastor at all, after reading the Church's commission in Matt. xxviii., is a mystery. But given, on the part of the pastor, a proper conception of the purpose for which the Church exists, and a readiness to lead the people in self-denying service for the cause that lies so near to the heart of Jesus, there needs be no difficulty in securing all the increase of contributions for which our societies are asking.

It is necessary also that the societies seek to command as fully as possible the confidence of the churches. On the part of many there is a suspicion that anything new, which does not originate with the society itself, is looked on with disfavour; and that some prominent members of missionary committees discourage the idea of churches supporting their own missionary, and being in direct communication with him. There is also a fear that not enough liberty as to methods of work is allowed to the missionaries in the field, that the operations are too rigidly determined by the committees sitting in London.

Among Baptist churches, we know also that many prominent members regard with great disfavour the policy of the Baptist Missionary Committee of keeping unused so large a proportion of the Centenary Fund, until the annual income of the Society warrants their entering upon new and much needed undertakings. The conviction is very strong that if the money is there it ought to be utilised; and that until it is spent any large increase in the annual income will be looked for in vain.

If missionary committees are the organisations by which churches do missionary work; if the missionaries are the messengers, not of the societies, but of the churches, then the success of the work requires the fullest confidence between the societies and the churches. Given this (and surely a little plain, kindly speech may secure it), there will be no difficulty in obtaining, by a simple scheme like that already tried and proved in Bournemouth, all that is needed for a very large extension of missionary work.

THE HORRORS OF WAR.

By Wm. V. HERBERT.*

Barbarities are common to all wars, and to the soldiers of all nations, even the most civilised. Armies are composed, to the amount of 75 per cent. or more, of uneducated, or, at the best, half-educated men, many of whom have never learnt to control their evil inclinations, are, indeed, not sufficiently intelligent to see the necessity of doing so. Race-hatred is carefully fostered before the war by the rulers, party leaders, statesmen, and by the Press; during the campaign it is maintained and nurtured by the officers. Sometimes bigotry and fanaticism are also invoked. The fundamental rule of all moral teaching, to love our brethren, is completely reversed; we are told to murder them. The men are, mentally, charged with explosives, if such a metaphor be allowed; every day and hour of uncertainty and suspense adds to this infernal store of slumbering passions, and it only requires a spark to set them aflame, with a terrible fire. An action, the very first action of the campaign, perhaps, supplies the spark. All the most evil passions are let loose, particularly if there be a charge, or any hand-to-hand conflict; and the result is that there is in every war three or four times the amount of bloodshed which would be necessary to bring about the desired result. Men already on the ground are wantonly a position is taken, is found filled with wounded, and in the first rush of the invaders, excited to fury by the losses previously sustained, every one of the helpless is slaughtered. Officers, unpopular in their company, are shot by some of their own men who have undergone punishments at their instigation; many a private spite, many a grudge of old standing, many an ancient feud or rivalry is summarily settled in the confusion of a general slaughter. The list of casualties is only one or two names longer—who cares and who will ever know? In Plevna, in 1877, where I commanded a company of Turkish infantry for several months, I once caused two brothers, privates of my company, to be drafted into another battalion and removed to a distant part of the camp, because it had come to my ears that they had, quite innocently, excited the illwill of some of their comrades by establishing themselves in business in the town whence the majority of my men hailed, and taking their trade away by spirited competition. Whenever it had become necessary for me to report or punish a man for some little sin of commission or omission, I frankly confess I trembled in my shoes when the next battle came round. The countless shells of the enemy, his charging battalions, his sweeping rifle-fire, I simply laughed at; but that sullen man behind me, with a grudge locked up and patiently nursed in the innermost recess of his bosom, turned me sick at heart. Generally I would conciliate such a one by some small gift or favour.

RUN THROUGH, OFTEN BY WAY OF SPORT;

The first battle is fought; the men have grown used to the sight of blood, and like it. The longer the interval, the more terrific the explosion of condensed fury—to which each day of waiting has added its quota—at the next action. Thus battle succeeds battle, and at the end men who were once lovable and gentle are

TURNED INTO FURIOUS BEASTS.

Comrades must be avenged; personal friends are dead or mutilated, and their blood cries for retribution; actions and positions are lost in other parts of the theatre of war, and the safety of the country, the honour of the flag, the fair fame of race or creed, demand imperatively fresh and more frightful slaughter. Perchance, the course of war takes an evil turn, as it did with us in Turkey in 1877, and the men feel that they fight for home and wife and child, for not only integrity and independence, but the very existence of their country; and at length human life has less value than the dirt on which the charging brigades trample in their last stupendous rush.

When at last peace is made, that which was before not only legally right but authoritatively demanded, namely, the killing of fellow-creatures, becomes once more a heinous crime, is restored to the lawful place assigned to it by Divine command, a place which the lapse of centuries crowded with wars, as recorded in the annals of history, has been unable to shift in the estimation of right-minded men. War is a disease in the life of a nation, and an acute one. But which are chronic. Of these two suggest themselves to me.

The first is the effect on the minds of uneducated, unintelligent, or mentally weak men by months of nameless horrors, the stain left on the mental constitutions of men whose moral perception was perhaps never very keen, and grew more blunted in a continuous exercise of legalised murder. Every army contains a certain percentage of these. Conscription and recruiting make no difference in this respect; if the former, the army consists of all able-bodied men of the nation, independent of character, accomplishments, reputation, or bringing up; if the latter, it stands to reason that, generally speaking, such men embrace the trade of soldiering as have failed or proved themselves unworthy in other walks of life. It is impossible to calculate—indeed, to over-estimate—the influence of active campaigning on such men as these. For months and months all the worst passions of their nature have raged unchecked; they have killed, they have mutilated, have been compelled to do so; they have stolen, pillaged, plundered, not by compulsion, but because, with the swiftness of modern campaigning, food supplies are often deficient, and men must eat; they have outraged, and not been called to account, or, if so, have escaped with a reprimand: for commanders must spare their men, must even humour them. Their sense of right and wrong was never keen, and is now quite blunt. Add to this that many men are spiteful by nature. They have a wound which refuses to close; they have lost a limb; they have caught, in exposure and privation, an illness which will last them until the end of their days: they blame the rulers of their country, and avenge themselves on society by violating its laws. Who can venture to thus manufactured even during a single campaign?

The second after-effect of warfare is that left upon the mind of a nation taken as a unit. This obtains particularly in the case of unsuccessful wars. The memory of a defeat, of losses, of territory gone and huge indemnities paid by means of heavy taxes, rankles in the minds. Decades, a century, may pass; but the day of retribution will come, and the grandchildren will avenge, or in any case do their best to avenge the wrongs, real or imaginary, deserved or undeserved, endured by their forefathers in the second or third generation. Their schooling has educated them up to this pitch, and patriotism demands it. I experienced this in Turkey in 1877. An even better case in point is Germany in 1870. What did the German soldiers avenge in France? Not the heartburnings of a weak Emperor trembling for the safety of his throne, or the irresponsible howling of the mob in the capital, but the victorious campaigns, the disastrous invasions, of the First Napoleon, sixty years before! Thus one war engenders another, or maybe many more, as in the case of Russia and Turkey, who have faced each other in the field ten times.

The radical remedy is the total abolition of war, the erasion of the institution, of the very word and idea, in the code of civilised nations, the substitution of international arbitration, a general disarmament, and a universal brotherhood of peoples can be brought about only by educating the rising generations up to the sublime pitch of understanding that "Peace on earth," the heavenly message which heralded the coming of the Founder of Christianity, is not an empty phrase, but the expression of the Divine will.

GOD'S PURPOSE REVEALED.—When I shall enter the invisible world, I do not expect to find things different from what the Word of God represented them to me here. The voice I shall then hear will be the same I now hear upon the earth, and I shall say: "This is indeed what God said to me; and how thankful I am that I did not wait till I had seen in order to believe."—Adolph Monod.

CHRISTIANS AND THE SCHOOLS.

I.

"Ah, Monsieur, you have all here...all except God." This was the comment of the newspaper critic who recently visited a well-known French school where the bold experiment was being tried of a treatment and education practically one and the same for boys and girls. The master's answer was significant. "My pupils," replied he, "never feel the need of Him."

You shrug your shoulders, Christian reader, and say "This is a French picture, not an English one. Things are better this side of the Channel." As a people we are and always shall be deeply religious. Witness the strictness of our public conscience, the spread of our places of worship, the growth of movements like the P.S.A., Temperance reform, societies for the culture of every virtue under the sun; witness the religious teaching in our schools and colleges; all of which is right, beautiful, in its way. Yet I submit the comment of the French reporter contains for us also certain grim truth, for us also of this most Christian country. We are in danger in more than one way of a great educational advance without those elements which the Christian holds most dear—without God.

What does the position of an individual believer amount to in this matter of education and religion, and what cause have we for alarm? Take first the side of education; glance at our elementary schools. We are face to face with the great body of board schools and voluntary ones, the former ever tending to swallow up the latter, and in all cases by their greater resources making life difficult for them. In all these schools the Education Department is continually them from secondary schools; every year fresh subjects and methods are added to the time tables, with greater tax to the child's brain. The Code of 1895, it is true, is moving in the right direction, insomuch as it replaces examination by inspection, and so lessens that straining after results which will tell in the outside world. But still the fact remains that the children of to-day have placed before them at such an early stage of their lives the elements of so many branches of knowledge that there is a danger of mental forcing, and that children may leave school at thirteen or fourteen with a mass of knowledge which their undeveloped brains cannot assimilate.

Turn to secondary education, and we are met by spurs and incentives on every side. The London County Council claims to provide steps from the Board School to the University itself. Not content with teaching those who come to it, it sends out teachers to the scholars. Look at the number of young men and women who now qualify and compete for the highest posts, and compare it with the number one hundred years ago; look at the tone of University life: now it is rather a disgrace than an honour for a man to lounge away three or four years at college in a course of free living.

And here I pause. While we hail all this enormous educational advance, while we are impressed by the grandeur of free education, and see, in spite of danger-signals of over-strain, possibilities open to us of richer, fuller lives than in the days of the three R.'s, which to us as Christians must come first and be all important? We are mindful of Jesus Christ's question, "What shall it profit, if a man gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" We are bound to admit that in education, as in everything else on earth, if the element of religion is wanting we have hopeless failure—viewed, that is, in the white light of eternity. Is our advance in spiritual training, I ask, at all on a par with the advance in secular knowledge at which I have hinted?

HOW IS IT WITH THE RELIGIOUS TRAINING

We rejoice, as I said at first, that in numbers of schools and colleges real religion is taught and practised; we rejoice that in our public schools the boy who says his prayers is no longer a butt of derision to his mates; we rejoice that in hundreds of Board Schools there is daily religious instruction by Christian teachers. And what then? Let us look at the reverse side. During the last few years there has been a large increase in the number of Boards which are under the system of "Bible reading without note or comment"—roughly speaking twice the number that there were five years ago. At these schools generally hymns are sung or prayers repeated, or both; but some follow the Birmingham practice, where there are no religious observances, no religious institution, no prayers or hymns, but the Bible is read without note or comment for a quarter of an hour daily. But even more striking than the growth of this system is that of the large increase of School Boards which make or for religious teaching or observances. There were forty-six of such districts in 1884, now there are ninety-one! Out of the 300 schools in Wales 123 do not have the Bible read; but also in England now we find the practice has spread from three counties to ten, and while five years ago there were only five Boards who countenanced this ousting of religion from the schools, now there are twenty-one.

Does this, I ask, betoken increased fervour for the spiritual interests of our little ones? Do not such figures prove only too sadly that the mass of people care far more for the education of the intellect than they do for the training of the soul, and for the moral culture of their children from the Word of God?

Two points suggest themselves with regard to this religious teaching. First, that in one great district which excludes religious instruction, notably in the capital of the Midlands, facilities are afforded for the giving of religious instruction by voluntary agency to the school children. This seems, on the face of things, to remove this particular district from the indictment made above; and if the system could be worked daily, and in all departments, to some extent it would. As a matter of fact, two half-hours a week only of Bible teaching are allowed, and, considering that this is not carried out fully, and that the instruction is given by outside strangers, who cannot possess the influence over the children which is possible to their regular teachers, the problem is only half solved.

The second point is in connection with the moral lessons which are given in schools where there is no definitely religious instruction. The Royal Commissioners in 1888 called attention to the importance of moral training and discipline in schools, and in 1878 in the circular addressed to the Education Department to H.M. Inspectors are these words, "My lords are anxious that you should lose no suitable opportunity of impressing upon both managers and teachers the great responsibility which rests upon them over and above the intellectual teaching in regard to the moral training of the children."

Now, we are all alive to the importance of moral training, but as Christians we hold that such training to be worth anything must have a religious basis, for how can any teaching enforce moral truths without the slightest reference to their spiritual foundation?

LET ME ILLUSTRATE MY MEANING:—

I have before me as I write the punishment books for the last month from the school of a town district. In one school seventeen are reported for fighting, in another forty-four for indecorous conduct, in another forty-nine for laziness and carelessness, and so the list runs on. I turn to the book of moral lessons in use in these same schools. I find the lessons of purity may be illustrated by the story of Una and the lion, and conquest over difficulties by Jack the Giant Killer. The one character of perfect purity, perfect strength, is not mentioned.

I turn to the lesson against quarreling, and find the truth illustrated by the fable of the cats and the cheese and the monkey as arbitrator. I am instructed to tell the children revenge is the impulse of a little mind, forgiveness the prerogative of a great one—to quote Jean Paul Richter to them; and when I wish to teach the wrong of laziness I may tell them of Mrs. Dombey, who died because she would not make an effort to live.

I have chosen instances which may seem extreme. I grant that the lessons as a rule may be wiser than their illustrations, but what Christian will deny that to tell a child to be honest because it is best for himself and others, to be truthful because if he is not every relation of life is embarrassed, and lying is low, base, and contemptible, and to omit to tell him that there is a God who made him, and to whom and for whom he has to live, is to daub morality with untempered mortar, and to sow the seeds of incalculable mischief?

I. M. M. Kenward.

THE POINTS OF VIEW.

There are always two ways of looking at things—the right way and the wrong. When life is met in the spirit of the great Apostle Paul, as he shows it in 2 Cor. vi. 3-10, the point of view is sure to be the right one. Notice the words: "As having nothing, yet possessing all things."

The same spirit is found four years later, after many trials, in the words of the riper Christian, Phil. iii. 8: "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ."

Compare these with the words of many Christians whom we know during, for instance, cold weather: "I do not know what to do with myself. I sit by the fire, I am muffled in clothes, and yet I can not keep warm. I am afraid to go out—one has to be so careful this weather."

And yet, unless absolute delicacy forbade, a brisk walk, on errands of mercy to really suffering ones, would be a strengthening, heart-giving tonic to body and mind, a veritable cloud-dispeller.

One with a thousand a year grumbles that it is not two. Another with a hundred thanks God it is so much. One convalescent moans, "Ah, I was bad yesterday!" Another says, "Thank God I am so much better to-day!" One says of the rain, "It will make the streets so dirty!" Another thinks, "This was needed to lay the dust, and help the grass grow." Two men gaze skywards. One says, "What black clouds!" The other beholds a rift, and says, "What a heavenly blue!"

"It is good to live!" says one, gratefully. "I dread to die!" cries another, in bitterness. "All this is clear gain," says one. "Alas! that there should be so much loss!" says his partner. One says, "Those wonderful bees, to yield all that honey!" The other, "Ah! how they sting!" "Ah," cries one, "all our good is embittered by evil." "The greatest misfortune is tempered by good," says his neighbour.

Listen to that Christian, Izaak Walton, as he trudges along by the River Lea with his "honest scholar":—

"Let us, as we walk home under the cool shade of this honeysuckle hedge, mention some of the thoughts and joys that have possessed our souls since first we two met. And that our present happiness may appear the greater, and we more thankful for it, I beg you to consider with me how many do at this very time lie under torment of the gout or the toothache, and this we have been free from; and let me tell you that every misery that I miss is a new blessing."

He points to the beauties and delights of nature, and characterises each as a blessing, and rightly concludes by saying that a humble, cheerful man is happy, and possesses himself with a quietness which makes his very dreams pleasing both to God and himself.

There are, in this loud stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of th' everlasting chime;
Who carry music in their heart
Thro' dusky lane and wrangling mart,
Plying their daily task with busier feet,
Because their secret souls a holy strain repeat.

THE OLD TEMPERANCE "CRUSADE" has been revived in several places in America. In Sioux City the women lately visited the saloons, appealed to the publicans to abandon their business, and prayed and sang on the premises. It has been stated that the city has been greatly stirred by this action.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.—Archdeacon Farrar, addressing a meeting at Exeter Hall on Saturday night, referred to the Local Veto Bill, and said legislative remedies were invariably exceedingly slow. He was of opinion that, notwithstanding the number of years of work for the cause, many more would have to pass before a really effective measure dealing with the liquor traffic could be introduced and carried into law.

HUDDERSFIELD.—At the annual conference of the Huddersfield Sunday School Union held last week it was stated that the number of schools in the union was 58 and scholars 16,053, as against 15,742 last year. The number above 15 years of age was 6,819. Scholars who are also church members number 1463. There are nine junior society classes, one Christian band, and 28 schools which had formed Christian Endeavour classes, recording a membership of 1181. The teachers and officers numbered 2011.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 7.—2 COR. V.

Our True Home (1-10).—Not here, in this body, but yonder. The Apostle anticipated a moment when, in the advent of the Lord, the body of his weakness would be clothed upon with the immortal vesture of the soul. The tent exchanged for the building, mortality for life. (5) He needed no outward assurance that this would be the case, since the Spirit of God was ever witnessing of that which was to be. To him there was no interval. Absent from the body, he would be immediately present with his Lord. (9) This should be the aim for us all. There is no loftier ambition than to please Christ well, to give Him no cause of regret, to realise on our side all the expectation of his true love. (10) This is not the judgment of the Great White Throne, but that which will take place when the Lord takes account of his servants at his second coming. Then our use of the talents will determine our rule over the cities.

The Terror of the Lord (11-19).—The terror of grieving Him should be greater than of suffering penalty. Oh for power to persuade men! Oh that as they look into our hearts they may see the transparency and purity of our motive, possessed of no other ambition than to win them for the Christ whose love constrains us! (14) The death of Christ is not only an atonement for our sin, but is the end of self-interest, for all who enter into its inner spirit. Not for themselves, but for Him, they live. The Cross stands between the old past, and the new hopes and ambitions that urge us to give ourselves to the Redeemer for the consummation of those purposes that lie so near his heart.

The Ministry of Reconciliation (20-21).—The Reconciliation on God's side is complete. Many as their trespasses are, God does not reckon them. He is reconciled. For Christ's sake He waits with open arms to receive the sinner. It is for us, as Christ's ambassadors, to urge men to accept God's offer of mercy.

MONDAY APRIL 8.—2 COR. VI.

Workers with Him (1-10).—God sends none forth to entreat men without co-operating with them. When rain falls on a slab of rock, it falls in vain. Be not rock, but rich loam to God's grace. Our great care should be that our life should not be an occasion of stumbling to those that are helped by our words. (4) First, the Apostle enumerates the circumstances in which we have an opportunity of showing what God's grace can enable us to bear. Then he shows us the graces in which we may commend the Gospel. And lastly, by a series of paradoxes, proves that the destruction of the outward only leads to the enhancement of the virtues of the inner and hidden life. Such power is there in the grace of God that it transforms all that is hostile and hurtful into opportunities of clearer light and intenser flame.

The Unequal Yoke (11-18).—Separation from evil is indispensable, whether in the marriage relationship, in business partnership, or in any yoking of men. There may be similarity of interest and aim, but there must be oneness of soul before there can be peace or blessedness. Let us think of ourselves as temples of the living God, and prohibit the introduction of idols thither. Do not consider what you have, but what you receive. Reach out towards the other world and you will be unworldly. Open your heart, to light, and love, and Christ, and you will be insensibly separated from uncleanness, darkness, and Belial.

The Cleansed Soul (1).—Be willing to be cleansed and God will cleanse. Remember that it is not enough to be free from outward defilement, there must be the inner purity of the spirit. Our holiness should be full-orbed. Like a well-grown tree, it should be symmetrical on every side. Who would not labour for such result when such promises invite?

The Love of the Apostle for his Converts (2-16).—Reverting to his first letter, in which he had dealt with such a strong hand with the sin that had disgraced the Church, he pours out his heart in expressions of thankfulness that they had not misunderstood him, but had sorrowed for their sin with a grief that wrought true repentance. (5) It was a great effort to the sensitive heart of the Apostle to take a step that threatened to alienate friends. He lived through those dark days, nourished by the love of Titus, and by the tidings that his rebuke had been taken aright. (10) The sorrow of the world is mortification, the sense of hurtness and injury, which is the death of noble resolve. Godly sorrow accepts rebuke meekly, puts away wrong, and with chastened step begins to climb upward through the darkness toward the light. (14) Titus was like-minded with the Apostle, who had a wonderful power in affecting men with his own strong sympathies. As man Paul needed comfort: as apostle he could joy over the repentant church, and could cherish an abundant inward affection, characteristerics which any man might emulate.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10.—2 COR. VIII.

The Riches of Christian Liberality (1-15).—It originates in the grace of God; it is fraught with abundant joy; it is not stanched by poverty, but is consistent with deep poverty; it is ungrudging in its desire to bless others; it begins with the true consecration of the giver's soul to God. (7) When a nature abounds in any one direction, it is almost sure to overflow in others also. All the love and liberality of Christian hearts is fed from one eternal fountain, the grace of Christ, and their wealth is through his poverty. God works in us to do as well as to will. Let us not only will, but do. But after all the main thing with God is not the doing, but the being willing. The doing is always accepted according to our ability. (14) Love is the true law of supply and demand.

The Messengers of the Churches (16-24).—Those that deal with money matters should be extremely careful to associate with them men who are beyond suspicion. Indeed it is well for those that are engaged in spiritual work to handle money as little as possible. Titus and two others, whose names are not given, the one to represent the Apostle as his fellow-worker, the others as representing the churches. How wonderful that in performing this service about money matters, they are expressly said to be promoting the glory of the Lord! It is an encouragement to know that serving tables is not without opportunities of revealing the hidden beauty of our Master.

THURSDAY, APRIL 11.—2 COR. IX.

Incentives to Ministering to the Saints (1-5).—Very delicately the Apostle forbears urging this ministry, but he shows clearly that he expects it. Perhaps there is nothing that so stirs the heart as the sense that something is expected which it can give. Ask yourself repeatedly whether you are realising Christ's expectations of you.

The Harvest of Benevolence (6).—On the dull ploughed land we sow the harvest that is to be. For many the harvest will be sparse enough because their sowing is such. (8) We are not really poorer by what we give away, and God will never let us want. He will always make his grace abound toward us. As we give we shall get; as we scatter we shall increase. We shall always have sufficiency for all the good works to which He leads us. Mark the the prodigality with which the apostle scatters his alls and everys. (10-15) When you go forth to sow ask God to supply your seed; when after sowing you are hungry, ask God to supply you with bread; when you are discouraged at the results, ask God to increase the fruit. We sow the seed, which represents toil and self-sacrifice, and lo! it comes up in a crop of thanksgivings to God, and of love to those who have given. But who can ever tell the measure of thanks and love which are due to God for having given us the gift which includes all gifts! Have we taken it? Do we know what it involves? With Him "all things."

FRIDAY, APRIL 12.—2 COR. X.

The Authority of the Meek Apostle (1-11).—We are naturally deficient in meekness and gentleness, but there is enough of each in Christ for us. Let us appropriate his fulness for our need. Ours the lowliness of those who are conscious that in themselves they are nothing, but that Christ, the mighty one, is with them and within. (3) There is a marvellous difference between being in the flesh, as to our body, and warring or walking according to the methods of the flesh or self-principle. (5) The figure is borrowed from the storming of a fort. In the Gospel armoury there are weapons which cannot be resisted by the reasonings and will of man; but we do not avail ourselves of them as we might, in our work for God in the world. Let us ask that every stronghold of evil, every imagination and proud thought in our own hearts, may be subdued before the Gospel of our Lord, and that He may be supreme. (9) There is a wonderful power in the weakest of men who are dominated by a single purpose, and filled with the sense of the presence and power of God. Weak and contemptible in themselves, they are channels through which God pours Himself forth in blessing to the world. (15) Paul was always pressing outwards to that which lay beyond. There were vast regions which he longed to count as provinces for his Lord. (18) But the one aim of us all should be the commendation of Christ. This makes us wholly oblivious to all other voices. If He is pleased, we are satisfied, though all else condemn. If He condemn, we are not at ease though the world ring with commendation.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13.—2 COR. XI.

A Godly Jealousy (1-5).—The Apostle was so fearful that his converts should be led aside from the simplicity of the Gospel. It is so easy to lose the first bloom of purity. Another Jesus, a different Spirit, a different Gospel are as much our temptation now as ever they were. The differences may hardly be apparent at first, but they grow every hour.

Self-Vindication (6-15).—The appeal for his authority struck very deep into the Apostle's heart. He acknowledged that he had not taken the advantages which were within the right of an apostle, but he denied that this constituted any withdrawal of his claim to be considered among the chief. He had acted on this wise that he might not be burdensome to his converts. For himself it would have been equally agreeable to take the lowest place, but for the sake of the great commission entrusted to him, he could not allow his foes to dispossess him of his claim to be counted an apostle.

The Scars of the Good Soldier (16-33).—As against the false apostles, he asserted that he had all their qualifications, and more also. This enumeration of sufferings covers the Apostle's life before his journey to Rome, with its shipwreck, and refers to many incidents of which we know nothing. What a catalogue! What hardships! And yet his spirit rose superior to them all in triumph. What were they when compared with his Master's smile! Listen to that song of exultation which bursts from his lips, "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is blessed for evermore." The outward man was worn and battered, but the inward was buoyant, strong, and victorious.

COUNTRY TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

Dear Sir,—For the information of your readers, many of whom are justly concerned about the spiritual destitution of a large number of our country towns and villages, may I mention what has been accomplished recently in two cases which seemed to present peculiar difficulties? The one is a town, and the other a rural district consisting of several villages, and these two may, I think, be regarded as fairly typical of many places.

The town referred to has a population of several thousands, and the churches are very ritualistic. There has been a town mission for some years, but recently it was found impossible to sustain it, and the local committee dissolved. The missionary, who had done excellent work there, appealed to the Country Towns Mission, and the secretary made several visits personally, canvassing the neighbourhood. He discovered that very many were dissatisfied with the condition of things in the churches, and they were very glad to help when the work of a town missionary was explained to them. With the help of a small grant from the society the mission has been thoroughly re-established.

In the other case, to which the attention of the Society was called about a year ago, the prospect of securing the needful funds for the maintenance of a missionary seemed almost hopeless. There is scarcely anyone in the neighbourhood in a position to help financially. On the invitation of a very earnest Christian who has laboured in one of the villages for a long time, several visits were made from the society for the purpose of consultation and prayer. The urgent spiritual need of the district was put before several of God's people, and the result is cause for great thankfulness. After a year's effort enough money was promised to justify the appointment of a missionary. Already there is evidence that God is owning the work of visiting from house to house, and the setting forth of the simple Gospel.

Doubtless many of your readers know of districts similarly circumstanced, and the Society will be glad to enter communication with such, in the hope of being able to advise and help.—Yours faithfully,

G. H. Mawen, Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

APRIL 14.

EASTER LESSON.—1 Cor. xv. 3-19.
GOLDEN TEXT, verse 20.

CONCERNING the resurrection of Christ, these verses suggest four things: (1) It is an essential part of the Gospel of our Salvation (3,4). The Gospel proclamation contains three facts—the death and burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ. That is no Gospel at all from which the third of these three facts is omitted. The three were included in Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii.) The theme of the apostles' preaching was Christ and the Resurrection (Acts iv. 2, 33; xvii. 18). It was the fact of the resurrection which provoked the bitterest hostility of the people (Acts xvii. 32; xxiii. 6). To draw up what professes to be an Evangelical creed which makes no mention of this, only proves how far we have wandered from Paul's method of viewing the Gospel.

The death was because of "our sins." The Old Testament type of the sin offering explains what that means. (Compare Isa. liii. 5, 6, with Jno. i. 29, and Rom. viii. 3). The resurrection was the evidence of God's perfect satisfaction with the work of his Son. On the cross the debt was being paid; in the empty sepulchre God gives his receipt (see Rom. iv. 25). Both the death and the resurrection were "according to the Scriptures" (Psa. xxii.; Zech. xiii. 7; Psa. ii. 7; xvi. 10; Luke xxiv. 26, 46). These are the facts which faith accepts and appropriates, so that we become identified with Christ in his death and resurrection (Rom. vi. 3, 4, 10, 11).

(2) It is established by sufficient evidence (5-7).—Two facts are admitted—first, that Jesus died, and next, that the sepulchre in which He was buried was found empty on the third day. The only explanation of these facts is that He was raised from the dead, as He promised. The witnesses who saw Him after his resurrection are in every respect reliable. Their number; their previous intimacy with Him; the fact that they saw Him, not each one separately, but in a company of five hundred at once; their bold and consistent witness to the resurrection when they had nothing to gain by it; and the power that accompanied their witness—these are some of the proofs which place this fact beyond question.

(3) Paul is himself a powerful witness to its truth (8-11).—At first these verses seem like a digression; but they are, in fact, an important contribution to the argument. In his own person he was the subject of a change which nothing can explain but the resurrection of Christ. What had he been? "A persecutor of the Church of God." (9) The sin of it has long been forgiven; but Paul's frequent references to it prove that even the forgiven sin of our unconverted days leaves its mark upon our future life. Paul never forgave himself. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." But he became the most zealous and laborious witness to the fact he had formerly denied (10). There is no satisfactory explanation of the change except that which he gives (8). He was neither an insincere man nor a mere visionary. The sight of the Lord granted to him near Damascus did not make him proud. On the contrary, it humbled him, and was the beginning of such intimacy with Jesus that the likeness of Jesus began to appear in him.

4. The awful alternative if the resurrection is not true (12-19). In the church at Corinth there were some who denied it (12). Possibly these were converts whose previous philosophical training indisposed them to believe in the resurrection of the body. Or it may be that like Hymenæus and Philetus, they believed that the resurrection was spiritual, and therefore already passed (2 Tim. ii. 17, 18). The consequences of such a denial were, first, a denial of Christ's resurrection (13, 16). For He had died and been buried; and the statement that the dead rise not must include Him. Then, there is no Gospel (14). Who would care to preach or to believe in a dead Saviour? Is He a Saviour if He be dead? Next, the testimony of the apostles goes (14). For this was the one statement on which all their work was based. If it is not true they are not merely mistaken, but "false witnesses." They were declaring as true what they knew to be false. Yet for a falsehood they were willing to suffer torture and death! And by the means of a falsehood they were led to preach and practise the greatest purity and honesty of life! More than this, there is no pardon for the living (17), and no hope for the dead (18) if Christ is not risen. If Christ went no farther than to death, prophecy is unfulfilled, the word of Christ Himself is broken, there is no proof that his atonement is accepted, and the believer loses both this world and the next (19). But none of these consequences need be feared; for the fact of Christ's resurrection is beyond dispute. Therefore, our present pardon, our future life, and our reunion with those who have fallen asleep, are sure.

For the Young.

A DOUBLE VICTORY.

A LONG, white, sunny, dusty road; a little boy dragging his weary steps. He is returning from school; his satchel and atlas are so heavy! Every now and then he looks round, thinking: "Perhaps a carriage will overtake me." Alas they all drove the wrong way.

Charlie was not strong: his papa called him "the conductor" because he never missed catching any illness or epidemic that might be about. He was his mother's great care. But when she was tempted to think he had more than his share of suffering; a small voice answered in her inmost heart: "Does not God know better than we do how to divide shares? I have besought Him to make my Charlie his servant; He is the best Judge as to the means of accomplishing it, even if it must be pain." Then the mother found a tender smile for her darling, as he tossed feverishly in his little bed.

But on this summer day he was better; he had returned to school with great pleasure, and he was trying hard to make up for lost time. If only the road had been less long, or shaded with trees. "But here is a carriage; no, a cart," calls out Charlie joyfully. Taking off his hat, he advanced politely towards the driver. He is almost always successful on those occasions; no one hardly could resist his pale winning little face, his trusting look. The coachman makes a sign of assent, and Charlie climbs quickly at the back of the cart, where he finds a corner behind two high barrels, for on the only seat, by the side of the driver, there is a boy of his age in elegant light clothes, who seems absorbed in a beautiful picture-book. How glad is Charlie to put down his atlas and to rest a bit.

But suddenly the other boy perceives him. He frowns, and, taking the whip from the servant's hands, he strikes across the barrels, and at last a lash reaches Charlie's face. "Down with you, at once!" cries he. "This is papa's cart, and no place for such as you." Poor Charlie gets down as fast as he can, but his bag and atlas come in his way, and he tumbles on a sharp stone, cutting his knee badly. A peal of laughter from the cart, which dashes off, soon disappearing in a cloud of dust, and Charlie is left alone on the road, his leg bleeding. "Ah, the wicked boy! I'll pay it him." Big hot tears run on his little dark blue jacket. He sobs more and more as he gets along slowly, and with some difficulty.

At last his mother appears at the turn of the road, and soon perceiving that something is amiss, she begins to run. Though she was a very busy mother, and often overtired, she always found time to come and meet her boy on his return from school. To-day how sorry she is to find him in such a sad plight, and what pain she takes to relieve him. But when she comes to him that same evening to tuck him up in his bed, she looks more serious than is her wont. "What is the matter, mamma?" says Charlie. He does not like that look. "My little man," she replies, "do you think we may say 'Our Father' to-day?" "But we say it every evening, why not this time?" cries he, quite surprised. "Charlie," asks mamma, "did I not hear you vow that you would never, never forgive the boy who threw you down? How could you pray to God to forgive your debts if you do not add: 'As we forgive our debtors'?"

Charlie's arms are already around his mother's neck, he bursts into tears, different ones from those of the afternoon. "Oh, mamma, I had not thought of that! I could not do without God's pardon. If you please, dear mamma, let us pray! Will you not? Yes, he was very naughty that boy, but there are so many things for which I must be forgiven, too, and then I am no more angry, not at all, with the boy, I can assure you." Kneeling down in his little night-gown, he joins his hands to say with all his heart our Saviour's prayer.

Complete change of weather when Charles awakes the next morning; the rain beats against the window, and he looks at the small water-ribbons which run so fast along the panes. He thinks of his radishes which grow in his little garden, and are in sad need of water. He has sown them himself, intending them as a present to his mother on her birthday. Oh the good rain! At this moment mamma looks up. "Good morning, little manny," says she gently, so as not to wake the younger children. "Have you slept well?" "Yes, thank you, mamma; but my leg is still painful." She jumps out of bed, and, sitting by Charlie's side, she prays to God to preserve him to-day from all accidents and temptations. It is always such a comfort to the little boy, that morning prayer with his mother, such a safe entrance into his day.

An hour later everyone is up; breakfast is soon over; it is time to start. Papa is rather anxious, seeing how stiff his son's leg is in its long bandage. "But how will you be able to walk, my boy?" "I hardly know, papa," answered Charlie, gathering up his whole courage. "I believe I can manage to get to school all the same." "No, no, you cannot; I am going to put you in the 'bus; it's just due." "Jane," calls the father to the maid, "stop the "omnibus." "So you will keep dry as well," adds he, turning to Charlie.

Father and mother lift their darling, and place him comfortably on the red-cushioned seat in the middle of the vehicle. He cheerily lifts up his hat at parting; a drive in the omnibus is not a frequent amusement. A few turns of the wheels and all disappeared—parents, little brother, and sister, the white cottage with the verandah and small garden in front. Then only Charlie takes a look at his travelling companions, and gives a great start: Who sits there right in front of him? Why, the naughty boy of yesterday, in dark clothes this time, but very fine ones too. He is busy wiping the mud off them, for the omnibus is open at the front, and the big wheel gives great splashes. Now the drive is down hill, the damage seems to increase, the smart boy looks quite vexed, his handkerchief with which he tries to wipe his clothes is covered with mud. Charles is rather pale, he looks at his cloak, old and worn, but very ample, then at his enemy, who apparently does not notice him. A couple of seconds only, then he strides over the seat, sits himself next to the boy, and covers his legs with the cloak. "It is large enough for us both," he says. The boy cannot help now recognising Charlie. "Leave me alone," he was just about to say, but his eyes fell on the poor bandaged knee; he blushed to the roots of his hair. Little by little the expression of his face is entirely altered; he is conquered! As they get out of the 'bus, having still a steep street to descend before reaching the school, the boy says: "Lean on my arm, do." He carries the bag and the atlas, and thus they reach the door. Before entering the boy seizes Charlie's hand, and holding it tight, he says, very quickly, "I shall never any more hurt you. Let us be friends! Oh, will you?" "Yes, with all my heart," answered Charlie, and his eyes beam over his happiness and gratitude for a double victory.

THE CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.

Anniversary meetings, Thursday, April 4, Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., at 3; W. F. A. Archibald, Esq., at 6.30 in Exeter Hall, Strand. Special prayer meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 185, Aldersgate-street, Thursday, April 18.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending April 13, 1895.—Sun., April 7, Luke xxii. 24-38; Mon., 8, xxii. 39-53; Tues. 9, xxii. 54-71; Wed., 10, xxiii. 1-12; Thurs., 11, xxiii. 13-26; Fri., 12, xxiii. 27-43; Sat., 13, xxiii. 44-56.

LEE.—The Lecture Hall in Belmont Park, which has been taken over by Mr. J. Woodman, was re-opened a few days ago, as the People's Mission Hall. The work has been organised in the interest of the poor, in the visitation of whom the missionary, Mr. J. Owen, is ready to devote the whole of his time. It is proposed to hold open-air meetings in Dacre-street, to organise a "People's monthly party," a Band of Hope, and provident clubs.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE ASSISTANCE OF DISCHARGED PRISONERS.—The report of this Society (32, Charing Cross, W.C.) states that during the past year 1016 discharged prisoners have been assisted. All were supplied with a substantial breakfast, and many with tools and clothes. Selected cases of wives and families of prisoners have been assisted. The agents of the Society have, though with great difficulty, been fairly successful in obtaining employment for all men willing to work. Although the work of the Society has been for some years increasing it is a matter for regret that the annual subscriptions show a slight decrease. The Society co-operates with many of the provincial Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies, and has special agents of its own in some important towns.

INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR CRIPPLED BOYS.

Visiting, some months ago, the Home for Crippled Girls in Marylebone-road, I was deeply interested in the way these sufferers are trained to make themselves useful. While, however, rejoicing in the loving help rendered to the girls, one reflected that many of their brothers are similarly afflicted, and incapable of earning a livelihood in the ordinary way. What is being done for such helpless boys?

The answer is found in the National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys in Kensington—a fine Home, which really grew out of that for the girls. Earnest men, finding the need among boys very pressing, began in a small way, in 1865. Ere long, as the work grew, more room was needed; and in faith the committee secured a magnificent freehold site, with spacious grounds, land being then comparatively cheap. On this they erected a Home, which has been subsequently considerably added to. Here crippled boys," between the ages of thirteen and eighteen, are received, kept for three years, and taught thoroughly certain trades—so thoroughly that employers are eager to secure these well-skilled craftsmen. Once they have mastered a useful trade, their infirmities seem to be no hindrance. But, on the other hand, few employers are willing to take, as an apprentice, a crippled boy, fearing the trouble he may be to them.

Four good trades are taught, by proficient masters—harness making and repairing; relief-stamping and copper-plate printing; tailoring; and, for the stronger lads, carpentering. I was greatly interested in visiting the workshops and finding the inmates busy as bees. One speedily forgot their maimed condition in admiring their activity and deftness.

In the harness room, work of the finest class is done. Some of it, in fact, may be seen in the drive in Hyde Park. A lad who had that day gone out to a situation in a first-class firm had left finished a beautiful set of harness which did him and his teacher the highest credit. But as showing how they are taught to turn everything to account, I examined with interest a box, the same lad had made out of rough egg boxes and meat tins. Covered with leather, lined and varnished, it looked splendidly, and spoke well for his ingenuity.

Passing into the relief-stamping and copper-plate room, I found some twenty-seven boys deftly performing—although minus fingers and legs, or suffering from spinal complaints—various delicate processes; and putting crests, illuminations, and addresses on note paper, lithographing cards, silvered programmes, wedding invites, and a variety of tasteful work. These lads find employment readily, and oft develop into independent tradesmen.

So in the tailoring—which craft suits specially such as have lost their legs—the boys turn out high-class work, besides, of course, making and mending for the whole institution.

In the carpenters' shop quite a variety of rough and fine work, from mouldings, frames, wood-engraving blocks, cabinet and fret work, to flower-boxes, tables, and steps, was being turned out admirably.

It must be remembered that all boys admitted are taught one or other of these trades, according to their choice. It is easy to pen these facts, but words fail to convey the way one feels touched by the seeming whose deft skill contrasts so strangely with their bodily condition. As one of the masters shrewdly remarked, "This Home has saved the public, in poor rates alone, an untold sum. Left untaught, these lads, growing up, would most of them have to go into the Union. Now, instead of becoming paupers, they increase the nation's wealth." An appendix to the last report gives a number of very telling facts as to the subsequent career of former inmates. Amongst such it is to be expected that some are found dull and slow to learn, but the majority are sharp and quick. Last year these young workers earned towards the support of the Home £266 13s. 5d. clear profit.

While I have dwelt largely on the industrial and practical aspect, it must not be forgotten that this is a Christian Home. Besides constant Christian influence, daily Bible-readings and prayers, Sunday classes are held by ladies and gentlemen who have taken up this service. On Sunday morning all who can attend Hon. and Rev. Carr Glyn's church, St. Mary Abbotts, while in the evening a service is held in the Home.

Great pains are also taken to impart the rudiments of education. Many are wholly unlettered when they enter, but the last report made by Mr. Hassell, the Educational Inspector, speaks highly of the progress made, and gives a very fair average of "passes." In singing some naturally excel. Altogether Mr. Cooper and his assistants are to be congratulated on the school work. The teaching is given in the evenings, the boys being occupied during the day in the workshops.

Nor are they at all dull. There is an extensive playground, a good cricket club, who play matches against "able-bodied boys," and win them too. This, to some, may seem trifling; to such afflicted ones it means much to have

SOME INTEREST AND ENJOYMENT IN LIFE.

The inmates number, at present, 88; there is room for 100, and plenty of applicants, but one of the dormitories awaits furnishing. Who will undertake this good work? There is no voting, suitable candidates being admitted by rotation, as there is room. It is a National Home, cases being accepted from all parts of the land. Care is taken to build up their constitutions by good food and outdoor exercise. Dr. Pearson, one of the honorary surgeons, visits the Home daily—not a few needing careful oversight.

To many such an institution will peculiarly commend itself. Yet it is now £1,250 in debt, and thus greatly in need of liberal help. The resident secretary, Mr. F. J. Bovis, National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, Wright's-lane, Kensington, W., is ever ready to welcome visitors, and no one visiting the Home can fail to be deeply touched and warmly interested.

COLPORTAGE IN FRANCE.

During the summer of 1893-94, Mr. Dévenoge, cyclist colporteur and evangelist in the Rouen Wesleyan Mission, sold forty-seven Bibles and 5155 New Testaments in 371 places in the northern departments of France. Each of these places has been visited from street to street and from door to door. In the rural districts the populations are divided, generally speaking, the minority being dévote and very superstitious, the majority remain indifferent and sceptical.

Among the incidents that have marked these tours we may mention the following:—At Poses, an aged woman is offered a New Testament, but declares herself unable to buy it for 5d.; she pleads earnestly to have it given her for 2d., and at last the colporteur gave it to her for 3d. She joyously exclaimed: "I will read a long portion to-night. How glad I am to have the life of our Lord. I had been waiting for it ever so long." Many Roman Catholics have bought the New Testament in order to compare it with their Prayer or Mass Book. At Amiens, the colporteur took up his position near a merry-go-round, and preached for two hours in the open air. In a village near Nogent-le-Roi (Eure-et-Loire) he was mistaken for a dangerous Anarchist, and not set free until his books had been carefully scrutinised by the gendarmes.

It is always a pleasant sight to see a thorough workman at his work, especially one who is doing it all for love and nothing for reward, with his heart as well as his head in it. The man who sells a couple of thousand New Testaments in a summer among a Roman Catholic population is evangelising to some purpose. Mr. Dévenoge is now going further afield, with the intention of systematically visiting the northern departments. With the consent of his Mission, he and his young son spend two weeks per month in the new campaign. They go by rail with their "wheels" early on the Monday morning to some convenient starting place, and work round the towns and villages day by day, till Saturday finds them within an easy run home to Elbeuf.

Georges Godel, Pastor.

Wesleyan Methodist Church, Rouen (France).

VALE MISSION HALL, GUERNSEY.—Willing helpers from various churches have aided the superintendent of this Mission, Mr. Vaudin, to preach to the numbers who flock to the hall. Special evangelistic services have been conducted during the past year, with great blessing, by Mr. James Eyres, from Liverpool; Misses Stone and Watts, from London; and Mr. and Mrs. Vaudin.

THE GOSPEL IN CEYLON.

You will be glad to hear that the past year has been one of encouragement, and that there has been much blessing on many departments of the work here. In this province over two hundred persons have joined the different mission churches during the past twelve months, on profession of faith in Christ, and a large number of others are on the list of inquirers, and are receiving regular instruction in Christian truth. There are in the mission schools of the Province 14,868 children, of whom 6405 are in Mission Sunday-schools.

The work of the Jaffna College continues steadily to advance. There are now 160 students in the college proper and 391 in the high school, which is a preparatory school to the college. In this college all the professors and teachers are Christians; the Scripture lessons are taught daily in every class; the students are all required to be boarders within the institution, and are thus separated from heathen influences, and brought under strong Christian influences. Many of the former students are now doing good Christian work, not only in Ceylon, but in India, Burmah, the Straits Settlement, and elsewhere.

The medical work is under the care of the Rev. T. B. Scott, M.D., and Mrs. Scott, M.D. Since opening their work they have treated 2510 patients in the dispensary, sixty-four in the hospital, and fifty private patients. Their work is much appreciated by the people, as may be seen from the fact that they have received, from fees, sales of medicine, etc., the sum of R1800. This is applied to meet the running expenses of the work.

By means of this medical work, not only the patients who attend the dispensary or are treated in the hospital, but many of their friends and relatives who accompany or visit them, hear the Gospel message.

In addition to the work in the dispensary, the doctors are often called to treat private patients in their homes. Dr. and Mrs. Dr. Scott have acquired a good working knowledge of the Tamil language, and they are not only good doctors, having much success in their cases, but they are good missionaries, and take an active part in helping on the educational and evangelistic work in their district.

The work of Dr. and Mrs. Dr. Scott has grown to such an extent that, on the arrival of Miss Dr. Grieve in the Island, the last of November, they were glad to welcome her, and to invite her to help them in their work. She is now with them at Manippay, devoting a portion of her time to the study of the Tamil language, and the remainder of her time to medical work.

The amount secured in cash toward the erection of the Lady Havelock Woman's Hospital in Colombo, amounts to R44,000. The foundation-stone has been laid by Sir Arthur Havelock, and it is expected that the work of erection will be completed within the year.

After very careful consideration and consultation with the missionaries and leading native gentlemen of the Province, a site has been chosen for the Women's Medical Mission at Erunvil, as that will be central for the 300,000 people of the Province. The site purchased comprises ten acres. The work of construction is going on rapidly, and, according to the legal contract, all the buildings are to be completed and ready for occupancy by December 15 this year. The buildings to be erected will bear the name of the McLeod Hospital and the Maud and Alice Home.

In this district, which is ten miles square, we are the only resident missionaries, two white faces among 40,000 brown ones. There are in this district 1,550 children studying in mission village day schools.

We wish to express our very grateful thanks to all the kind friends in Great Britain and America who so generously responded to our appeals, and contributed towards permanent scholarships in the Jaffna College and in the Uduvil Girls' Boarding School, and towards the establishing of the two medical missions. We are well and strong and very happy in our work among the people, whom we love, and we look forward with hope to the work of this new year, the one wish of our hearts being "to do the will of God whatever that may be."

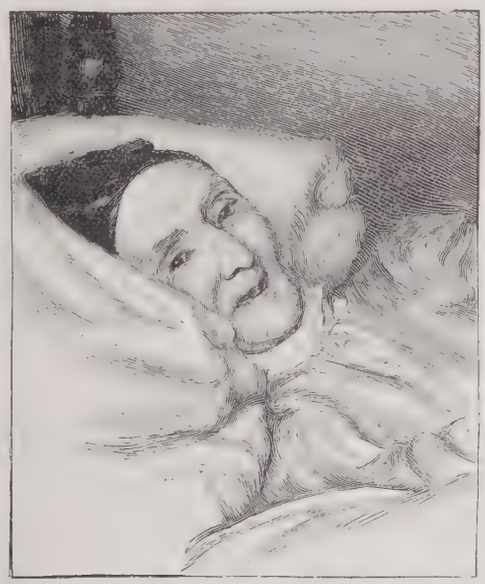
The late James Talbert.

"A PRISONER OF JESUS CHRIST."

Not this week a busy worker, serving actively in the crowded haunts of men, but "a prisoner of Jesus Christ," whose prison became a palace through the grace given him, is before us. Thousands who have visited the humble cottage in Dundee to commune with this rejoicing saint, who lay sixty-four years glorifying God in the fire of bodily suffering, must cherish sweet memories of his beaming face and burning words as he testified to the sustaining grace of God. One such visitor said, on hearing we were about to give a little sketch of this tried saint, "He was a man in heaven. The moments I have at times spent in his room have seemed to me the nearest approach to heaven I have ever known in this life."

James Talbert was born in 1809 in Lochee, a suburb of Dundee. When about twenty-one years of age he fell from a tree, and was so severely injured that ever afterwards he was bedridden. As he lay year after year in a little grey solitary cottage in a field on the south side of Camperdown-road, Lochee, and afterwards in a cottage in Dundee, various Christian friends visited him from time to time. At first they went to comfort and cheer, but were so strengthened and gladdened by the calm presence and simple testimony of the invalid that soon they found themselves receiving rather than giving.



This being so, his early visitors naturally told others of the grace bestowed upon this suffering one; and these, in turn, found opportunity to see him. In this way the little remote cottage became, shall we say, a recognised place of pilgrimage for children of God passing through Dundee; and many whose name and work are known in all lands, whose praise is in all the churches, have found delight in spending a little while by the bedside of James Talbert. Some episodes in these visits, gleaned from a memoir issued by Mr. J. C. Smith,* will deeply interest our readers, many of whom may themselves have been privileged to visit this happy sufferer, now gone in to see the King.

"Many are morose and irritable when ill, but James was pleasant and cheerful, and wonderfully contented with his lot—for about sixty-four years bedridden. When you called to see him, in a few moments he would be off to some passages of Scripture, giving beautiful renderings as to their meaning and practical application, and would generally ask you to sing or read and pray with him, and thus a happy time would be spent."

His simple, childlike, holy dealing with God in daily home life was very beautiful and instructive. "Oh!" he would say, "for more gratitude. I would like to have gratitude to Him who died for me. O blessed Jesus, let me love Thee more and more." He had learned from his well-worn Bible the gracious, holy, loving character of his Saviour, and so he could trust Him day by day. "For some years I have had much thanksgiving and gratitude. Think of men in garrets, but a godly man in a garret is a king disguised. When I get to glory I think I will tell the very angels of the goodness of the Lord to me."

He was very intelligent, and able to converse with all classes of visitors, and from his remarkable knowledge of Scripture and the doctrine of grace, he was a master in Israel, and able to combat error or apply the comforts of the Gospel to the troubled or tempted. The Lord had given him much spiritual insight. How such an invalid could read at all seemed a marvel. The care of loving friends provided him years ago with a large-type Bible on a well-devised reading-rest, so that he could turn it over at will and read easily as he lay on his back.

Besides the constant coming and going of Christian visitors and many others, who came blind and left seeing—having been born to God in the little room—James had for many years in his chamber a weekly "Truth meeting." This was usually led by friends, but generally James himself would speak a few glowing words. Eternity alone will reveal the blessings received at the bedside, when the weak were strengthened and the strong energised. Ministers got new light from the Word, as the aged suffering saint gave his experiences of the good and gracious hand of the Lord upon him, missionaries were roused to more active work and a fuller consecration, the young were instructed, and the aged were built up in the faith. Calm and rejoicing as these usually found James, it was well understood that he had times—especially in the night watches—of great distress and pain, though he often used to say that in spite of all this anguish "God giveth songs in the night."

Among his earlier visitors were Dr. Andrew Inglis, who delighted to sit by him, and who often brought with him the revered Dr. Bonar. "It must," says the writer of the memoir, "have been a grand sight to see and hear Andrew Bonar, Andrew Inglis, and James Talbert over the Word of God in that little room. It might well have been said: 'This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.' And, behold, all three are now in glory."

Amongst others who have sat by his bedside are Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. and Mrs. George Müller, Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey (who sang again and again to him, as did also the Jubilee singers when in Dundee), Lord Kinnaird and Lord Overtoun (together and separately), Sir S. A. Blackwood, and many other leading ministers and servants of Christ. Those mentioned are but illustrative of a host of God's children from many lands and of many names, who found spiritual help and sweet fellowship in this sick room.

"The furnace seemed to be heated seven times during his last days on earth; and his devoted nurse said, that for three years before the end, night and day, his pain and sufferings were great in the extreme. But Divine supports were in proportion great." A year or two before his death, a kind friend had, at his own expense, a telephone fitted up from the pulpit of Ogilvie Free Church to James' bed, so that he could hear the sermons. He went home on November 23, 1893, and the last night before his departure a few friends were in his room reading the Word to him, bearing joyous testimony, and singing at his request Psalms xxiii. and cxxi. in the Scottish version he loved so well.

In closing this brief sketch we would warmly commend the Memoir from which we have made extracts, containing, as it does, many of James' choice sayings and Bible expositions. Rev. John Macpherson says in a pointed introductory note:—

James Talbert was indeed "a prisoner of Jesus Christ." For sixty long years or more he wore the chain of an afflicting providence. But his prison was a palace. His faith, patience, serenity, and cheerfulness illuminated the chamber of his suffering. Thousands saw him and wondered, and praised God for the grace given him. His lifelong seclusion rendered his testimony singular and striking . . . His peaceful countenance, his quaint homely sayings, his saintly converse, will be a hallowed memory to all who knew him.

COMMUNICANTS IN CHINA.

Dear Sir,—Writing to me at the close of January from Hankow, Dr. Griffith John makes a statement in regard to church membership in China, which I think you will agree with me in viewing as most gratifying. Dr. John is known to be much too wise a man to advance figures upon a question of this kind without having at least some substantial reason for doing so. He says:—

"The progress in church membership during the past year has been most satisfactory. Here at our L.M.S. station in Hankow we baptized in all 165 persons, 111 being adults and fifty-four non-adults. The progress in the provinces of Fukien and Shantung has also been very great. There are at present in China about 55,000 communicants, which shows a remarkable increase since 1889. There can be no doubt as to the marked increase of these five years. If the next five be as prosperous, our China communicants will, at the close of 1900, number not far short of 90,000. We are on the eve of great changes, and great changes for the better also."

Such a statement is highly encouraging, and ought to do much to strengthen the faith and stimulate the enthusiasm of the friends of our missionary societies. The present sad war has unfortunately interfered with the work and the workers in the north; there is, therefore, the more cause for thankfulness that God has so graciously blessed the testimony of his people who are labouring in other districts of the empire.

Yours very truly,

J. Wallace Wilson.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—In connection with the work of Mr. William Forbes among theatrical employés, a tea meeting was held on Friday, March 29, for the women engaged at Olympia, at the Iron Room, Edith-road, Kensington. About 100 sat down to tea, after which impressive addresses were given by Miss Kennedy and Rev. W. Foy. Many seemed impressed. Help is needed to carry on this work. Mr. Forbes's address is 71, Tollington-road, N.

CHRIST CHURCH P.S.A.—Since we started, a little more than two years ago (says Rev. F. B. Meyer in The Christian Treasury), we have received fifty brothers into church fellowship, we can count about fifteen who have become Sunday-school teachers, and twelve who have gone into mission work. A large number go out on Sunday evenings to testify for the Gospel, which has done so much for them, in the open air, or in mission-rooms and Gospel meetings. There is a vigorous prayer-meeting on Thursday evening, an adult school on Sunday morning, a Christian choir of about thirty, and many other developments of holy and earnest activity. It is gratifying also to learn that during the second year of our existence the total amount contributed in various directions, for benefit societies, the support of our Working Men's Institute, and for other objects, amounted to £690.

The Evangelist.

AN HONEST INQUIRER.

By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

By the word inquirers I mean those who are asking that question which is as old as that night-scene in the prison at Philippi, "What must I do to be saved?" I trust that your desire reaches further down than to be saved from Hell; for then your motive may be simply one of fear—a motive not far different from that of the man who should be deterred from stealing by his dread of the penitentiary. It is not the punishment of sin, but the power of sin that you should seek to be saved from; you should be striving to save your life in this world as well as to secure eternal life in the next world. To save a watch is to put it and keep it in good running order; to save the garden is to eradicate the weeds, and to make it capable of producing flowers, vegetables, and fruit. The deliverance you need is from the dominion of sin in this life, and then you are delivered from the just damnation of sin in the world to come. The case is very simple,

SALVATION.

Thanks be to the Giver of all truth, the remedy is very simple also. Salvation is not a complex conundrum requiring a keen intellect to solve. It is within the comprehension of an intelligent child; and really there is nothing so peculiar or so subtle about your case that it cannot be dealt with in precisely the same way as that of every other sinner, high or low, rich or poor, on this wide globe. Pride or self-conceit may suggest that you have peculiar difficulties or peculiar temptations. Nothing of the sort; there is only one deadly disease, and that is sin in its thousand forms and manifestations. The seat of that disease is your own heart. How it came there is not the question; that it is there is enough. How are you to be delivered? is the question.

JESUS, THE SAVIOUR.

The very first page of your New Testament points directly to the one only answer; and the whole Book points the same way. The Book begins by presenting a Divine personage whose name is Jesus—which signifies Saviour. A large portion of the Book is occupied in telling you what this Jesus has done for your salvation, and what He directs you to do; the Book ends with a cordial invitation to everybody to come and partake of this salvation "freely." There may be some mystery in certain profound doctrines or prophecies contained in the Book, but the way of salvation is as plain as the noontide sun in the heavens on a clear day. The mystery is that you should be perplexed at all; nor would you be if sin did not blind you, and Satan seek to mislead you.

IS SEEKING YOU.

You need not seek after Jesus Christ; He is seeking you. He came to seek and to save sinners, of whom you are one. He is knocking at the door of your heart, asking for admission. If you will simply and sincerely try Jesus Christ for yourself you will see what you never saw before, you will obtain what you never have before. Christ offers no compromise. He demands entire faith in Himself, and entire obedience to his commandments. Unless you come as a sinner and acknowledging and confessing your guilt, He cannot treat with you. He "receiveth sinners." That means a warning, and it means a glorious encouragement. It warns you from the delusion that you are righteous already; it encourages you to come provided that you confess your sins honestly and seek to be delivered from them. There is an old score and a long score written down against you; what shall become of them? That sinful past He graciously pardons if you but accept Him as your Redeemer. The reason why you are forgiven is that Jesus Christ by his atonement on the cross bore the penalty of your sins in his own body. The Shepherd laid down his life for the sheep. Paul, the converted persecutor, voiced the exultant gratitude of myriads of forgiven sinners when he exclaimed, "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus."

PARDON BRINGS PEACE.

With pardon comes peace. "My peace I give unto you" is what Jesus will say to you. He calls it "mine" because He died to secure it for you. The anxiety and remorse which you have been feeling arose from your guilty conscience. That condemned you. You are at enmity with a pure and holy God; but you can have "peace with God through the Lord Jesus Christ." So God's infallible Book tells you, and so we have found it who have accepted Christ as our substitute and our Saviour. We are reconciled to God; our fears are quelled, our enmities are over, and we have submitted ourselves to God. A calm quiet of soul has succeeded to the fears and lashings of conscience that made our soul like a lake under the lashings of a storm. The thunder cloud has rolled away, and Jesus has said to the angry waves, "Peace, be still!" and there is a great calm. Trust Christ, my friend, and you will be at peace with God, at peace with yourself, and ought to be at peace with every fellow-man. You will no longer be afraid of God, or afraid of your own conscience, or afraid of dying, or afraid of the day of judgment; for you will be sheltered under the love that casts out all fears. The only fear that disturbs a genuine Christian—such as you may become—is that he may not do his whole duty at whatever cost or sacrifice. Try my blessed Saviour for yourself. In proportion to your faith will be your repose of mind when his loving voice says to you, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

AND POWER.

Admit Christ into your soul, and with Him comes power. You admit that you have been wretchedly weak on a thousand critical occasions in your past life. You promised yourself that you would never yield to certain temptations, and commit certain sins and follies; but you did, and your life is strewed with broken resolutions. Be done with this, and be done with leaning on a brittle reed. Jesus Christ offers to strengthen you with might in the inner man by his spirit dwelling in you. Ah you say, that is something supernatural. So it is; for Christianity is based on the truth that the Son of God does enter into the human heart, and just as really affects that heart as the bread you eat affects your body. The whole difference between Saul the bloody bigot and Paul the beneficent, unselfish, heroic apostle of benevolence to his fellowmen was that Jesus Christ had entered into him and transformed him and endowed him with a tremendous power to fight the Devil, and to do mighty deeds of love. This power will come into your soul through the channel of prayer. Try it and see. Work in the same line that you pray. The faith that strives while it prays will conquer; for it creates such a condition of things that God can hear you, and will help you.

PROVE CHRIST.

When you accept Jesus Christ you have secured an ever-present and almighty Friend. Some human friends want to help you, but are powerless; others have failed you at the pinch. Here is a Friend whose love is unchanging, who is able to keep your feet from falling, and your soul from death. That everlasting arm never breaks, and is never weary. You can trust his guidance when He says "Follow Me." If you ask his direction honestly, and with the spirit of obedience, you will never go astray. There is not one of his Commandments but you will be a better man for keeping it. He is your perfect model; you never saw or knew a human being yet who did a wrong thing when imitating Jesus Christ. You can trust his love when He uses the pruning knife to cut off the worthless limbs, and a hot furnace of trial to burn out the dross of your character. All I say to you, my inquiring friend, is—accept Jesus Christ, trust Jesus Christ, obey Jesus Christ, and swing your whole soul into his keeping. The first thing that you can do to please Him, do it. Cut out the dearest thing if He forbids it. My whole counsel is condensed into two words, try Christ. Do this in all sincerity, and in the full meaning of the words, and you will find it true that "there is more power to cheer, to strengthen, to purify, to elevate, to comfort, to ennoble, and to save in that one word Jesus than in all the utterances of man since the world began." His arm is offered to you; grasp it. You cannot do it too soon.

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—NO. 15.

About twenty well-dressed men sat round the large first-class waiting-room at a railway station I lately entered. I took my seat near one whom I thought I had seen before, and began speaking to him about the severe weather we were having. My aim was to get all interested in a conversation upon Gospel truths, which at times is somewhat difficult to accomplish.

As we talked I gradually raised my voice, so that all could hear me, and remarked that we should not be troubled with severe weather when we reached heaven: yet it would not matter to us unless we got there, but that I presumed every one of us might make sure of getting there if we wished; that Christ had tasted death for every man, and the work of salvation was finished by Him, and salvation was now a gift without money and price, and all might take it by taking Christ as their Saviour, and surrendering to Him as their Master.

Evidently my hearers were listening, yet none said anything. I continued speaking on the same lines, and occasionally glanced round the room, until at length one man asked whether there was nothing to be done but believe. I at once replied, there was nothing in order to be saved, although a great deal of doing followed as the outcome of being saved. Christ had done all the work to save us, and when we savingly believed in Him we loved Him for saving us, and then lived for Him because we loved Him. The man remarked, he did not believe in such an easy sort of religion as that, nor did he think that anybody else in the room did either. I said I fancied some did if they would only speak out; as what I had stated was strictly Scriptural and not what I thought, but what God had written and revealed in the grand old Book.

At any rate, he said, he considered I was not the man to be preaching these things, as I was not what I ought to be, and he knew something about my character not very creditable to me. He mentioned the locality of my place of business, and evidently knew me. I replied that I was well aware I was not altogether what I ought to be, but that I was a sinner saved by grace; yet I should be glad to hear what he knew against my character. All present were now keenly interested. Their attention was thoroughly secured and all faculties were open, but my opponent was silent. I again asked what he had against me, but he said he was not obliged to answer. I added, it was a cowardly thing for him not to answer, and again I challenged him to do so.

The man I first spoke to now rose to retire, and whilst passing me remarked that he quite agreed with everything I had said. Another man said he himself was a Christian, and thought the gentleman who had made the charge against me ought fairly to substantiate it. At the same time, as I had endeavoured to do good by sowing the good seed publicly, perhaps the rest should be done by private conversation with the gentleman himself.

I said the charge against me had been made publicly, and the grounds of the charge should be made as publicly. This appeared also to be the feeling of the company. When my opponent saw this, he very reluctantly confessed that he had nothing whatever against me. I at once rose to leave the room, bidding the company good day.

This is not the first time the devil has tried to close my mouth by blackening my character, but I suppose it is the old move over again of abusing your opponent's counsel when you have a bad case. However, this circumstance may be the means, in God's hands, of fixing some of the truths spoken upon the minds of the hearers, and so all may turn out to the furtherance of the Gospel.

A few minutes after this I stepped into a railway carriage to go a short distance along the line. There were nine of us in the compartment, and I began at once speaking upon the Gospel. There was no silence this time, for one of the number quickly replied, and all appeared to become interested and communicative. My journey lasted only a few minutes, but it was a most lively time, and I only regretted it could not be extended. Yet the Lord can bless a few words as well as many.

UNITED PRAYER FOR MISSIONS

An all day of united prayer on behalf of home and foreign missions was held on Monday in the City Temple, convened in connection with the annual gatherings of the Congregational Union. The attendance was somewhat meagre throughout. The continuous meeting from 11 to 5 was divided into thirty-minute periods, with a fresh president every half-hour. Dr. Guinness Rogers presided during the first section of the time, when the theme of thought was "Praise." Some appropriate and inspiring words were spoken by the Chairman on some of the varied causes for the exercise of thanksgiving in relation to mission effort—for a bygone year of goodness and mercy, for open doors for missionary work all over the world, for the wondrous triumphs of the Gospel in the past, etc. The prayers offered and the hymns sung were all tinged with the element of praise for the mercies of the past.

During the second half-hour "Confession" was the theme with Rev. H. Storer Toms, of Enfield, as president. The reasons for penitence given in the syllabus of arrangement were, the lack of full consecration and of realised responsibility. In some of the prayers, as often happens in open meetings, the topic was not very closely adhered to. One respectable, if poorly-clad, woman, in prayer declared herself a washerwoman, who had come a distance to be present. She thanked God that He was no respecter of persons; and by implication this "respect of persons" in the churches might perhaps be taken as one reason for confession of shortcoming. A well-known London pastor, in the course of his petition, entreated God, in the name of his ministerial brethren, to forgive "the sins of the study and the pride of the pulpit."

At noon Rev. J. Knaggs, of Stratford, assumed the direction of the proceedings, a few additional friends having meanwhile dropped into the meeting. The subject of this third section was the need of the London churches. Mr. Knaggs read the account of the Pentecost, in keeping with the suggestions of the programme that prayer should be made for a fresh outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the churches in London, and for increasing witness for God, by purity of doctrine and holiness of life. The Chairman said that the great need of the hour was for the churches to be more receptive of the blessing which God is ever ready and waiting to give. The prayers that followed bore on this need of the fulness and power of the Spirit of God. One brother prayed that instead of social "agitation" in London there might be the regeneration and illumination of the Holy Ghost. Another called to remembrance the days of the past, when the Spirit was so poured out that the lips of men were unsealed, and the Gospel had free course among the people. A pastor (now retired) prayed for a special blessing on London pastors: that they might not forget either the work of social redemption, or the still greater work of saving souls. He also prayed that the mass of the membership might be more ready and willing to co-operate with those in official positions in furthering the work of the Lord. An evangelist lamented in his prayer over the uncertain sound that is heard in many of the pulpits of the land. He thanked God for the blessed Gospel ministry sustained in the City Temple, and prayed that it might be an ensample for all the pulpits of the metropolis.

Mrs. Evan Spicer took the reins of the meeting at 12.30, the chosen theme of supplication being, "Ministers and Missionaries"; for the blessings bestowed on the world through them during the past century, for greater fidelity in holding forth the Word of Life, and that wisdom and grace might be given them in winning souls. In the thanksgivings that followed, grateful mention was made of the devoted service of many faithful labourers in far-off lands as well as at home, and for the wide circulation of the Scriptures that contain the Gospel message. Prayer was put up that a host of native agents might arise in lands unsuited to the health of Europeans. Another petition was that the great heritage of past blessing which rests on this generation of workers might create a corresponding sense of responsibility and consecration of life. Continued prayer was made in reference to the need of God's ambassadors to be taught of the Spirit; to be kept single in motive, and faithful in the simplicity of sound doctrine. The special needs of women workers in the mission field and the difficulties of their work among their benighted sisters, were not forgotten.

"Students Preparing for Home and Foreign Work" was the important topic of the next half-hour, when Mrs. Caine was in the president's chair. She read from John xv. Christ's words about Himself as the True Vine, and the necessity of union with Him as branches in order to fruitfulness in discipleship. In briefly applying this passage Mrs. Caine dwelt on the towering needs of this great city, which must not be overlooked in considering the claims of the so-called heathen world. For our young people preparing for the work there is a great future in store; so much the more is the necessity for their continually abiding in Christ in order to cope with the work they will have to do, and to be worthy disciples of the great Master and Worker. Very tender and earnest were the entreaties that followed from different lips on this behalf.

Perhaps no compartment in the programme of the day was of more present and pressing interest than the next, headed "Perils." Prayer was desired for missionaries and converts in peril in China, Japan, Madagascar, and Africa: that God would overrule the strife of nations to bring in the peace of the Gospel, and would preserve and comfort his servants in every mission-field. Dr. R. F. Horton, who presided during this half-hour, essayed to enliven the proceedings by asking everybody to come closer together at the front rather than sit in a scattered fringe down the ends of the pews. In order to induce confidence in prayer for these persecuted or imperilled ones, Dr. Horton read some verses from Psalm xxvii. Then he invited all to join in some specific petition, either referring to the topics on the paper, or to any other matter that might press heavily upon the spirit of the petitioner. This request was well observed in the earnest and successive petitions and thanksgivings that followed. God was asked to move the hearts of the combatants in the far East during this period of armstice to bring the bloody conflict to a peaceful conclusion. The condition of the Madagascar Christians in their gloomy outlook was specifically remembered; as was also the perilous condition of the Armenian Christians in the midst of oppression and rapine. Faith in God's overruling power and providence in the darkest days was expressed. The chairman having read a portion of Isaiah xi., further prayer was made for peace upon earth and goodwill towards men, as well as for the spirit of peace and trust to reign in the hearts of the servants of the Prince of Peace working in lands disturbed by bloodshed and strife.

Mrs. de Selincourt, who led the meeting from 2 to 2.30, touched, in a few pointed words, on the duty of the churches of London, on the need for tender sympathy towards the poor, and on the consecration of wealth. Those who followed in prayer seemed to keep these lines well in view. As one put it, "The burden of this great city is on our heart. We lay its sin, its guilt, its selfishness, its depth of misery, its forgetfulness of God, its abyss of despair, we lay them all before Thee, who, of old, wept over the city, having compassion on the multitude."

"The Heathen" formed the theme for the next half-hour (2.30 to 3). Mr. Arthur Marshall, who presided, said that in all probability the number of the heathen is actually growing; but, on the other hand, the experience of the L.M.S. and other missionary societies shows that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is still sufficient to save the vilest and most degraded human beings. Those who go forth in the name of Christ, in simple faith, and in the power of the Holy Ghost, have no need to be discouraged. They may have long to wait, but in due season they shall reap, if they faint not. Those who led in prayer at this point made special mention of the opium iniquity, the threatened invasion of Madagascar, and the difficulties between Japan and China. Another brother laid particularly before the Lord the native preachers and workers in heathen lands—that those who have been brought out of darkness may be used to bring many others to the Saviour.

The question of Sunday-school and other work among young people occupied the next thirty minutes (3 to 3.30). Mrs. J. L. Brooks stated the prayer topic, and led most earnestly, asking "that our own children, our Sunday scholars, the members of our Bible classes and guilds might be won to Christ; that teachers and workers might lose sight of everything else and seek only the glory of God in the salvation of the young around them." In the course of a few well-chosen sentences Mrs. Brooks referred to her yearning over her own boy when he first went off to school, to the trials and temptations our young people have to meet, and to her Bible-class in Hammersmith. How intensely some are longing over their own sons and daughters was made clear in the all-too-brief moments of prayer that followed, one after another rising quickly to wait on God, and the burden of all being "Our children; save our children."

Rev. A. Rowland, who presided during the half-hour 3.30 to 4, briefly introduced the topics for prayer—for the deepening of the missionary spirit, for a fuller sense of the needs of the non-Christian peoples, for greater sympathy with missionaries, and for means and men for the service. The burden of the petitions was that the churches might be awakened to the heavy responsibility resting upon them in regard to the unevangelised heathen, and that the power of the Holy Ghost might be manifested in convincing thousands of their need of Jesus.

The next half-hour was devoted to "National Mercies and Dangers." Rev. C. Silvester Horne, who presided in place of Rev. W. Pierce, dwelt on one or two special national dangers—such as corrupted religion and an abandonment of all faith—now threatening our own land. These he asked friends to lay specially before God. Judging by the prayers which followed, many minds were similarly burdened.

Finally, as the day's proceedings had opened with praise, so they closed, for the last half-hour was assigned to thanksgiving for spiritual blessings enjoyed by believers.

A MISSION AT DERBY.

At Trinity Baptist Chapel, Green Hill, Derby, a mission has been held, lasting fifteen days, which has proved a gratifying success. Night by night the chapel has been filled with hearers, and sometimes the adjoining vestries as well, and every night persons of varying ages, from the child of tender years to the aged man and woman, have avowed their determination to follow Christ. Upwards of 300 have given in their names in the inquiry room as having made the great decision. The missioner was Mr. E. P. Telford, London evangelist, a man of much experience and special aptitudes for such work, no mere sensationalist, but as robust in mind and heart as he is in body. Mr. Telford realises that there are hundreds of people who have been familiar with the Evangelical truths of Christianity from childhood, and who simply need to take a decisive stand for Christ, and declare their decision, and to this end his addresses and appeals are aimed.

As the mission proceeded, its influence was felt from the centre to the circumference of the town, and even from the villages around Derby hearers came. While the bulk of the inquirers are from the Sunday-school and congregation at Trinity, representatives from nearly forty other churches and chapels have been led to Christ in the inquiry-room. In some cases whole families have decided, and the father has been influenced to come through the children.

SPRING.

Welcome, sweet spring, who once again
On our loved Isle has smiled;
We hail thee though thy winds are chill,
Dear Nature's first-born child.

Each opening flower and budding leaf,
The skies so blue and clear,
The daisied turf beneath our feet,
Proclaims that thou art here.

Pale primroses, like fairy orbs,
On emerald banks are seen;
The violet and the pansy hide
Midst leaves of shadowy green.

From balmy climes and scented groves,
Across the ocean's roar,
The swallow to our English eaves
Returns with joy once more.

All earth resounds with music sweet,
The heavens smile above;
Then welcome springtime, golden wave
Of beauty, light, and love;

Emblem of God's eternal spring,
That in these hearts of ours
Shall melt the icy frost of sin,
And wake his fadeless flowers.

HEADWAY IN JAPAN.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

There is probably no other country not nominally Protestant Christian in which there is greater freedom for the preaching and teaching of the Gospel than in Japan, or where persecution of any sort is less known. It is also probable that there has never been a civilised nation more open to the acceptation of anything new that they find to be good than the Japanese, and current events are going to make them still more receptive. The revision of the treaty with England having recognised them on the footing of a civilised people, one of the causes which has for years operated to the prejudice of Christianity—the feeling that they were looked down upon, and were not trusted, by their would-be teachers—has been removed. Their success in war, on account of methods learned from foreigners, is likely to recommend to them whatever else the foreigner may teach.

Amidst it all a feeling is steadily rising that is theistic and pro-Christian. What then is being done to meet these growing opportunities? From a table compiled last year by Mr. Loomis, of the American Bible Society, I extract the following data, which would probably show some increase on revision. There are now 365 local Protestant Churches in Japan, to 72,039 Buddhist temples, or almost exactly 1 to 200.

*These are collectively designated as "The Church of Christ in Japan."

A curious fact disclosed by this table was the number of dismissions and exclusions during the year, 694 in the first case and 573 in the second, which, in spite of the admission of 3700 adult members by baptism, resulted in a diminution of some 2000 members and 200 unordained helpers. The explanation seems to be that many adhere to the churches for a while to secure education or other advantages, and then withdraw.

The number of religious or semi-religious organisations, formed under the auspices of various missions as a rule, is extraordinarily great for such a comparatively new field, and the number of Christian publications in Japanese, daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly, is legion. These number, including a few Roman and Greek Church publications, six weekly, two fortnightly, thirty-five monthly, one bi-monthly, and one quarterly periodicals. We have here, in addition to a local foreign missionary society, now commencing work in Korea, a goodly array of Y.M.C.A.'s, Christian Endeavour Societies, a W.C.T.U., and other temperance societies, a flourishing Scripture Reading Union, Police Mission, Postmen's Mission, Prison Mission, Railway Mission, and other kindred agencies. But most of these are still in their infancy, and little more than nuclei for further development. Large and well-equipped general and theological schools are attached to nearly all of the missions, and little is lacking in the way of machinery or organisation.

Yet with all that has been accomplished, the mass of the people has not yet been touched, and a large majority is still ignorant of the Mission of Jesus Christ. Hitherto one great difficulty has been the restriction of the residences of the missionaries to treaty ports, unless in the employ of natives. It has been, therefore, necessary for native Christians to be at the head of every institution outside treaty limits, while passports have only been granted "for health, or scientific research." In future, however, under the revised treaties, and as greater facilities will be afforded, which will mean greater responsibilities for work. The demands, too, for this treaty revision, have had a greatly disturbing effect on Christian effort; and so has the attraction of so much attention to politics since a constitution modelled on those of Europe was adopted in 1889.

At first there seemed promise that the whole nation would speedily accept the Gospel, and every little indication was exaggerated in expectant minds. Then came the reaction of disappointment, as it was found that though the Japanese were ready enough to accept the general outlines of Christian teaching, they could only with the utmost difficulty be imbued with any idea of their sinful state, and that to bring them to understand the need of a second birth was a superhuman task. But thank God the Bibles are spreading steadily far and wide, and there is no town of any size without its tract depot. The opportunity presented by the departure of so many men for the war has not been lost, and a large edition of pocket Gospels has been issued for their special use, in addition to regular portions. A special edition is now being printed to furnish the navy in action through a high official in Tokyo, on his own application. It is perhaps among the women that the greatest work has been accomplished, and on the whole the Japanese women have proved more stable in the faith than the men, and they have the advantage of almost as great liberty as is the case in our own country.

"ONE MEETING A YEAR!"

Dear Sir,—I have often read in your paper of the religious life in nearly every country in the world, but I have never seen there anything about Alsace. People in England seem to think that as we are now under a pious Emperor and an enlightened Government, we enjoy the same religious and civil liberty as you have in happy England; this, alas, is far from being the case, as I will briefly explain, speaking only from my own experience, so as to be sure I am speaking the truth.

In the village where I live, and in most, although not all, of the Alsatian villages German is understood by everybody, and a sort of German "patois" is spoken by the lower classes, though French is still the language always used by the educated people; Divine service is held and religious instruction given in German, the law forbidding French to be used. But within the last twelve or fifteen years there has come to this village quite a colony of people from the Ban-de-la-Roche, the beautiful district in our Alsatian mountains where Oberlin lived and laboured, and these people do not understand a word of German. They have left their homes in "the Valley of Rocks" to obtain work in the large edge-tool factory established in our village, and in which almost every man in the place is employed.

The Ban-de-la-Rochois used to get their living by reaping, using hand-looms in their homes and carrying their work up to the towns. But of course, now steam and machinery have put an end to this, and they are obliged to seek employment elsewhere.

As our divine services are exclusively German, these poor people cannot understand or take part in them, and so are entirely deprived of all religious help and privileges. Our pastor, after months and months of trouble and correspondence, at last obtained permission from the higher powers to hold one religious service a year in French. It is held on Palm Sunday, and the ordinance of the Lord's Supper is administered to these truly hungry people of the Lord. One religious service in the year in a Protestant country, with a pious Emperor at its head! What would the English Christians, who have four services a week, think of that? Many a time, when I have been called upon for my subscription to the German Missionary Society, have I thought, "Yes, the Germans send out missionaries to preach the Gospel to the heathen in the language they understand, while at home they are wilfully depriving their own subjects of its joyful sound!" Perhaps you will say, "Could we not have a cottage meeting or a mission room for them?" I with my sister and a friend did hold weekly meetings in my house for the women, and great joy it was to us to see by their beaming faces how much they were appreciated, but there again the law forbids more than twenty people to meet thus, and many a time when we have been more than that number have I sat inwardly trembling lest some gendarme, having heard our singing, or got wind of the meeting, should come in upon us without the ceremony of ringing or knocking as they often do, the doors never being locked except at night.

I have never lived on the other side of the Rhine, so do not know much of what goes on there, but this is my experience of German religious liberty in our beautiful but unhappy Alsace. C. O.

DERBY.—A fourteen days' temperance mission has been held here with good results.

THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH.

As far back as four centuries before the Reformation—in France, in Piedmont, in Lombardy, in Bohemia, in the houses, and in the streets—the members of this persecuted church went about opposing the doctrines of the Church of Rome, offering instead the Word of God, and caring but for one thing, namely, "To obey God rather than man."

In 1848, after nine centuries of persecution, this little people finally obtained from Charles Albert the religious liberty which permitted it to carry in the light of day the lamp of the Bible, and to obey its motto, Lux lucet in tenebris. A look at its present state will give proof of it. Like all the ancient churches, the Waldensian Church has run into the danger of formalism; therefore the need of an awakening has been strongly felt, and this revival so wished for by all now begins to manifest itself. Meetings of all kinds have been organised, and thus the thoughts of many hearts have been unveiled, and a goodly number of prodigal children have returned home. In the parish of Augrogne, during the past year, almost 600 different services have been held. The pastor of Villar writes:—"The pardon of sins by faith in Jesus Christ is discussed with ardour." The pastor Gardiol writes from Bobi:—"Thank God, here we are not in the same condition as we were a few years ago—one mass, having a piety regulated like a clock. Now we have a good number who have resolutely thrown themselves into the Saviour's arms." Pastor J. P. Pons, Moderator, writes from Soire Pellice:—"The quiet campaign, undertaken with faith, prayer, and zeal, has produced very real results. Conversions have taken place; we have heard cries of anguish uttered; we have seen tears of repentance fall. Young people, as well as fathers and mothers of families, have been seized by the power of the Gospel, declaring themselves, with strength and humility, delivered from the bonds of indifference, and ready to glorify God. Nothing can reproduce that breath of holy joy—their prayers and songs."

And now to the external progress. Every year this little Waldensian Church extends, always further and further, her energy and her influence—namely, in several of the Swiss cantons, in North and South America, also as far away as the Zambesi, as well as (as one of our best known Italian writers expresses it) in every corner of Italy. During the past year no less than 330 have been labouring in her field, her communicants number 19,266; catechumens 1929, of whom 893 have now been admitted as members; day-schools 248, with 7629 scholars; Sunday-schools 149, with 6814 children in them; whilst every Sunday morning she announces the glad tidings of the Gospel to 12,651 regular listeners, without reckoning the 55,000 persons who occasionally attend her services.

As to means, this little Church has always been poor. In order to spread the Gospel, as Dr. Amicis has well said, she has need of the liberality of Christians of all nations. Notwithstanding her poverty, she contributed last year the equivalent of £5415.

Besides her 248 day-schools, this Church has orphanages and shelters, for the young and for the old, hospitals, colleges for the study of classics, boarding-schools for young ladies, and at Florence a theological college.

Surely this ancient Protestant Church of Italy has been preserved by God for the evangelisation of Italy. It has now extended, in the land of the Popes, from the Alps to the south of Sicily, by means of nearly a hundred churches and stations of evangelisation, small and great, composed of converts from the Roman Catholic religion.

But this beautiful land, with its myriad of rays and colours, has in the City of the Seven Hills the greatest enemy of the Gospel, the Pope, and that it is which makes Italy the most difficult country to evangelise. Yet on the conversion of Italy depends the conversion of the 210,000,000 of Roman Catholics spread over the whole world. This task, then, of the Waldensian Church is in every respect a great and difficult one, and to accomplish it she has a very urgent need of the prayers, the interest, and the encouragement of all Christians.

O. Gollia-Mauro,
Deputy of the Waldensian Church.

PROPHETIC CONVENTION.

The convention which was held last week in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, was not confined to the study of prophecy. The subject was threefold: The Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jews, and the Coming of the Lord. Yet the third was the outstanding theme, and it is hardly possible to deal with it without introducing the other themes by the way. From Monday to Wednesday inclusive there were three meetings daily; on Thursday there was one meeting only. The chair was occupied, sometimes by Sir Robert Phayre, at other times by Mr. J. E. Mathieson. The audiences that assembled were small; at times they seemed lost in the spacious hall. It is a pity that more Christians did not gather, and regrettable that a smaller building was not secured for the conference.

Taking Wednesday as a typical day, we should say that the addresses were of a useful order. For the most part they were of the character of Bible readings, designed to open up Scripture teaching on subjects of sublime interest. The first speaker was Rev. John Wilkinson, who showed by three arguments that the Advent of the Lord must be premillennial: (1) there will be no millennium until Antichrist is destroyed; and he is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming (2 Thess. ii. 8). (2) According to Zech. xiv. and Rev. xix., war is to be raging when the Lord returns; He comes to speak peace to the nations that they may beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks. (3) The Jews as a nation are to be converted on the coming of the Lord; now the remnant according to the election of grace is being gathered out, then they will look upon Him and mourn (Zech. xii. 10). Enforcing the pilgrim life of God's people, the speaker drew a lesson from the three great fixtures of the Jewish calendar. The Passover is past; so is Pentecost; the Feast of Tabernacles is before us. If we have been born from above, we should speak with an unworldly accent, so that men may know that we are citizens of another country, that is a heavenly. The second speaker was Dr. Neatby, who directed attention to the part of the children of God in the coming of the Lord to the earth. They will come with Him, and his beauty will shine in their faces; for "He comes to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe" (2 Thess. i. 10). Death and judgment are behind the believer; hence, "when Christ, who is our life, shall be manifested, we also shall be manifested with Him in glory" (1 Col. ii. 4). The coming will be "the manifestation of the sons of God"; "when He shall be manifested we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is" (Rom. viii. 19; 1 John iii. 2). This will be the signal for the deliverance of creation from its present travail, bringing about "the restitution of all things"—the regeneration. O that we may so look for Christ that our hearts may be in fellowship with Him, and that we may enjoy Him in patient waiting!

In the afternoon, Rev. J. Smith, of Dufftown, called attention to the fact that up to the time of the Incarnation there was a two-fold division of humanity—Jews and Gentiles. That division was entirely of God. Now there is a three-fold division—Jews, Gentiles, and the Church of God. By-and-bye, when the Church has been taken away, there will again be a two-fold division, and so till the end of time. In connection with these divisions, God has revealed two great secrets—the secret of the Kingdom, and the secret of the Church. The Lord will not reign until the Church is with Him; and for them He that hath ascended will descend again. Those who look for the coming of the Lord should realise the importance of standing clear of things that are doubtful, and keeping their hands and hearts pure. Rev. John Riddell, of Glasgow, followed, pointing out the significance of some of the Old Testament prophecies concerning Christ, speaking of the glory of his person. He did not claim to be able to answer all the questions which curious minds might propound. He could not see what lay behind the sun; the brightness of the glorious orb hid such things from view. The Lord is coming; that blessed fact filled his heart with hope. Finally, he urged to a watchful, humble, and prayerful life, avoiding anything which would make us ashamed in the presence of the Lord.

In the evening Dr. Anderson gave an outline of the Book of Revelation. Unlike almost every other book of the Bible, this has a preface, and across that preface are the words, "This Prophecy." Having come to recognise that there is scarcely one Messianic prophecy that has not a double fulfilment, he held that though the Revelation may have a historical fulfilment in the course of the events of Christendom, it will also have a final or ultimate fulfilment. He believed that from the fourth chapter to the end of the last chapter is a prophecy in the sense of its having its complete fulfilment in days still to come. With his Bible in hand, the speaker noted the various points and stages of the prophecy; and, in conclusion, urged his hearers to read their Bibles as God's Book, and not to take it in portions like medicine.

An address was delivered by Mr. J. W. C. Fegan on the needs of Christian work, especially among the youths of London; and the Gospel was preached by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch.

In the course of some remarks on the Convention arrangements, Mr. Brandreth, the convener, pointed out that the offerings given in had fallen short by a long way of meeting the expenses. As the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, it was desired to send messengers through the Continent, and he or Mr. Mathieson would be glad to hear from such as would like to promote this effort. It is intended, should the Lord open the way, to bring the subject before the suburban population of London, the series of meetings to be followed by a week's convention in a central hall. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. E. Mathieson, 47, Phillimore-gardens, W.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN SAXONY.

It is hard to believe that in Germany, the birthplace of Luther, and the land of the Reformation, one should have to fight hard for liberty to worship God according to conscience. So it is, however, and a brief record of our work here during the past two months may open the eyes of some to see the condition of this country, which lies so near our own. The head-quarters of our work is in Dresden, under the charge of Pastor Karl Mascher, but since he came here some three or four years ago, other stations have been located in villages lying around us. From time to time a mission tour is made by Mr. Mascher, in order to visit these stations, and hold services.

Perhaps the most encouraging branch is situated in Hartha, a village about fifty miles from Dresden. Since the work was started there about twelve months ago, many have been won for the Master, and a healthy little church has been formed. In January last a small room was rented, and opened as a place of worship. Each Sunday this room is filled with people anxious to hear of the Saviour. A Sunday School was started, mission services have been held there during the last two months, and we have had the joy of seeing sinners brought to Christ. Some of the people had walked for two or three hours in a deep snow and bitter frost, so intense seems the desire to hear the Word.

All this reached the ears of the Lutheran pastor of the village, and he called together a meeting of the church officers to consider what was to be done, as "the work of the Baptists must at once be stopped." His first step was to visit the village printer, who had published a notice of our meeting, and ask him how he had dared to take an advertisement from the Baptists. In so doing he had overstepped the law, and had made enemies of many people. The printer replied that he had not broken the law, and all the rest was his own responsibility. Failing here, the pastor went to the town Mayor, and asked why he did not stop the work. The Mayor said, "These people have done nothing wrong, and I refuse to interfere." Then a notice was sent to the police authorities, making false and unjust accusations against us. The result has been that without any further inquiry we have received a long document from the law-court at Döbeln forbidding us all right to hold Divine service or to do more than give a "religious lecture;" and further that "if these 'lectures' are found to have any special aim in them they will at once be stopped." Our Sunday-school is entirely forbidden, and no child is to be allowed at our "lectures." Orders are sent to the local police to this effect, and they have the right to break up any meetings which are not carried on in this way alone.

Of course we cannot accept this bondage, and Mr. Mascher has appealed against it; whether the appeal will be heard remains to be seen. If not, we must do as we have done in Dresden, claim the right to worship God as his word dictates. The work at Hartha is in charge of one of our colporteurs, Mr. Sellin, a man in every way fitted to fill the post. We are only able to guarantee him £30 a year, and often find it hard to raise this, in addition to our many other expenses. God is blessing the work, souls are being saved, and if the earthly government refuses to recognise us we know that the great King of kings is on our side. Brethren, pray for us.

Rachel Mascher (née R. Fuller Gooch).

WORK IN BUENOS AYRES.

Permit me to call the attention of your readers to a noble servant of Jesus Christ, who, out of sight and unaided, is doing splendid service for our common Master in the capital of the Argentine Republic. I refer to Mr. Paul Besson, pastor of the native Baptist church. On my way home from South America, having a few days to spend in that city, I resolved to hunt up our worthy brother, whose existence had become known to me through the newspapers.

My first visit to him was a short one, as he had an appointment with a priest at a neighbouring monastery to discuss the old, old question, "Salvation: Is it of works or of faith?" I visited him again at his Sunday-school. I shall not very soon forget his Bible-class; it numbered some twelve or fifteen persons, made up of several nationalities—Italians, French, Spaniards, Argentinos, English, Scotch, and myself, Welsh. We all understood Spanish, and in this tongue we had a refreshing talk together. In another room were some juvenile classes, and we all combined to close the service.

Our friend was trained for the ministry at the feet of the learned exegete, Prof. Godet. He occupied Adolphe Monod's pulpit at Lyons, for three years; but, through a change in his views, he left Presbyterianism and identified himself with the Baptists. He has been working in Buenos Ayres for about twelve years. Before that he laboured at Santa Fé, in the same Republic. At that place there are a great many Swiss settlers, chiefly Protestants.

Mr. Besson is a most indefatigable worker. You never see him go about without a little bag under his arm, which contains tracts, booklets, periodicals, etc., which he judiciously distributes among the people. Besides preaching, visiting, and distributing tracts there is yet one thing I must not forget to mention. Until a few years ago there was no civil registration of births, deaths, and marriages in the Republic. This placed Protestants in a very awkward predicament at times, especially in questions relating to heirship. Mr. Besson appealed to the Minister of State to provide a civil register of births, etc., explaining that a Baptist pastor kept no official record of the births of the children of his congregation. "We will make an exceptional provision to meet your case," said the Minister. "I will accept no exceptional treatment," said Mr. Besson; "all born Argentines should be registered by the State." The outcome of it all was the introduction into Congress of a bill proposing the elimination of the whole section of the Civil Code dealing with births, deaths, and marriages, and substituting in its stead a new law of civil registration. The Romish clergy were furious at the proposed change, for the old law was their own, and gave them great prestige. The Minister, however, was firm and triumphed. The drafting of this most liberal law, which is the heaviest blow dealt yet to Popery in Argentina, was mainly the work of Mr. Besson. Our brother is supported by no society. Having a little income of his own, and being unmarried, he seeks to be self-supporting. But the rent of the building is considerable, and the contributions of the little flock all go to this, but fall short every month of covering it. The deficit is about £20 per annum. His work is certainly needed in Buenos Ayres, and deserves the support of Christians at home. A supply of Spanish tracts would also aid him considerably. His address is 1330 Calle Independencia, Buenos Ayres.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—The Duchess of Teck was among those present at a meeting at Richmond on Monday, in the interests of the Union. A number of friends, including Lady Jeune, pleaded the cause of the poor children.

MR. B. BROOMHALL.

It is with deep regret that we hear of the retirement of our esteemed friend Mr. Benjamin Broomhall from the secretaryship of the China Inland Mission, a post which he has worthily filled for twenty years. By his unremitting energy and perseverance, Mr. Broomhall has accomplished much for the advancement of the best interests of the C.I.M., and for the evangelisation of the million-peopled empire. The following extract from China's Millions for this month will give our readers some idea of the high regard in which Mr. Broomhall has been held by his colleagues on the Council of the Mission :—

"Referring to the resignation of Mr. Broomhall, the Council wish to record by special minute the high estimation in which they have ever held him, and their sense of the great loss that the Mission must suffer by his retirement. Few probably are aware of the immense amount of labour accomplished by Mr. Broomhall in past days, when he was assisting Mr. Taylor in the early and rapid development of the Mission, and when he was, almost single-handed, doing the work now divided amongst several; and the Council feel that no words of theirs can adequately express all that the Mission owes to his untiring energy and unbounded labours. And they cannot but recall how for years it was the privilege of candidates for China to be welcomed into the happy home circle at No. 2, Pyrland-road, where, in Mr. and Mrs. Broomhall, a great many of our members now labouring in China found a second father and mother. The Council also take pleasure in recording the unfailing courtesy and kind consideration which Mr. Broomhall has ever shown, and most gladly take this opportunity of acknowledging the great help and assistance he has at all times rendered to the Council collectively. They trust that, whilst looking first and chiefly to God for his approval and his 'well done,' Mr. and Mrs. Broomhall may in their retirement have the happiness of remembering that there are many in China and at home in whose hearts they will always occupy a warm place."

Mr. Broomhall has assured the Council that they may always count on his assistance and advice in any case where his long experience in the work may enable him to be of special use. He will reside at No. 2, Pyrland-road, N., as hitherto. The offices of the Mission have now been removed to the new buildings, Newington Green, N.

THE LEPER HOME AT JERUSALEM.

The twenty-third report of this institution, which is carried on under the auspices of the Moravians, shows that at the close of last year there were twenty-two inmates—twelve males and ten females. Tender hearts and hands affectionately ministered to their wants and alleviated their pains; while some were grateful, others showed an unruly, unthankful spirit.

For years this was the only refuge for lepers in the pashalik of Jerusalem. Now, the Moslem authorities maintain asylums at Siloam, Nablous, and Ramleh. No lepers are cared for like those who enjoy the shelter of the Home, although, it is needless to say, the poor patients can hardly appreciate their privileges. One of the staff writes:—"We should always bear in mind that a leper can never be happy unless he casts the whole burden of his sorrow on the Good Physician, and learns to see in the fiery furnace of his sore afflictions the hand of a heavenly Father. Whatever we may do for a patient in dressing his wounds or in other physical aid, cannot possibly remove the hard and awful expression which encrusts his face. His thoughts at once revert to his misery; he is cast down and broken-hearted, and often not even thankful for the kindness shown him. But when he is brought to the Saviour of men, and can lift his desolate heart to heaven, and say, 'Thy will be done,' then he will begin to feel content and happy. Blank despair is exchanged for hope, and darkness for light."

It is cheering to read that some of the patients have attained to this solid joy and lasting happiness. More than half the inmates are Moslems, whose fanaticism has from time to time caused much anxiety. The treasurer of the work is Mr. H. O. Essex, The Square, Fairfield, near, Manchester.

A PALESTINE HOSPITAL.

My predecessor, Dr. Bailey, left the mission in November, 1893, and until the middle of February, 1894, the hospital was closed, and the work practically at a standstill. As soon as possible I reopened the dispensary. It became known at once that a European doctor had come, and crowds of people came to the dispensary. At first, from early morning till the middle of the afternoon, was spent in seeing patients. Our average number now is from 40 to 60 patients a day, but sometimes we have many more. On account of the seclusion of the Moslem women, we are obliged to have separate days for the men and for the women. Two days a week we have men, and two days a week women; the other two days are reserved for operations and special cases. Every morning we have a short service, with prayer and a Gospel address, and God's blessing is asked on our work.

My arrival in Nablus was the signal for much opposition to the work, from the authorities and others. We were compelled to leave our old dispensary; then our enemies tried to prevent us having prayers in the hospital, they took away our Arabic Bible, and threatened to imprison the man who conducts the service. Just at this time one of the officials brought his daughter to the hospital, and an operation was successfully performed for her; the father became a great friend, and so the opposition ceased.

But other enemies were actively at work. They stirred up the Mohammedans against us, and caused several petitions to be sent to Beyrout, praying that our hospital be closed, as we were doing much harm in the place. Shortly before the case came on for trial before our Governor here, God raised up other friends for us, even among some of the members of the Government, who had been to the hospital and obtained relief, and when our case came on, several of these men spoke up for us, and, to the great mortification of our enemies, the case was dismissed. Thus a second time we are full of praise to God for having so wonderfully helped us. I am sorry to say that our opponents are still doing their very best to wreck the Mission, and are preparing another petition against us, but our trust is in our God who has so wonderfully helped us in the past; and we know He will also help us in the future.

Our little hospital consists of two wards. We have eight beds, but at a push we can take in ten people. The hospital was opened at the end of March, and since that time we have had a constant flow of patients, and generally we have been full to overflowing. During the past twelve months we have had nearly 10,000 out-patients, and over 100 in-patients, most of them serious cases. By God's help we have been able to do a great deal of good, and to relieve much suffering. Many have been restored to health after careful nursing or operation, and in not a few cases we have been able to save life.

At first we laboured under great difficulties, as we had no lady nurse, but since July we have had Miss Bedells, late of the Gaza Medical Mission. She has proved a most valuable help to the work. She has been able to take over the management of the hospital and the superintendence of the women and children's ward, besides greatly assisting me in the out-patient department.

Since November last we have had another very valuable helper in Miss Adamson, who has received a very good medical training. She has been most helpful, and especially in the work among the women. Besides the medical work we have a nice little church and very flourishing schools, under the care of Rev. C. Falscheer and Miss Reeve.—Yours very sincerely, Gaskoin Wright.

A DRUNKARD'S SAD CONFESSION.—The Irish World gives the following incident, which should be told at the Band of Hope meetings:—"A man was sitting in a saloon with an old battered hat on his head, a short black pipe in his mouth, a dirty shirt and ragged clothes, and down-trodden shoes on his feet. But he had not always been like that; he had seen better days once. As he looked out of the saloon door he saw two tidy, clean little children come for their father's beer. As soon as they were outside the door the little girl took a drink from the jug, while her little brother waited patiently for his turn. The poor drunkard looked at them very sadly, and then he said with a sigh, 'Ah, that's how I began, and I cannot leave it off now.'"

AUSTRIAN ALPINE MISSION.

We have been having much blessing the last ten days from the ministrations of Rev. Dr. Clark, of Prague, A.B.F.M., and the Lord seems to be indicating as successor to my late dear husband a tried and very successful worker from the land of Huss.

The Nursing Home is filling up, one of our patients being a colporteur of the B. and F. Bible Society, whose health has suffered much in pursuance of his arduous and dangerous calling in the mountains of South Austria. He is thankful in this time of his weakness not to be in the uncongenial atmosphere of a public hospital, subject to the ministrations of nuns and sisters of mercy.

The itinerating work in the provinces, Y.M. and Y.W.C.A., distributing of Gospel literature, etc., are all being prosecuted vigorously, in fact our work is only limited by insufficiency of means; it could be extended indefinitely in this vast empire if only workers and money were forthcoming.

Friends will be glad to know that Miss Lillian Harris, 32, Belmont-road, St. Andrew's, Bristol, is arranging a sale of work in aid of our funds.

SHELTERING HOME, LIVERPOOL.

A band of boys sailed in February from our Home under the care of their teacher. Though they left very cold weather behind them, they report having had a good voyage, and have found situations readily. One writes: "My master has a large dairy farm, also pigs and poultry. He owns 2000 sugar maples, and we are preparing the waggons and implements now for gathering the sap. I find they are a good and religious family; we have prayers and Bible-reading every morning. Altogether, I think it a very nice place."

A girls' party is now being prepared at the Sheltering Home, and will sail shortly, while a third band of boys and girls will be received to go out later. Most persons find the spring a trying time, and for those whose frames are already weakened with illness and privation during the long winter, it often means the end of their resources, and is just the season when the help of this institution becomes most welcome, pointing to a door of hope for the children and help for the widow. Any help towards the heavy expenses of outfit and emigration will be most welcome.

A NEGLECTED SPOT.

Sir,—Having returned from a tour in the north of Africa, I should like to write a few words about mission work there. At Algiers we visited the mission house, and saw one of the devoted little band who labour there. The work is chiefly among the Arabs, of whom there are thousands at Algiers. A missionary and his wife labour there, and two other single ladies, Miss Freeman and Miss Trotter. They are not in connection with the North African Mission.

After leaving Algiers we went by railway to Biskra, which is on the borders of the Sahara Desert. Biskra is a lovely spot, whose air is scented with the sweetest of flowers, and whose sky is ever bright, and whose sun ever shines. When the whole continent of Europe was shrouded in gloom, and even Algiers could boast of nothing but snow and rain, Biskra was steeped in sunshine! Wandering beneath palm trees in the warm delicious air, one could hardly believe it was March, and not July or August.

In this sweet spot there are about 8000 Arabs, kept in order by a large body of French troops. As far as we could find there are no missionaries to these Arabs, and it struck me that perhaps some English Christians who have not been able for the long journeys to India or China, but who would like to do mission work for their Lord, might think of going to Biskra. There are beautiful hotels there, and invalids are beginning to come for their health's sake. Will no one think of going for missionary work?

The journey from London to Biskra only takes a few days, a very different journey from that to India. I should be glad to furnish further particulars about Biskra to any who are interested.

(Mrs.) F. M. Macrae.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LOCALITY OF THE PENTECOSTAL OUTPOURING OF THE SPIRIT.

Sir,—I wonder what reply the majority of your readers would give to the question—In what locality in Jerusalem occurred the wonderful scene of the Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the sudden conversion of "about three thousand souls"? If they have rested in domestic traditions similar to those in which most of us were brought up, they would at once reply, "In some large house in Jerusalem, and probably in the 'large upper room,' where our Lord and his disciples 'ate the Passover'" (Luke xxii. 12). But a closer attention to the details of the Gospel history, and to all the circumstances of the time, will, I think, clearly result in the conclusion that this wonderful scene occurred in the Temple; and this for the reasons following:—

1. St. Luke closes his Gospel by stating that after the Ascension of our Lord at Bethany, which occurred forty days after his resurrection and ten days before the Feast of Pentecost, they "were continually in the Temple, praising and blessing God" (ch. xxiv. 53), in obedience to the command, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high."

2. No ordinary apartment in a dwelling-house would hold the multitudes who thronged around the Apostles immediately upon the occurrence of the Pentecostal miracle, though the "large upper room" in which the last supper was eaten might hold the "hundred and twenty disciples" who proceeded to the election of Matthias to replace Judas, "who by transgression fell"—a room probably reached only by steps outside the dwelling.

3. They were "all with one accord in one place" "when the day of Pentecost was fully come," and the time of the descent of the Holy Spirit was at "the third hour of the day," the fixed time of the morning sacrifice and prayer in the Temple courts—the hour when devout Israelites would be joining in the public service—and none so probably as those who, with the Apostles, had during the nine preceding days been "continually in the Temple praising and blessing God." Those who had continued "daily in the Temple" during the previous nine days would not certainly have been absent on the great day of the Pentecost celebration, one day later, when an immense congregation of devout Jews and proselytes from all lands would be assembled in the sacred courts at the third hour of the day, the time of the morning sacrifice.

4. The place where the outpouring of the Holy Spirit occurred was spacious enough to receive a multitude not only of Palestinian Jews, but also of devout men "from every country under heaven." The only place in Jerusalem where it was possible for thousands to assemble in the blazing heat of Palestine in summer was the Temple itself. The streets were all narrow, the houses were small in comparison with our own. The daily place of assembly at the hour of prayer for devout Jews was the immense court of the Temple, surrounded by its magnificent and shady colonnades, supported within by several interior rows of pillars richly decorated, as Josephus tells us, with gilded capitals and sculptured stone.

These devout Jews, who had travelled from all lands to be present at Pentecost, would probably be the men least under Pharisaic influence, yet best prepared by previous spiritual training for receiving and propagating in all nations on their return the Divine Message, in their native countries. And it was essential that this vast body of future missionaries should be spectators of the miracle, since all they that spake were Galileans—the most "ignorant and unlearned" part of the population of Palestine. The astounding miracle of speech and spiritual passion was wrought on persons the least able by nature to simulate by imposture solemn intelligible outbursts of correct inspired speech in many tongues.

I conclude, therefore, that the scene of the great decisive miracle of the Christian religion, next to the Resurrection of Christ, was the area of the Temple, where, a thousand years before, the cloud of the Excellent Glory filled the House of the Lord, and consecrated it as "House of Prayer for all nations."

The central publicity of the place, and the vision of the tongues of fire, as well as the thundering sound of the "mighty rushing wind," would ensure the immediate publication of the marvel throughout Jerusalem, and surround the persons of the Apostles with a supernatural authority before which Pharisaic authority would be impotent. That sound of the mighty rushing wind filling the area of the Temple courts, followed by the outburst of the one hundred and twenty voices speaking with passionate earnestness in exalted tones, in all the languages of the civilised world, would draw both home and foreign worshippers from all parts of the vast enclosure to the side whence the voices proceeded. It was the national anniversary of the Giving of the Law on Sinai, and now there had descended from heaven the word of everlasting life in the Gospel of Salvation. The Jews had crucified their King, and now He was speaking to them from heaven in all the languages of the civilised world the word of forgiveness and everlasting life.

That sacred area has been defiled by the Mosque of Omar for nearly thirteen centuries of Moslem triumph. But before long, as we believe, the Temple will be rebuilt in greater glory, and the Holy Nation shall welcome Him who will be Ruler in Israel, and teach them once more "all the words of this life," in the same city where once they "crucified their King,"—and then, becoming the Lord of the whole earth, all nations shall serve and obey Him. Edward White.

LICENSED VIVISECTION.

Sir,—The other day a well-known speaker was urging the need of action to put down cruel sports. He said he felt degraded in even having to ask for the discontinuance of what never ought to exist.

This is my feeling in bringing before your readers our responsibilities as to that other ground of cruelty—vivisection.

But the distinguishing characteristic of this, unlike our other shameful cruelties, is, that we license it—countenance it—pay for it.

Though we are unaccountably indifferent as to modes of slaughtering animals for food and clothing, and as to the daily use or abuse of them, in business, sports, and in amusements, yet we do not protect perpetrators of wrongs.

In the United Kingdom, in 1893, 4046 experiments on living animals were performed under the law, half of which were without anæsthetics. The number of experiments in the nine years before, beginning with 1884, were, respectively, 441, 800, 1035, 1220, 1069, 1417, 2102, 2661, 3960.

The inspector who has been appointed has always been either a vivisector or a keen partisan, and only pays two or three visits a year to each laboratory, and makes up his report from what the experimenting physiologists themselves tell him. There is a certificate in the Act which sets the experimenter free from reporting any experiment he does not choose to report. Is anything wanting to complete the farce?

I am tempted, but will forbear, to give the sickening details of some of the experiments made in the last two or three years in England under the shelter of the Licensing Act passed in 1876, some being literal dissectings alive, some lasting for weeks, and needing the keeping up of artificial respirations; dogs, cats, and rabbits were used.

I heard it well said a week or two ago that "the real difficulty of those who are fighting the cause of anti-vivisection rests in the multitude of good, earnest, conscientious, even religious men and women who think they are doing good service by putting force upon themselves when they oppose the cry against vivisection, because the doctors tell them it is necessary." All we can say to such is: "As you ask for mercy yourselves, we pray you, in the name of the All-Merciful One, search out this matter for yourselves."

Let no one be content with the usual conscience opiate: "Plenty of other things to work for. An Act was passed; the cruelties are exaggerated; it's a doctors' question." I write to a newspaper for so many years a representative of religious thought, because we do want more of the children of God in our ranks. We want a share of their time, their moral support, their money, and, above all, their prayers, that our long weary fight may now be speedily won.

All particulars and papers can be got from Mr. B. Bryan, Sec., Society for Protection of Animals from Vivisection, 20, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W. If any will join our Prayer Society (whose numbers are now increasing abroad, as well as at home), Miss Woodward, Hon. Sec., 158, Lancaster-road, Notting Hill, W., will gladly send card of membership.

It is a matter that urgently presses. It is a disgrace to our Christianity that vivisection has been for eighteen years licensed in England. It has been found to be a hindrance in India to the reception of our religion, and the apathy of professing Christians is a terrible stumbling-block in England. S. S. Monro.

EDINBURGH FREE BREAKFASTS.

A public meeting of the friends and supporters of Sabbath Free Breakfast Mission was held in Edinburgh last Thursday, and presided over by Rev. Dr. J. H. Wilson, Moderator Elect of the Free Church Assembly. The report, giving an account of the work of the past year, was submitted to the meeting. The number of guests on the Sunday mornings during the year was 44,956, giving a weekly average attendance of 864.

Dr. Wilson spoke of the fact that the Mission was now in the twenty-first year of its existence. He dwelt upon the good work being done, not only in bringing the Gospel to bear upon the lowest classes in the City, but in bringing the living personal influence of so many young Christian workers in contact with these poor people.

Sir William Muir, Principal of the University, and Rev. W. D. Moffat, told of what they themselves had seen at the breakfast meetings, and urged the claims of the Mission upon the sympathy and help of the Christian community. Dr. Carment pointed out that there was a great need of increased support being given to the Mission, so as to keep it free from debt. He mentioned the important fact—that all moneys given went direct to the funds of the Mission, there being no paid collectors, and consequently no per centage taken off the sums given.

Mr. Robert Wilson, 3, Queen-street, Edinburgh, the hon. treasurer, will be glad to receive help.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

This Mission has published its annual report In the district of Seven Dials and St. Giles extremes meet; visitors are brought into contact with poverty and crime on one hand, destitution and disease on the other. In some homes will be witnessed a hopeless strife against sorrow and death, while in others the uplifting power of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is revealed, in showing how suffering may be combined with holy joy and perfect peace. There are five Gospel services held at this Mission every week, a Bible class, a Sunday-school, and a mothers' meeting, at which the women are taught to cut out and make clothes for their children, and are at the same time instructed in the Scriptures. There is also a large Scripture Union class, numbering about 100, and a lending library.

We notice with regret that the Holiday House closed with a deficit of £30. One feels sad to think that this branch of the work may have to be curtailed. When the sunny days come, and happy youngsters are preparing for their holidays, the little ones of Seven Dials, whose lives all the year round have so little brightness in them, will be unable to have a brief sojourn in the country because the necessary funds are wanting. The superintendent is Dr. Latchford, 33, Short's-gardens, Endell-street, W.C.

BUCKS EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Mr. J. E. Taylor announces an all-day conference in the Assembly Hall, Aylesbury, on Good Friday. The subject chosen for the day is "The Deepening of Spiritual Life." Messrs. W. Graham Aspland, W. H. Newell, and others, will take part. A cordial invitation is given to any Christians who may be able to attend. Convenient trains run from Baker-street, London, returning the same evening.

VANS IN FOREIGN FAIRS.—The Caravan, organ of the Gospel Temperance Mission amongst the show people, has during the past year been printed in French and German, and distributed amongst the Continental show people. A correspondent from the Engadine, Switzerland, says: "We were deeply interested in The Caravan letter relative to the foreign issue. The workers who undertook to care for the show people at Grasse (just above Cannes, in the South of France) were so interested in them that when the fair opened at Christmas in the latter place they were again cared for, and other workers at Marseilles were stirred up to visit the winter fair here."

THE Y.M.C.A.

STAFFORD ROOMS ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of this Association was held on Friday, 28th ult., when Mr. T. Cheney Garfit presided over a large audience of members and friends. An excellent report of the work of the past year was presented, stating that there had been a large increase in the membership, and much progress had been made in the Bible-class work. Many young men had been led to the Saviour through the Association, and an earnest spirit prevailed among the workers. The great need at present was money enough to put the premises into a proper state of repair. Mr. Garfit, in the course of his remarks, referred with much satisfaction to the prominent place given at Stafford Rooms to Bible study. Mr. Robinson Souttar, of Oxford, also spoke, urging especially upon the young men present the importance of maintaining a high standard of Christian character, and pointing them to Him through whom alone their ideal could be realised. The meeting was a most encouraging one throughout.

BRIEF NOTES.

The new secretary at Hastings, Mr. J. G. Green, was welcomed at an interesting meeting held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on Thursday evening.

A well-attended meeting of the Lewes Association took place on Thursday evening, when Mr. Geo. Holmes, travelling secretary, addressed the members. The work here is in a healthy condition; one of the members has recently entered the foreign mission field.

The report of the Sydney Y.M.C.A. shows that there have been special trials, owing to the financial troubles of the city, and the consequent inability of many friends to help, but there has been faith in God, and zeal for the work, and many tokens of divine blessing.

A successful gathering of about 400 persons took place on Tuesday evening at the Deptford Yard Institute, Sunderland, which is affiliated with the North-Eastern District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s. A stirring Gospel address was given by Mr. W. M. Hudson. The travelling secretary, Mr. J. C. Moor, also took part in the meeting.

Rev. John MacNeill's mission at Calcutta has greatly benefited the Association there, and the evangelist has also rendered most valuable help to the project for erecting a commodious Y.M.C.A. building in Madras. Bombay is included in Mr. MacNeill's Indian tour, the city association taking a prominent part in the arrangements of the mission.

The North Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s held its half-yearly conference at Camden Town on the 29th ult., when important matters of business affecting the future working of the district were considered. A valuable discussion in relation to the usefulness of district organisation was introduced by Mr. Putterill, secretary of the Central Association.

The annual meeting of the Tottenham Association took place on March 28, and was presided over by Mr. Geo. Spicer, a member of the central committee. The report submitted showed great activity throughout the past year in every department of association work. Addresses were delivered by Mr. E. P. Huggett and Revs. H. Oliver Allbrook and W. E. Edmondson.

The annual meeting of the Bombay Y.M.C.A. has just taken place. The association has attained its majority, and has a membership of 500. Mr. Henry Conder, president, occupied the chair at the anniversary, and the new secretary, Mr. R. D. Pringle, emphatically affirmed his belief that the Y.M.C.A. must have no uncertain voice, and must ruthlessly and fiercely attack the trinity of evil in this city—(1) Drink; (2) Gambling; and (3) Impurity.

The Y.M.C.A. is striking rapidly and deeply its roots into Indian soil. Its recent annual convention in Madras, though not largely attended, revealed a rapid growth in the Association during the year, and the earnestness and hopefulness of its leading members and officers were significant of a bright future. A body of sixty million young men in this land ought to furnish an ample "sphere" for the Association, though it may not be so responsive a constituency as one could desire.

On March 21 there was an interesting meeting at the Preachers' Preparation Class at the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Mr. J. A. Stooke, of the China Inland Mission, spoke on China, and afterwards allowed himself to be questioned by both chairman and audience for nearly an hour. Questions and answers were gone through, and at the close it was judged to be a most profitable season for missionary evidence. Mr. Stooke has found this plan of great service elsewhere. At the Bath Y.M.C.A. he had a good straight talk with twenty or thirty young men on similar lines.

The Wakefield Association has completed its ninth year. At the annual members' meeting an encouraging report was given, emphasising the fact that spiritual work in the Y.M.C.A. is the most successful of all its methods. Many young men in Wakefield have been won for Christ during the past year. A growing missionary spirit is also very manifest. One member is supported in China by the Association, and two others have gone out and are in direct touch with the home members. There is a very satisfactory increase in the membership. The annual meeting was most impressive and spiritual in tone. The hall was crowded. Addresses were given by Dr. Gladstone, and Mr. Robinson Souttar.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Y.W.C.A. at Schwifat, Lebanon, goes on well. Fourteen of the members have become Sunday-school teachers, and a Gleaners' Union has been formed.

The Windsor and Eton Association reports great encouragement in the Bible classes and other meetings. The homestead had forty boarders last year.

The Derby Branch reports 458 members in its various branches; with active and fruitful work in many directions. Missionary matters and evangelistic effort are taken up enthusiastically.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Brentwood Y.W.C.A. took place on Thursday week, at the Baptist Tabernacle. The chairman, Rev. T. Macdougall Mundle, having given an address on the three words, "Prayer," "Bible," and "Christ," the secretary (Miss Perry) read the annual report. Revs. W. Walker and W. Legerton gave addresses.

The annual social meeting for Highland young women was held in the Y.W.C.A. Institute, 80, Bath-street, Glasgow, on March 29. There were about 170 present, and the addresses and singing were in Gaelic. Rev. Dr. Blair, Rev. Wm. Fraser, Captain McLean, Mrs. Hatfield, and others spoke, and Mr. C. Brown and three ladies sang hymns from Songs and Solos translated into Gaelic.

The Leamington Spa Y.W.C.A. Homes provide a comfortable and Christian home for young girls employed in houses of business, afford a temporary home when out of employment, a holiday home for governesses and Christian workers, and a home for trained nursing staff. The Home has now completed its twentieth year. During 1894 eighty-two have found a home there, some as residents, others as visitors, and continual have been the testimonies to rest, refreshment, and blessing received.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The first meeting of the Flintshire Union was lately held at the English Presbyterian Church, Flint,

For several months past a very successful Gospel mission for women has been carried on at Tredegar by a few lady Endeavourers.

A special united prayer meeting was lately held in connection with the Reading and District Union in the Castle-street Congregational Chapel, Reading.

Revs. Henry Montgomery and J. D. Lamont, of Belfast, have been invited to represent Ireland at the great Christian Endeavour Convention in Boston, in July next.

The Bridgend and District Union held its annual meeting at Carey Chapel, Tondu, on March 18. There are now four societies in the union, with ninety-nine active and forty-three associate members. In the evening a public meeting was held, when papers of an interesting character were given.

The second annual convention of the Warrington and District Union was held in the Wycliffe Congregational Church, Warrington. At the afternoon conference, an address was given by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, Miss Jessie Howden, and Mr. Hope. The evening meeting was presided over by Rev. J. Yonge.

The second annual convention of the Huddersfield and District Union was recently held in the Lockwood Baptist Chapel. The afternoon conference was presided over by Rev. E. Evans. A paper was read by Mr. F. W. Dearden on "The Relation of the Y.P.S.C.E. to Missions." Rev. George Archer presided at the evening meeting. Three addresses were given—by Rev. F. Oliver on "Witnesses"; by Rev. John Hedley on "Our Influence"; and by Mr. Fred Dyson on "Our Pledge."

ST. MALO SAILORS' REST.—In November last the mission-hall suddenly collapsed, the loft above, used by a tent-maker, having been much overweighted by storage of ship's biscuits, etc. Providentially, no lives were lost, but all the furniture, including organ and harmonium, chairs, etc., was a wreckage. Only 1100fs. (£44) has been obtained as compensation. This does not cover the loss, and as the hall is now rebuilt for the use of seafaring men, any help will be gladly received by the Hon. E. Henniker Major, British Vice-Consulate, St. Malo.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The fifth Annual International Temperance Congress will be held at Bâle on Aug. 20, 21, and 22.

The leading temperance advocates in the Australian Colonies held a conference lately in Hobart, for the extension of the work.

The Irish manufacturers of liquor are conducting a vigorous agitation to obtain the repeal of the extra duties on beer and spirits imposed last year.

A Temperance Congress for Surrey is to be held at Guildford on Tuesday, April 30, and Wednesday, May 1, when a great variety of papers will be read and discussed.

"Wings," the organ of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, for the current month contains a portrait of Mrs. Hilton, of the Stepney Crêche, and a readable sketch of her life and service.

A conference took place in Leeds on Wednesday week, under the auspices of the Yorkshire branches of the National B.W.T.A., which has now fifty-two branches. The public meeting in the evening was largely attended.

In a recent interview with a correspondent of The Christian Commonwealth, Dr. Marcus Dods expressed the conviction that drink is at the root of all our social misery. He would welcome any legislation that promised relief, even the Gothenburg system.

A new and important feature of the National Council meetings of the British Women's Temperance Association will consist in devotional services on Sunday, June 16, which will be set apart for special meetings under the auspices of the Association in over 200 places of worship and halls in London and the suburbs.

An interesting sketch of Sherborne Prison for Women, U.S.A., is given in The Woman's Signal, by Lady Henry Somerset, who describes her interview with the warden, during her recent visit to America. The wise and humanising discipline by which the prisoners are governed has had surprising results in the moral elevation of the inmates.

The Belgian Senate, convinced that free trade in intoxicants is a failure, has for some time been seeking a way restricting the trade in alcohol. There is reason to believe that both in Belgium and France the liquor trade will soon be placed under stricter control. Alcoholism is increasing so rapidly in both these countries that their statesmen have to choose practically between control or national decay.

Lord Wemyss has introduced a Bill into the House of Lords, which, if it were to pass, would at once alter the status of the licensed victualler. On the grounds that "doubts have arisen as to the discretionary powers of licensing justices," he wishes it to be enacted that licensing justices shall not be at liberty to refuse the renewal or transfer of licences now existing except on grounds of misconduct.

Strong drink pays no respect to persons, and when taken produces its effect on minister and people alike. This is sadly illustrated by a case in the North. After four days' hearing of evidence, the Presbytery of Lewis gave judgment on six different charges of drunkenness against the minister of the quoad sacra parish of Knock, Stornoway. He was unanimously found guilty, and was suspended from the ministry pending an appeal.

Licence or no licence? This is being fought out in Boston, U.S.A. Dr. Beach, of Cambridge, and Dr. Plumb, of Boston, have had a joint public debate, Dr. Beach arguing for the Norwegian plan of liquor selling, and Dr. Plumb against it. It is feared that the Norwegian plan will make rum-selling respectable, without sensibly diminishing the present evils of dram-drinking, that it is halting at a substitute-measure and not really advancing.

Dr. Whitford, a Liverpool J.P., has been pointing out that a decrease in the number of arrests for drunkenness does not necessarily mean a diminution of drinking. In his own opinion the slum dwellers to-day are more degraded and more drunken than at any period within his experience. Insurance money is often an unmitigated curse, meaning an occasion for orgies—a whole court sometimes being given over to drunkenness in connection with a funeral.

Great indignation has been aroused in Belfast and the neighbourhood by the proposal to erect drinking bars at the forthcoming Industrial Exhibition, the proceeds of which are to go towards the Working Men's Institute and Temperance Hall. The Irish Temperance League offered £150 for the space, and also all the profits which it would make by the sale of tea and coffee, and other non-intoxicating beverages. This has been refused by the committee, and a tender for £525 to set up a drinking bar has been accepted. To protest against this gross inconsistency, as well as to try and remove the temptation which such bars would be to the young people visiting the Exhibition, several largely attended public meetings have been held, and the City Council has been memorialised not to allow the public property in which the Exhibition is about to be held to be licensed for drinking purposes.

ABNEGATION OF SELF.

Love took up the harp of life, and smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the cord of Self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight.

Tennyson.

Abnegation of self is an indispensable duty on the part of all who are called by the name of Christ, and are seeking success and blessing in Christian life and work. "I am crucified with Christ," says the Apostle Paul. "Nethertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ, liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20). These words indicate a spirit of holy abnegation which ought to permeate and characterise the daily life and work of every child of God. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which you have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20).

What is a yielded life?
A life no longer mine;
But crucified henceforth to sin,
"Self" no more reigns supreme therein.
He now through me can shine.

Kennington, S.E. Thomas Douglas.

IRISH NOTES.

The Ulster Society for the Education of Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, which has passed its jubilee, continues to do a good work. It has now 126 children under its care.

The Protestant Orphan Society for Antrim and Down is doing a most praiseworthy work. It has now 703 children under its care, and its expenditure last year was £3558.

The Methodist Missionary Anniversaries were held throughout Ireland last week. About 200 centres were visited by the various members of the deputation, several of whom were returned missionaries from China, India, or Africa. As the result a widespread interest in missions has been stirred up.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. W. M. Clow, Free South Church, Aberdeen, urges the institution of deaconesses in the Free Church on the lines of the order in the Established Church.

The Church of Scotland Women's Guild had its annual conference in Aberdeen last week; the meetings were largely attended, and the report showed an increase of over sixty branches.

Mr. MacKeith, treasurer of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, has received £1800 from "A Friend," for the purchase of another home for the Children's Fresh-Air Fortnight Scheme.

Sunday, March 31, was observed as children's day throughout the Free Churches of Scotland, and addresses or sermons to young people were delivered at the ordinary hours of service on the history of the Church.

A party of 138 lads from Mr. Quarrier's Homes left Glasgow on Friday for Canada, per Allan Liner Siberian. A farewell meeting was held at 10 a.m. in the Christian Institute, Preceptor Dickson presiding, and was largely attended.

A prolonged conference took place last week between the Congregationalist and E.U. churches in Glasgow. Keen interest was manifested in the discussion of union, and by a large majority it was resolved to go on with negotiations.

A conference is to be held on Saturday afternoon, April 20, in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, in which societies of Christian workers unite. Rev. Henry Montgomery, Col. Oldham, Mr. H. A. Campbell, Mr. W. M. Oatts, and others are expected.

The directors of the Y.M.C.A. Club, or Boarding House for Young Men, have been much encouraged in launching the enterprise. Over £20,000 has been subscribed privately, and the plans are nearly completed. It is expected that the building will be commenced early in June. Many of the readers of The Christian have taken an interest in the company.

The congregation of the Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow, vacant by the resignation of Rev. John Robertson, have united in sending a call to Rev. D. C. MacNicol, of Dunipace, to be their pastor, and Mr. MacNicol has intimated his intention to accept the pastorate. In the immediate vicinity of the Garbols Tabernacle, there is a population of 75,000, among whom several churches are at work.

PERSONALIA.

Bishop Thoburn, of India, is about to pay another visit to the United States to raise funds for the Indian work.

Rev. J. Mackay, F.C. Minister, Cromarty, N.B., is about to resign his charge and devote himself to evangelistic work in the Highlands.

Mr. R. Speer and Mr. J. R. Mott, so well known in connection with the Student Volunteer movement in America, are purposing soon to visit India.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe purposes to take three months' holiday this autumn. The time will be spent on a trip with Mrs. Webb-Peploe to America, in order to visit their two sons there.

Mr. Opie Rodway has been ill since January, and unable to attend to any mission engagements. He is still, we regret to learn, suffering from the effects of a trying cough and sleeplessness.

Mr. Gnanamutthu Joseph Israel, of the Madras Tamil Mission, is about to visit this country again. He was to leave Madras on March 28 per s.s, Clan Macpherson. His address in England is 29, Botanical-road, Sheffield.

Rev. Dr. Landels.—A scheme is on foot among some of the Baptist Associations of Australia to invite Rev. Dr. Landels, of Edinburgh, to visit the colonies. The veteran minister has just retired from active work after a most successful ministry extending over forty years.

Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, who expects to be in London the first half of May, would be glad to find opportunities of speaking on mission schools, the training of young men, and other work he has in hand. He may be addressed Calle Almudena, 3, Madrid.

Miss Louisa Procter, of the Schwifat Schools, Lebanon, who expects to visit London in June and July, will be glad to speak at drawing-room meetings during her brief stay. The Hon. Sec. of the Bible Lands Society, 7, Adam-street, London, W.C., will be pleased to hear from any who could give Miss Procter opportunity to speak on missions in Bible Lands.

Mildmay Trustees.—Col. Morton announces that Mr. R. Hart Dyke and Capt. W. H. Dawson have responded to the invitation of the Mildmay Trustees to become fellow-helpers with them in their charge of this important work. The needs of Mildmay increase, whether viewed in the light of its religious and benevolent work amongst the poor of London, or as an Evangelical centre for the training of workers who, like Phœbe of old, desire to labour with Christ's ministers in the Gospel of the grace of God.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held at Wexford by Rev. Jno. Good, Methodist evangelist; and at Edgarstown, near Portadown, by Rev. Wm. Maguire and others.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey closed their fruitful mission at Dallas, Texas, and were, at latest advices, having large meetings at Meridian, Miss. After visiting Fort Worth, they were to proceed to Mexico.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has completed a fifteen days' mission at North Finchley. A special feature of the work has been his Sunday morning meetings for "men only." Direct cases of conversion can be traced to these meetings.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—A five days' mission was conducted by Rev. W. F. Holt, of Birmingham, in the Central Hall, from March 25 to 29. During the meetings many decided to take the Divine Companion into their lives, besides much quickening being felt amongst the workers. It was only regretted that the mission could not be continued.

Stratford.—Mr. W. R. Lane was the speaker on Sunday evening in the Town Hall, on the occasion of the last evangelistic service of the winter series in that building. The spacious hall was crowded a good while before the time for beginning, two-thirds of the congregation being men. The word was with power. On Saturday he begins at Leeds.

Mr. Newton Jones has completed a week's mission services at Calvert-street Chapel, Norwich, in connection with the Sunday School Union. The afternoon Bible readings were a great help to many. The children's meetings were well attended. The meeting for adults each evening was largely attended, and many were seriously impressed.—John Clarke.

Mrs. Baeyertz.—The second week of this lady's mission in Paisley has been remarkable in many ways. All the week through the Free High was crowded, particularly so when she re-delivered her address on "The Passion." The afternoon Bible reading has been largely attended, and much appreciated by Christians. The after-meetings have been largely taken advantage of.

Rev. F. W. Beaumont has conducted a ten days' mission at Kingsand, Devonport, which has proved eminently successful. All the services were well attended, and several professed conversion. An interesting feature was the stimulus it gave to temperance work, twenty or twenty-five adults having signed the pledge either during or since the mission. Open-air services by the picturesque beach were enjoyed by the fishermen, and every night a contingent of soldiers from the surrounding forts attended.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse.—Mr. Henry Thorne concluded a three months' mission here last Sunday. During the mission we have had repeated tokens of Divine blessing, and although the number of inquirers has not been so large as on former occasions, we believe that solid good has resulted from the evangelist's labours. Mr. Thorne has also conducted a weekly service among the boys at Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Stepney Causeway, preached several times at the Girls' Village Homes at Ilford, and given Bible readings at Deaconess House, Bow.

S. E. Burrow.

Warrington.—A week's mission to children and young people in this town has been held, with the most blessed results. The Children's Special Service Mission undertook the mission, and sent Mr. S. J. Hewlett to conduct it. The meetings were held in Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church (Rev. Edward T. Reed, pastor). From the very beginning there were evidences of God's blessing, and day after day numerous conversations were held with inquirers. The names of upwards of 120 were registered at the various meetings, representing twenty-one different churches and mission-rooms. Altogether the mission has been the means of blessing to many.

Rev. John H. Elliot, of Clifton Springs, N.Y., and B. Frank Butts are closing a very successful mission in Sherbrooke, Quebec. The gatherings have increased in numbers, interest, and power from the beginning. The four inviting pastors with their people have worked earnestly with them, and the blessing looked for has come. A notable feature has been the Wednesday rally days, when prayer meetings were held in about twenty-five neighbourhoods at 9 a.m., with preaching at 10 a.m., at 3.30 and 7.30 p.m. Without attempting to "number the people" it may be said that a large number have manifested a definite purpose by public confession.

Robert Lennie, Pastor.

First Baptist Church, Clifton Springs.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following Missions have been arranged for April. It is hoped they will made a subject of prayer:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, April 7-14, Norwich Cathedral; April 21 to May 6, Chesham; Rev. Joseph Morris, M.D., March 23 to April 8, Parish Church, Newhaven; Rev. F. E. Rogers, April 20-29, Fakenham; Rev. E. Bacheler Russell, April 20 to 30, St. Philip's, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.; Rev. James Stephens, March 23 to April 5, Lonan, Isle of Man; April 6-14, Carnforth, Lancs.; April 27 to May 10, Six Mile Bottom, Little Wilbraham.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN IRELAND.

It affords us very genuine pleasure to be able to say that we know of some excellent results from the Open Air Work in some of our provincial towns. We do not allude to any visible impression yet made upon Roman Catholics; but to the ingathering of lukewarm and in some instances godless Protestants. This is a work of the first importance, and we wish it every success. The Protestant who has never known what it is to be a child of God is a standing barrier between Roman Catholics and their Saviour. They take him as a type of Protestant Christianity, compare their own lives with his, and may well be excused for declining to make their last state worse than the first. The violence and opposition at first experienced by our devoted brethren seem to be disappearing. With prudence and tact, and loving dependence upon Him who stilled the storm, we may well hope for even greater results in the future.—The Catholic.

MADAGASCAR MISSIONS.—The Protestant missions here are continuing their work, says an Antananarivo correspondent of The Manchester Guardian, and some of those at the out-stations say they are having greater success than before. The Queen and Prime Minister are constantly putting themselves in evidence at chapel openings, special services, and prayer meetings.

THE MADURA MISSION reports a healthful progress in the churches. Over 800 additions to the Christian congregations are reported, and over 300 to the churches on confession of faith. One very striking feature is the fact that the additions to the churches come from thirty different castes, showing a wide prevalence of the Gospel, and giving the greatest promise of reaching the entire population at an early date. The fact that there are now over 4000 communicants scattered throughout the entire population of about 2,000,000 shows a preparation for evangelisation that may well prompt to enlarged effort on behalf of this people.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. J. R. Harmer has been chosen for the bishopric of Adelaide.

The Bishop of Llandaff has refused to institute a young clergyman presented to Llanhileth, on the ground that he cannot speak Welsh.

After thirteen years' ministry at St. Philip's, Clerkenwell, Rev. J. S. Jones is exchanging parishes with Rev. A. D. J. Robinson, of Colby, near Norwich.

The report issued by Rev. C. E. Storrs, of Ellacombe, Torquay, shows a large amount of earnest and fruitful work, and a remarkable hold on the working men.

Consett, in the county of Durham, can boast of sending out two East African missionaries—viz., D. S. Remington, who died there soon after he reached the Mission in 1875, and A. R. Steggall, working at present at Taveta.

The East London Fund received in 1894 £18,782, £400 more than the income of 1893, and the largest income ever received in one year. The expenditure was £18,905, and the expenditure for the present year is estimated at £18,100.

Mr. John Shrimpton, secretary of the Church Book Soc., who has been on the Riviera for the past few months, is gradually regaining strength after his long illness of last year, and anticipates being able to resume work after Easter.

The Church Army Van officers closed a fortnight's evangelistic services in the parish of St. Paul's, Darlington, on Sunday. The meetings throughout have been well attended, and much blessing received, as the testimony meeting at the close proved.

Bishop Hornby, who is retired as curate-in-charge of the little country parish of Bertley-on-Tyne, has refused two offers of Suffragan-Bishoprics in England, and has placed himself in the hands of the Archbishop for service abroad in the near future.

Bishop Newnham, of Moosonee, the like-minded successor of Bishop Horden, who left Moose in September last, is now in Montreal trying to arouse interest in the work of his diocese. When the rivers open in May he proposes to start from Winnipeg on his long summer visitation, paddling over 2,000 miles while visiting his distant stations.

An interesting meeting was held at Mrs. Carmichael's house, 16, Grenville-place, on Monday, on behalf of the London Police-court Mission of the C.E.T.S. Mr. Curtis Bennett, magistrate of the West London Court, presided, and bore testimony to the value of the work of the Mission. Mrs. Temple spoke forcibly of the work of the Women's Union of the C.E.T.S., which maintains mission women to minister to their own sex.

Rev. H. Oliver Allbrook, Principal of the Operative Jewish Converts' Institute, desires to call attention to the present needs of the Institution:—"The acquisition of other premises (necessitated by the sale of Palestine-place) will be a very serious charge upon our limited resources. It is interesting to notice the cosmopolitan character of our work. Wherever there are missionaries to Jews, thence we receive applicants for admission. A glance at our register of inmates shows Russia, Austria, Germany, Holland, France, Roumania, Syria, Palestine, Turkey, Morocco, and the United Kingdom."

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel has been opened at Rochdale.

At Heaton Moor a new chapel is being built.

A new church has been formed at Anfield, Liverpool.

Mr. H. C. Wallace has conducted a twenty-one days' mission at Plumpton.

Rev. W. St. John Crickmer has been recognised as pastor of Swanley Junction Church.

St. Helens Church reports 461 members, an increase of thirty-five during the past year.

Rev. W. G. Lawes, of New Guinea, is to receive the degree of D.D. from Glasgow University.

Rev. T. Maine, late of Ashby-de-la-Zouche, has been recognised as pastor of Stannary Church, Halifax.

Rev. Charles James, of Ryde, has sailed for Cape Town, en route to Bloemfontein, Orange Free State.

Rev. James Hall has been recognised as pastor of the united churches of Henstridge and Templecombe.

Dr. Leach has felt he must decline the call to Stepney Meeting House, owing to his responsibilities at Queen's Park.

Rev. T. Williams, of Birdbush, has been compelled to relinquish ministerial work temporarily on account of continued ill-health.

Highbury Quadrant Church (Rev. W. J. Dawson) reports 517 members; in the branch churches at Britannia-row and Highbury-vale there are 201, and eighty-five communicants. The Bible-classes at the parent church have 450 scholars, with forty-two officers and teachers; in the branch churches there are 1088 Sunday scholars, with sixty-nine teachers.

At a drawing-room meeting held last week at Sir G. Newnes' house on Putney Heath, in connection with the Canning Town University Settlement, Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., related how the settlement had grown out of a desire to find practical work for the students of Mansfield College, Oxford, amongst the poor of the East End of London. Mr. Percy Alden, resident warden of Mansfield House, Miss Cheetham, head of the woman's establishment, and Dr. Margaret Pearce, lady resident physician of the hospital, delivered addresses.

Calls.—Rev. D. Adams, of Bethesda, to Grove-street, Liverpool; Rev. John Pate, of Newburn, to Sheffield; Rev. R. H. Townend, of Hull, to Barnard Castle; Mr. A. J. Pearse, to Trowbridge.

Resignations.—Mr. A. Ore, of Wheatley, Oxon; Rev. H. H. Carlisle, of South Cliff, Scarborough; Rev. C. A. Mines, of Highfield, Rock Ferry.

BAPTIST.

Rev. H. E. Sadler has been recognised as pastor of Raunds Church.

Rev. L. C. Parkinson has been welcomed at George-street, Nottingham.

Romney-street, Westminster, reports thirty-four received into fellowship last year.

Mission services have been held at Wycliff Chapel, Reading, by Rev. H. J. Preece.

Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, has been suffering from influenza.

Rev. D. J. Llewellyn has been recognised as pastor of Florence-road Church, Brighton.

Elm-grove Church, Portsmouth, reports sixty-four members admitted during the year.

Rev. A. Mills, of St. Mary's Gate, Derby, has been ordered to take a rest on account of continued ill-health.

St. Mary's-road, Faversham, reports thirty-three new members added to the church last year. A new mission has been started in the Brents.

Mr. Charlesworth and his choir of boys are conducting this week special meetings on behalf of the Spurgeon Orphan Homes in Devonshire and Cornwall.

In North-street Church, Leeds, fifteen candidates were baptized on Sunday week. Nearly all were from the Sunday-school. During the last eleven months thirty have been immersed.

Rev. H. Dickens has closed an eight years' pastorate of the church at Herne Bay, having joined the staff of the North Africa Mission. During his ministry there have been many tokens of God's blessing.

During the cyclone of Sunday week a portion of Pulham St. Mary Chapel fell and buried the Rev. G. B. Dearle, minister, who was conducting the service, up to the waist, so seriously injuring him that he died on Tuesday.

Intelligence has been received of the death of Mrs. R. M. Julian, in Marseilles Harbour, while returning with her husband, Rev. R. M. Julian, from India. She was a daughter of the late Professor Goadby, of the Nottingham College.

An invitation to return to the pastorate of South-street Baptist Church, Greenwich, has been sent to Rev. Charles Spurgeon, who is now visiting and strengthening the churches of South Africa. Many are anxiously awaiting his reply.

News has been received of the baptism of no less than seventy-three converts at Aqua Town, West Coast of Africa. The progress since the Cameroon Christians took upon themselves the support of their own religious services is felt to be most encouraging.

Mr. J. Othen, jun., delivered, a few days ago, a lecture on "The Bible versus Sacerdotalism in the Public Schools," at the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Shepherd's Bush. Mr. S. W. Brett presided over a fairly large audience. The pastor, Rev. F. B. Monti, and Mr. Geo. Hinchcliff took part.

It is stated that The Examiner and The Christian Inquirer, two Baptist organs in New York, have amalgamated, and will henceforth be published under the name of The Examiner. The Examiner recently incorporated The National Baptist, and The Christian Inquirer is a consolidation of The Baptist Weekly and The Gospel Age. Five papers have thus been rolled into one.

Telegrams, dated February 25 and March 4, received at the Baptist Mission House, announce the retirement of Mr. and Mrs. Drake, Mrs. Harmon and family, the Whitewrights, Bruces, Mr. Conling, Dr. Paterson, and Zenana ladies from their stations to Tientsin; and that all the rest had arrived safely in that city, with the exception of Mr. Jones, Mr. Harmon, Mr. and Mrs. Smythe, and Mr. Burt, who are remaining in Chow Ping. These telegrams do not relate to the missionaries in Shansi or Shensi; but tidings have come of Mr. Morgan, who, after a journey of 105 days, has reached T'si Nan, Shensi, in safety.

Call.—Mr. D. Williams, of Pontypridd, to Llanstephan.

Resignations.—Rev. R. P. Javan, of New Basford, Notts; Rev. J. Roberts, of Cefn Bychan, Ruabon; Rev. Jno. Harries, of Blaenavon.

METHODIST.

Rev. M. T. Myers, of Rochdale, on account of protracted illness, has asked to be released from his pastorate.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse has been lecturing on "Hugh Latimer" at Brixton-hill for the Local Preachers' Aid Association.

In Burley-in-Wharfdale, a ten days' mission has been held by Mr. C. Knight, district evangelist, and many persons decided for Christ each evening.

One of the oldest Primitive Methodist ministers, Rev. N. W. Stafford, is about to retire from the active work of the ministry after some years of service.

Rev. W. Hodson Smith, of the Liverpool Mission, having returned from his five weeks' rest on the Continent thoroughly recovered, has recommenced his work.

Miss Stephenson, daughter of Rev. Dr. Stephenson, conducted special services at Wesley Church, Reading, on Sunday week, on behalf of the Children's Home and Orphanage.

At Sale, Mr. Arthur Norman has been holding special services. His very original and telling manner of putting truth attracted the attention of many who seldom hear the Gospel. The presence of God was very specially manifested, and numbers were drawn into the Gospel net.

Mr. H. Price Hughes, says the Advance, following the Welsh custom, has arranged two sermons to be preached at the morning service in St. James's Hall on May 3 in connection with the anniversary of the West London Mission. Dr. Maclaren will preach at 11 and Dr. Parker at 1 o'clock.

Rev. H. T. Chapman, the superintendent of the Lady-lane Mission, Leeds, is the subject of an interview in the Free Methodist. The Special Commissioner describes the condition of the congregation prior to the commencement of the mission, with the signs of progress since the new departure. "Our afternoon service," he says, "is an entirely new feature, the average attendance during last mission year being 578. The average evening congregation is 630."

Among recent arrivals in England was Rev. S. Pollard, who has been engaged about seven years as a missionary to China. During that time he has laboured in the province of Yun-nan, which is on the borders of Burmah. In consequence of almost insuperable difficulties, converts have not been numerous, but satisfactory progress has nevertheless been made. Mr. Pollard considers that the safety of the missionaries has been increased by the war between Japan and China, the mandarins being now in fear of the foreign war vessels.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. M. Smith has celebrated his first anniversary at Swindon.

The work in Jersey, under the care of Rev. W. B. Macleod, is being much prospered.

The John Knox Stepney Church held its annual meeting week, with much enthusiasm.

The "Etal case," which has caused Presbyterians in the North much anxiety, has at length been settled.

The annual meeting of St. John's, Kensington, showed much to encourage. The members now number 267.

The missionaries in Swatow are giving thanks for a year of fruitful work. The ingathering numbers about 120, the largest year's harvest they have ever had.

Rev. T. G. Molyneux, formerly minister at Workington, who has resigned his charge close to Sydney, owing to the failure of his wife's health, is returning to England.

The Pastoral Letter on "Sacerdotalism," prepared by Rev. Dr. McGaw, and issued by authority of the Synod, has excited considerable interest outside the denomination. The English Churchman reprints it in full; another Church paper expresses the wish that Convocation would issue just such an address.

A fruitful mission has been held at Lambeth Church. Amongst the results we read that a Christian lady prevailed on her sister, who had not been in a church for many years, to come and hear the good news. The power of God broke her heart, the light of life dawned upon her soul, and she is now confessing Christ.

A neatly-got-up book was shown to the Foreign Missions Committee at last week's meeting, a credit to the Taiwanfoo Mission Press, and a notable achievement of Mr. Ede, its editor. The foundation of the book is a Chinese primer, which is given in the Chinese character—the first book put into the hands of those who set themselves to learn the written Chinese. Mr. Ede adds the meaning of each character, and its sound, the latter as it is read in South China.

Calls.—Rev. J. B. Thomas, of Carmarthen, to St. Clears; Rev. James Martin, of Glasgow, to Nairn (accepted); Mr. D. Richard, to Gowerton; Rev. D. Arnott, of Dunfermline, to Rattray; Rev. J. Mansie, of Aberdeen, to Viewforth, Edinburgh.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

We regret to learn that Joseph and Kate Taylor have to leave their loved work in India for a season, on account of the health of the latter. They will be home for the yearly meeting.

Professor J. Rendel Harris has returned from the United States, after delivering a successful course of lectures there on "New Testament and Early Christian Manuscripts." His Gospel and other addresses in meetings were highly valued.

In The Friend for last week correspondents urge the need for clearness of doctrinal view, and the facing of burning questions by men who have "understanding of the times." Many opportunities in the past have been missed for want of such men.

It will interest many to hear that Joseph and Marianna Pim, who have rendered such service in evangelistic work in France, hope to revisit villages along the Seine in their mission boat during the coming summer. Previous service of this sort has been much blessed.

Considerable activity in lecturing is shown by The Friend. Jonathan Backhouse Hodgkin has dealt with "Worship," at Leeds; Frederick Andrews on "A Visit to the East" in York; John Sims, of Madagascar, at Chipping Norton; Frank Dymond on various sides of Temperance, in different places, and Wm. Hobson on "Men with a Mission," at Willesden.

Friends everywhere will hear with sorrow of the death of the venerable Martha Braithwaite, wife of Joseph Bevan Braithwaite, of London, and one of the true mothers in Israel. She had reached the age of 72 years, yet the decease was rather sudden and unexpected. The bereaved husband and family will greatly feel the loss. Many valuable Friends have recently passed away. Deceased was sister of the late George Gillett.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Queen Regent of the Netherlands has given the Army a donation of 300 florins.

The General is now visiting Holland. He returns this week to resume his campaign through the British Isles.

British Guiana is to be opened immediately; officers have been selected, and leave England on April 10, to commence operations in Georgetown.

In South America in some of the towns authority has been granted for the Salvation Army officers to visit the gaols and hold meetings with the prisoners.

The Salvation Army in Sweden have a corps in Stockholm composed entirely of deaf mutes, numbering about 400, which hold two well-attended meetings every week.

The Government of Western Australia has recently given the Army two plots of land in different places in the colony on which to erect buildings for the furtherance of their social work.

According to recent advices from Canada, the Salvation Army is immediately commencing operations amongst the Red Indians. It has also been decided to open a corps for the coloured people in Canada, under the leadership of coloured officers.

Commissioner Railton, who has recently gone to commence Salvation Army operations in Madrid, has succeeded in getting an Act of Constitution passed by the authorities which recognises the work of the Salvation Army as one of the established institutions of the country.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Fishguard, on 24th ult., Rev. W. Jones, pastor of Hermon Chapel, ex-president of the Welsh Baptist Union, a devoted and faithful minister of Christ.—At Old Basford, Mr. J. Oldham, aged eighty-six, who until five years ago was most active in Christian work.—At Garston, Staffs, on 21st ult., Rev. W. Keene, aged sixty-six, vicar of the parish, and formerly C.M.S. missionary at Umritsur.—At the Rectory, Queen's-road, Manchester, on 24th ult., Mrs. Horsefield, wife of Rev. F. J. Horsefield, and an earnest helper.—At Dorsington, Glos., on 20th ult., Rev. W. L. Smith, aged sixty-eight, rector of the parish.—At Southport, aged sixty, Rev. Benjamin Bond, Congregational minister for fifteen years at Skelmersdale.—At Combe-Martin, on 24th ult., Rev. E. A. Brooks, aged seventy-six, a devoted and useful clergyman.—In Liverpool, on 18th ult., Mrs. Groome, aged ninety, well known as a noble giver to Christian and charitable institutions.—At Margate, Mr. James Silk, an earnest Christian.—At Sheffield, Mr. Isaac Jackson, for over fifty years a useful worker.—At Small Heath, Mr. S. Wren, a leader and preacher.—At Ludlow, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Goodman; the husband had been a local preacher forty years.—At Bardsley, Rev. H. S. Bryth, vicar of the parish for thirty-three years.—At Wellingborough, on 21st ult., suddenly, during a Gospel service, Mr. John Bloor aged seventy-one, a true believer.—At Leicester, Mr. H. Kemp, aged seventy-four, a worker for many years.—At Bradford-on-Avon, Mr. S. Gayton, a leading local worker.—At North Bradley, Mr. Job Randall, for thirty years an active Sunday-school worker—At Bury St. Edmunds, Mrs. Ridley, aged seventy-five, deeply mourned as a wise counsellor, a helper of the sick and aged, and worker among the poor.—At North Curry, Rev. John Hunt, aged ninety, formerly and for many years minister at Croyde.—At Largy, near Crumlin, co. Antrim, Mr. Jno. Knox, a faithful Methodist class-leader and an earnest Christian worker, aged fifty-six years.—At Dublin, Jane, widow of Rev. Wm. Macgarvey, Methodist Minister, aged eighty years.

Appeals.

The Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association appeals earnestly for help with subscriptions, as the funds are exhausted in helping poor deaf-mute brethren of all denominations who are out of employment and sick.—Maurice F. G. Hewson, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

Knitting Competitions and the M.D.S.F.—A lady, deeply interested in fishermen, offers prizes for the best-knitted stockings, helmets, comforters, mittens, etc., the articles to go to the Mission. Particulars of the competitions may be had by sending stamped envelope to Miss Z. Jameson, Estella, Hull.

Lincoln Fair.—The North Midland Evangelistic Mission will take their stand at the Great April Fair, Lincoln (April 20-28). Grants of Bibles, Testaments, booklets, tracts, &c., will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mr. Oliver Vann, High-street, Lincoln.

A CHARMING PIECE OF AUTOBIOGRAPHY, BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"This volume reminds us of Dr. John G. Paton's Autobiography in its freshness and charm, in its frankness yet reticence, in the success with which personal narratives are denuded of all unpleasing egotism, and are made to redound to the glory of an all-sufficient Saviour."—The Freeman.

CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHEST DISEASES.

EIGHTY-SIXTH INTERVIEW,

With Mr. G. MOUSLEY, 20, High-street, Aston New Town, Birmingham.

EXHAUSTING WINTER COUGH, Etc.

Two cases—one referred to in the Appendix to Mr. Congreve's work on "Consumption," p. 48; the other not published before.

Few things are more distressing or more difficult to conquer by ordinary means than a confirmed winter cough. Day after day, during perhaps six months of the year, the sufferer endures almost perpetual misery, which seems to make life scarcely worth the living. For this complaint there is only one grand remedy—"Congreve's Balsamic Elixir;" and thousands have proved its efficacy after everything else has failed to give relief.

Writing some years ago to Mr. Congreve, the gentleman, whose name and address are given above, and who is a well-known old-established tradesman in Birmingham, said: "Your medicine has done wonders for me. I had a confirmed chronic winter cough which exhausted me. I am sixty-six years of age, and feel I could run up a good long hill now. It seems a marvellous medicine. I am never without it. A dose or two keeps off many a cold."

I found Mr. Mousley attending to his business on one of the bitterest days in February, and asked him whether, after a considerable lapse of time, he could confirm the testimony he had already given.

"Yes," he replied; "it is quite true. I am now over seventy-seven years of age, and have good health. I am quite free from the cough from which I used to suffer before taking Mr. Congreve's remedy."

Asked as to whether he had personally known any other case of chest disease cured by the same means, Mr. Mousley said:—

"I remember a really remarkable cure effected by Mr. Congreve's treatment. A man who lived near me at Handsworth was desperately ill with Consumption. The doctor who was attending him said nothing more could be done for him. I happened to have some of the medicine by me, and gave it to him. He was enabled through some help given him from a church in the neighbourhood to continue the treatment, and very soon recovered. I saw him engaged in his usual occupation a long time afterwards."

Mr. Mousley having given me permission to publish his testimony, told me something with reference to the case of his son-in-law, but I propose to treat of his case on some future occasion.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

A NEW WORK BY
ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.
Uniform with "The Heart of the Gospel," "The Heights of the Gospel," and "Evangelistic Work," entitled—
"LIFE-POWER";
OR, CHARACTER, CULTURE, & CONDUCT.

"A happy book, dealing in Dr. Pierson's best vein with such themes as 'The Elements and Secrets of Power,' 'The Power of a Presiding Purpose,' 'The Use and Abuse of Books,' 'The Genius of Industry,' 'The Ethics of Amusement,' and 'The Inspiration of Ideals.' The style is natural, easy, and sympathetic, while the marks of wide reading are on every page. Throughout the work the writer thinks in the sunlight—which is enough to say that this handsomely-got-up book is bound to stimulate both old and young."—The Presbyterian.

Notes and Comments.

It has been decided, in view of the continued non-appearance of the report of the Opium Commission, to postpone the date of the proposed Anti-Opium Convention till Thursday and Friday, May 16 and 17.

A large service has been rendered to the anti-opium cause by the delegation from India, comprising Rev. A. W. Prautch, Mr. and Mrs. Man Sukh Lal, and Mr. S. C. Kanaga Ratnam. During the past few months they have spoken at over two hundred and fifty meetings in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Some of these gatherings have numbered two thousand persons. In nearly every instance a resolution condemning the iniquitous traffic has been unanimously adopted, for forwarding to the Secretary of State for India and local Parliamentary representatives. Contributions towards the expenses of this delegation in England at this important juncture will be thankfully received by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, 31, Paternoster-square, London.

The first reading in the House of Commons, on Monday evening, of the Local Veto Bill, marks a decided step forwards, we trust, in the path of permanent temperance reform. The state of parties in the representative assembly, and the probable defection of some members interested in the liquor trade, make the fate of the Bill a very doubtful one, but we sincerely trust that these obstacles may vanish in the face of the crying need for reform.

Observers of the currents of social and political life, party agents and others, are coming to see that the brewers and licensed victuallers have worked out and elaborated a great system of organised warfare, which they are already putting to use at elections. The question of profit for "the trade" is coming to the front naked and unashamed. Everything is to be subordinate to it; how "the trade," which degrades our people and piles up our expenditure, can be allowed to go on unmolested, how the brewers are to make fortunes and the richest among them are to become lords, is to be the one point at elections which bear upon the welfare of our home population, upon the millions of India, upon the condition of our colonies, and upon our relations to all the great nations of the earth. The Prime Minister said a few months since that unless we controlled "the trade" it would domineer over everything else. And so it will.

Nothing but satisfaction can be expressed by all lovers of municipal purity, that the new London County Council are continuing the policy of resistance to the drink traffic; and well they may when they have to do with a district in which there are 120 public-houses within a quarter of a mile. We trust that all public bodies and public servants, especially licensing magistrates, will awake to a sense of responsibility for the continuance of this great evil among us. At Chicago, we are glad to see, a decisive blow has been struck for purity. Still, the work requires daily care and unwearying patience, as well as the heat of a contested election. The enemy never sleeps, neither should the workers for God and man.

The renaissance of paganism among us has culminated in a trial which has ended in one part, but begun in another. The proceedings reveal a man who has been a brilliant scholar, and a devotee of so-called art and culture, denying in public that there is any bad influence in the world,—maintaining that no person can influence another, and that there are no such distinctions as moral and immoral in literature and art. Such theories undermine all sense of responsibility to God or man. Neither education nor social distinction can regenerate the heart of man. The picture given by the inspired writer, in Rom. i. 21-25, is as true to-day as in the days of pagan Greece and Rome.

Mrs. Butler used, in her famous struggle against legalised vice, to insist that England was, in foolish ignorance, adopting the useless system of depraved Continental countries. We are also struggling hard to adopt the dismal Continental Sunday—we say "dismal" advisedly, for a seventh day which is largely one of toil and of amusement adds nothing to the variety and desirableness of a week of time—and while we, i.e., some of us, are striving for it, the French Sunday Repose League is making good progress in getting rid of it. At its fifth annual meeting, held a few days ago, Sunday serfdom was condemned as the curse of France, and an impediment to her prosperity. The opinion was expressed that the commercial superiority of England and of the United States was due to Sabbath observance. Yes; many things go with it, an open Bible, public worship, and evangelisation work. If France gets her Sabbath, she will get a good deal more; and if we lose ours we shall lose more.

How much torture is inflicted upon the minds of our honest poor by the thought of the workhouse no tongue can tell. Too many of them have not indulged in groundless fear when they dreaded the coming of a day which would see the break-up of their humble homes and their dreary pilgrimage to "the union." One out of every two working men and women comes to that end of a life of toil. Even when never named, this fear seems to be like a smouldering fire in many hearts. A representative of the Westminster Gazette has made his way down to Wensleydale, to romantic little Aysgarth, to see Mrs. Webster, aged 105, and her old heart has the haunting misery :—

"I'se sair feer'd I'll hae to gang to't workhus," she confided to me as she continued clasping my hand. "Ay, ay," said her daughter, aged seventy-five, who was standing near, "that's got into her head, and now't will mak her forget it; not that there's ony fear o' that; if we're poor we've got that will see her through." This was said with a genuine ring in the voice and the proud look which so characterises the sturdy folk of the Yorkshire dales. With this one illusion—an illusion which is the sad heritage of our social system—the old lady's mind is as bright and clear, as strong and sensible, as that of her great-granddaughter, who in her turn looks after both the old ladies.

The shocking Tipperary "witch" case had one touch of nature, on the part of the poor victim, which must have gone home to many a father's heart. It was said at the inquest that Mrs. Cleary was put twice into the fire. When there her father said to her, "Are you the daughter of Patrick Boland and wife of Michael Cleary? Answer in the name of God." She answered, "I am, dada." The endearing old word of her childhood and girlhood—"dada"—ought to have been enough to break up the whole terrible ordeal, and call everyone to a better mind.

The trial brings home to us in a humiliating way the sad religious condition of sections of our population. Not one man but would have denied the possibility of such a tragedy within the limits of the kingdom had he been questioned a month ago. Burning a woman over the fire to expel a spirit from her in Great Britain and Ireland, at the close of the nineteenth century! The thing seems incredible. What have the religious teachers of these poor people been about all these years to allow such ignorance to breed such unnatural cruelty? The Church of Rome is responsible, and here we see what she will harbour within her pale. Her influence over these Irish peasants is enormous. In a generation she could banish all such superstitions. Alas! she is too fond of darkness.

The Baptist ministers of New York regard the religious training of families as grievously neglected. They say that "within the last twenty years there has been a notable falling-off in the family teaching of religion." It is delegated to the Sunday school. But they are finding out that duty cannot thus be delegated; the original responsibility remains, and not only so, the consequences of neglecting it begin to accumulate in loss all round. The home will always remain the solid centre of a healthful society; or if it begins to decay, society will decay with it; and the centre of the home is pure religion.

The Daily Telegraph is determined that the English public shall not be in ignorance of what is going on in Madagascar; its special correspondent is sojourning in the island, has noted some of its features, has praised the work of the missionaries, has seen the Prime Minister and got the Malagasy view of the struggle, and the editor at home has based upon the information thus obtained an earnest protest against the war on which France is entering. We wish we could believe that it will accomplish the purpose for which it was written. But the truth is, that interference may only make bad worse. We certainly cannot support any policy which would tend to create an angry feeling towards our own country, and possibly produce estrangement and friction. That would do Madagascar no good, nor anybody else that we can see. It is a time for prayer, for self-restraint, and for patience.

Ill-fortune appears to attend all attempts to end the long and destructive war in the East. Li Hung Chang, the Chinese ambassador, was severely wounded by a Japanese fanatic, and now that an armistice is concluded a small party of Japanese, sent with the news of it to the Chinese army in Manchuria, and bearing a flag of truce, has been fired at by the Chinese. These old countries are new to our Western ways; but we trust they will soon end their quarrel, which is causing untold misery.

Dr. Brookes says in The Truth (Holness) that "in former years it was confidently affirmed that if women were permitted to vote, the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicants would disappear from among the evils of the world. But in the recent election in Colorado the women voted, and a majority of them voted against Prohibition. The women also voted in New Zealand, and a majority of them there too voted against temperance. So that one is forced to the conclusion that something more than woman's vote is required to reform and regenerate mankind." We confess we are not surprised at this result. We think that in the main, woman's vote would be rather conservative of things as they are, than radically and revolutionarily reformative. But, however they would vote, we think it lies in the nature of things that to give married women the franchise would bring discord and disaster into many a home.

An editorial in the same trenchant and outspoken magazine remarks that "if any one can show from the voluminous writings of Higher Criticism the least manifestation of concern for the salvation of souls, or the attempt to convince men of their sin and need; or the setting forth of the blood of Christ as the price paid for redemption; or the necessity of the new birth by the Holy Spirit; or advice to the Christian how to live; or a word of comfort to the bereaved, or of hope to the sorrowing; or assurance of eternal life, and a blessed resurrection, and a glorious immortality to the dying—he is entitled to a good reward." This is not an unfair observation, for these are the fundamental needs of men, and they are the great subjects of God's inspired Book. Their absence from the so-called Higher Criticism demonstrates at least its uselessness, to say no more.

"Other-worldliness" has been subjected to an abundance of cheap ridicule; but it has not been laughed out of existence, nor will it ever be. It stands for a Godward life, and those who know that life are not, as a rule, wanting in a sense of duty as to the present world and its affairs. The inspired statement of "other-worldliness" is in these words:—"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Here we have the supreme concern and quest of followers of Christ. A heavenly people should speak a heavenly language and live a heavenly life; and in proportion as these aims are actually realised, there will be an "other-worldliness" which will have the praise of God, although it may meet with contempt or unjust rebuke from men. The more we enter into the life which is life indeed, the more obvious will it be that we are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth." It is by faith that this confession is made; and those who have this grace will at the same time exercise faithfulness towards their fellows and towards the Lord Himself.

In The Thinker for this month an abstract is given of an article by Dr. Von Buchrucker, of Munich, on "Present Religious Tendencies," with special reference to the effort in which some are engaged to strip Christianity of its supernatural character or "other-worldliness." Showing that the Christian's life and thought has its root in another world, not in the bare region of religious and moral ideals, the writer says:—

> It is the eternal world, where God is seen face to face, whose atmosphere is God's outstreaming glory, whence the Son of God came when He laid aside the glory which He had before the founding of the world, and whither He returned after He had completed the purification of our sins on the cross. There our life is hid with Christ in God; there is our spirit's home. Every presentation, however dazzling, which bears an earthly character, of Christianity, does not correspond to its nature.
> Our roots are in the eternal world. "When shall I come to behold thy face?" This remains the groundtone of the soul that is one with Christ. From this world of eternity we understand the miracles and prophecies, at which modern theology, which would limit Christianity to earthly experiences, takes such offence; they are nothing but rays from that world of holy harmony, shining into this shattered existence of earth, giving us the earnest of the reconciliation, one day, of these two estranged forms of existence. This supernatural world of peace and glory we have as a foundation under us, as a Divine gift in us, as an immovable goal before us.

These words indicate a very deep religious truth. If we have seen Jesus we must ever be looking unto Him; if we are the Lord's, we must ever have our eyes towards Him; if we are temples of the Holy Spirit, we shall not be content with a mere earth-bound existence, but we shall enjoy the enlarged liberty and life of the children of God.

All readers of periodical literature must have observed a tendency which is thus expressed by a correspondent:—"In moral tales there is a habit of commonising the name of God. In trivial talk between imaginary characters, just in order to make a sentence sensational, the Sacred Name is brought in. Surely this must lead to profanity." A similar habit obtains of using Scripture terms for common everyday occurrences. Expressions that have become hallowed through association with sublime religious truths, cannot be so employed without losing, in the estimation and minds of many, their spiritual meaning and highest application. It is needful to distinguish the holy and consecrated from that which is common and unclean.

The Revival of 1859-60.

Here and there, in town and country, one meets with the converts of 1859-60. They have worn well, the years adding a ripe wisdom, a chastened fervour, and a firmer grasp of vital truth. They bear a common stamp, and the stamp is royal. Their Christian character is clean-cut; the mould in which they were cast by the Holy Spirit was of a marked type. Deeper than the understanding, deeper than the imagination, deeper than the feelings the truth penetrated; it pierced the conscience and wrought mightily there. A profound sense and dread of sin characterised the inquirers of that period. Judgment to come, heaven and hell, stood out in their view as stupendous facts. The majesty and holiness of God filled their spiritual vision to the utmost horizon, and when the light of the Cross and the risen Saviour dawned upon them the transformation was striking, often indeed a transfiguration astonishing all beholders.

The converts of that time came well out from the world. You never heard them ask how much of earth they might have together with salvation. On the other hand they entertained a salutary dread of the world as the most subtle and potent agency of Satan for the ruin of the soul. The peace, the joy, the tenderness of conscience, the love of the Word, their holy walk and their loving service on many a field bear testimony to the reality and greatness of the revival. In the pulpit, in the offices of the Church, in the Sabbath school, in the mission district, in the foreign field, on the platform, and in the press, the converts of that time are still to be found, though doubtless a goodly number have fallen asleep.

No religious awakening was ever more clearly Divine in its origin and practical in its results. There was an air of Pentecost about it: no hand of man was visible, only those tongues of fire, prayer and praise and testimony appeared. There was a grandeur, a solemnity, and a heavenliness in the beginning and progress of the work. We were like them that dream. Who can forget the effect produced by the tidings, first from America and afterwards from Ireland, which woke the echoes in the busy city and the silent glen? It was the voice of the Lord as in steps of majesty He marched from west to east over sea and land. The solemn sound of his goings still lingers with a hallowed sweetness in many a heart. We knew He was coming; we knew He was come. We saw his footprints: we felt the touch of his power. The glory of a wondrous presence shed a blessed light, leaving ineffaceable memories in countless souls.

The work began, not in preaching, but in prayer. Little groups, moved by the strange tidings, met to pray. In some instances the meetings consisted of the more live Christians, in other instances it was a knot of youths yearning for something better than they knew. It was a spirit of eager inquiry, a thirst that drew the seekers to the fountain. Prayer began to be answered in a striking manner. Immediate and specific answers indicated the opening of the windows of heaven. Souls in bondage were set free; believers who for weary years had sought assurance in vain, now received the fullest witness of the Spirit. Careless persons were aroused; stout-hearted sinners were arrested; earnest seekers found more than they had ever dared to hope for. Joy overflowed, songs of praise and testimony followed. Every new incident gave a fresh impulse to the movement until the country rang with the report, and it became the universal topic of the day. You did not need to invite inquirers to remain for conversation: they crowded around the church door at the close of every meeting and gathered in the street. The preacher did not need to call the people to hear; often the people called the preacher to speak. Tongues were loosened. Young men, illiterate men, spoke with awakening and persuasive power.

The lay preacher, as the unordained witness of Christ was then called, came to the front, and in a natural, businesslike, everyday style of speech delivered his testimony with singular freshness and remarkable effect. The fire of God spread, alike in pulpit and in pew. It was a great day, marking an epoch in the history of Christianity in the land.

What cries of prayer! What rivers of tears! What bursts of song! In the field, in the street, in the woods, on the hillside, by the seashore, at fairs and markets, in churches and vestries, in parlours and garrets, in barns and many strange places, anywhere and everywhere, men raised the cry, "What must we do to be saved?" And then, the cry answered, the fortieth Psalm was sung with all the enthusiasm of men who knew they had escaped from the misery and peril of the horrible pit and the miry clay. O that mighty touch of God! Surely in his hand is the hiding of power.

THE UNVEILING.—14.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—THE FIRST WOE.

II.

We have seen that the inmost meaning of the devastating locust hosts of Joel is found in the heart of man. That their own hearts' lusts were indeed the nation that had come up upon the Lord's land, strong and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion and having the cheek teeth of a great lion. These were the nation that had laid his vine (Isa. v.) waste and barked his fig tree. This the destruction from the Almighty, who gave his people up unto their own hearts' lusts, his great army which He sent among them. These had cut off the meat before their eyes: yea, joy and gladness from the house of their God. Before this army, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, the land was as the Garden of Eden, and behind them a desolate wilderness.

To the desolating power thus pictured by the older prophet, the New Testament seer, our brother and companion in tribulation and in the Kingdom and endurance in Jesus, beholds in his vision numerous additional features symbolically expressed. These must be considered one by one, and interpreted by the light of former Scriptures, before any further progress can be made in the exposition of the chapter before us.—Rev. ix.

Power as the Scorpions of the Earth have Power, to torment men with the stings which are in their tails (vv. 3, 5, 11). The Scorpion inhabits the great and terrible wilderness. The tormenting sting in the tail is interpreted by Prov. xxiii. 32, "At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." The Scorpion is mentioned three times. As the torment of a scorpion to the flesh, so is conviction, shame, remorse, to the spirit of a man.

Horses prepared for War.—Indomitable energy, terribleness, might, joy in his strength, fearlessness, fierceness, rage, eagerness for the fray, are some of the characteristics attributed to the war-horse by Jehovah himself in the inimitable description of Job. xxxix. 19-25.

Crowns like unto Gold.—The royal prerogative in its highest form (Est. viii. 15; Rev. iv. 4); absolute power; autocracy; despotism (Dan. ii. 37; v. 18, 19).

Faces of Men.—Unrestrained and familiar human intercourse—"Face to face as a man speaketh unto his friend." "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man" (Gen. i. 20, m.; Ex. xxxiii. 11; Prov. xxvii. 19).

Hair as the Hair of Women.—The attraction, the fascination, the blandishment, of the woman—

Thy head upon thee is like Carmel, and the hair of thy head like purple. The king is held captive in the tresses thereof (S. S. vii. 5, R.V.)

The following appeared in The Court Journal at the time of the assassination of Czar Alexander II.:—

A touching story reaches us from St. Petersburg, and, as it comes from several different sources, we are led to consider it partly, if not wholly, true. It appears that the Princess Dolgorouki was remarkable for the beauty and abundance of her hair, and the Court legend tells us that, like many other great men, Alexander II. had been caught in this filet d'amour, which, according to old Marot, the poet, captures the souls of men. The Emperor's admiration for the tresses of the Princess was so great that he often said to her, "If I die first I shall rest all the easier if that hair lies with me in my coffin." The impression upon the mind of the Princess was so vivid that, at the very moment the news of the Emperor's death had reached her, she cut off with her own hands the rich abundance of her tresses, and enclosed them in a sealed packet directed to the Empress, with a humble request that the late Emperor's desire might be fulfilled. The Czarina's gentle and affectionate heart was moved to the core by the sacrifice and the request; and it was well known amongst the ladies of the Court that the white satin pillow upon which reposed the head of the late Czar contained this last token of love and remembrance from the Princess Dolgorouki.

Teeth of Lions.—Tearing, devouring. "The lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den" (Dan. vi. 24; Deut. xxxii. 24; Joel i. 6).

Breastplates of Iron.—Hard, cruel, imperious; in contrast with the mother's breast, and the breastplate of the sympathising high priest; impervious to human compassion or Divine rebuke.

Sound of Wings as of Chariots of many Horses running to Battle.—The energy, strength, fierceness, and eagerness of the single war-horse, increased, multiplied, and intensified into the swift and tumultuous rush of many horses, yoked to war chariots, running to the battle.

Five Months—mentioned twice. Five is the number of the senses, which are the avenues to the soul and spirit. Dr. Bullinger (Number in Scripture) says five is the number of Grace. "At the consecration of the priest (Ex. xxix. 20) the blood, and afterwards the holy oil upon it, was put on the tip of the right ear, signifying that the Holy Spirit would cause him to hear the Word of God, and separating his five senses for God."

The Month is a complete circle, and indicates sometimes a process complete in itself—as Num. xi. 19, 20: "Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days: but a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and be loathsome unto you." Sometimes one of a series of such processes; as Job xxxix. 1, 2: "Canst thou tell when the hinds do calve? Canst thou number the months that they fulfil?"

As King, the Angel of the Abyss.—The natural locusts have no king, but these have an evil king, the fallen star, Lucifer; he opened the pit, and he rules and commands the locusts.

Abaddon, Apollyon.—In Hebrew and Greek, the languages of the two divisions of the world, Jew and Gentile, his name is Destroyer.

Here are twelve particulars, descriptive of these weird, mystic, dreadful creatures; and the significance of every one is discovered from its previous mention in the Old Testament Scriptures or from common human experience.

Any interpretation which accounts for all these characteristics, and to which they are all necessary to complete the picture, has at least established a claim to consideration, if it has not already demonstrated itself to be true.

When the significance of each symbol is Scripturally proved, or shown to exist in the nature of things, any interpretation or application of the vision must still bring all these characteristics into line, in accordance with the significance thus ascertained. This I hope to do with a completeness which will carry conviction as to the soundness of the argument and the validity of the interpretation. Meanwhile I ask the reader's patient study of the above explanations. M.

MINISTERIAL SUCCESS.

By Rev. WILLIAM CROSBIE (Nottingham).

The recently-published "Diary" of Dr. Andrew Bonar* has fallen into my hands, and I am reading it with intense interest. It is a book specially for ministers, and reveals the secret of ministerial success. I can scarcely conceive of any minister or Christian worker reading it without being greatly humbled, and at the same time profited spiritually. It is a book for those hours—and they should be more frequent and prolonged than they are—when we are alone, looking into our heart, confessing our failures, and laying the solemn matters of our ministry before God. I do not believe any true minister could peruse the book without becoming a better, a more devoted, and a more prayerful man. I am not ashamed to own that it has again and again condemned me, effecting also within me—in the deep region of motives and ministerial aims—a sort of revolution.

What has struck me most, perhaps, in the spiritual record—and it is found on almost every page—was the time Andrew Bonar spent in prayer, especially at the end of the week. His Saturdays were largely days of fasting and prayer, either in his study, or in his church, or in lonely woods, or on the hill sides. That was how he prepared himself, after his sermons were finished, for his Sunday's work. He seems to have gone steeped in holy influences into the pulpit and to every service he performed. No wonder there were "signs following"; no wonder his was a soul-saving and soul-edifying ministry; and no wonder that he himself attained to such spirituality and saintliness of character.

But why do I write these things, and call attention to this apostolic man, lately gone from us? Because in these days of hurry, and committees, and tea-meetings, and entertainments, and manifold public business, and endless talk and discussion, we ministers are in danger of getting secularised, losing tone, and coming short of the fulfilment of the great purposes of our ministry. If things are to be better in the Churches, they must be better with us first. One of the supreme needs of the age is a baptized ministry; and Andrew Bonar's Diary shows how that need may be met, and what would follow.

Many years ago, at a ministerial conference on "The State of the Churches and the Ministry," held in the City of Chester in the days of Richard Knill, John Angell James, of Birmingham, suggested that the ministers present should, on their return home, read "Baxter's Reformed Pastor." The suggestion might well be acted upon now, with "Andrew Bonar's Diary" added. And what would be more appropriate to-day than a conference like that Chester Conference, which proved such a blessing to those who attended it? There are conferences on all sorts of subjects, and much precious time is spent, and often to little purpose; but we ministers do not meet to pray, and humble ourselves before God, and consider the matters that are of chiefest importance.

In a recent issue I ventured to call attention to the necessity for "a national fast"; and both privately and in the columns of The Christian, there has been sympathetic reference to the suggestion. I am daily more strongly convinced of the opportuneness of the suggestion. The necessity increases on all hands, and in every sphere of our national, social, industrial, and religious life. Turning over the pages of Bonar's "Diary," I find allusion to a public fast in the year 1844; and this is what Bonar says about it: "This is the day when all the ministers and office-bearers are to be humiliating themselves before God on account of the state of things amongst us. Lord, break my heart, and show why Thou hidest thy face!" Only let the spirit of Bonar become general to-day, "the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weeping between the porch and the altar," and there would be new manifestations of God's gracious power, and new interpositions of his hand. He would "return and repent, and leave a blessing behind." He would be "jealous for his land, and pity his people."

PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES' HOME, 22, Chatham-place, Brighton.—Miss Clementina Kingdon, superintendent, writes: "Our work is quite crippled for want of funds. It is sad to know of poor ladies pining for sea air and rest, but unable to pay even their travelling expenses. Thirty ladies are now being clothed by our fund, and about 300 garments have been distributed during the year."

Easter Lessons.

In days like ours, when the minds of men are much exercised about the grounds of faith, the Resurrection has come into the same sort of prominence in Christian teaching that it occupied in the first days of the Christian Church. Christ Himself appeals to it as the certificate of his claims; his Apostles stake the whole case of Christianity upon its literal truth: "If Christ be not risen, our preaching is vain; your faith is also vain." The great leader of modern unbelief (Strauss) declares that the Resurrection is "the centre of the centre, the real heart of Christianity as it has been until now."

This explains why it is that the struggle between faith and unbelief has always been the most intense around the fact of the Resurrection. There have been many attempts on the part of unbelief to get rid of the fact; and each of them in succession has "had its day and ceased to be." What new solutions the fertility of unbelief may yet bring forth, and the credulity of unbelief may yet accept, we know not; but we may firmly hold by the faith which breathed new hope and strange joy into that sad band on the first Easter morning, and rejoice with them in the glad and wonderful fact that "Christ is risen indeed."

As the light of Easter morning breaks again over that empty tomb, we think not of a dead but of a living Christ, not of a name which represents only a bygone historical personage: not of an ideal man of sorrows devised by monks in their cloisters, or dreamed of by poets in their reveries, but of One who still lives, passing to and fro among human beings, as once He passed visibly through the streets of Jerusalem, never weary and homeless now, but ever strong to help our weakness, and to rescue us from the guilt and the power of sin. In this world of sin and graves, we find in our risen Saviour the power to harmonise life, to inspire life, to transform life. He is endowed with all power to help as well as to sympathise, near enough to hear the murmur of our prayers, and to whisper to our weak spirits as we bend beneath our burdens, and look up for aid: "I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore."

We may mention three things that show the unique importance of the Resurrection.

First, it was the convincing proof that Christ's words were true, and that He was what He had claimed to be. If Christ, who made such avowals of his nature, as we know He did, and put forward such claims of his personality and his office, as fill the Gospels, rose from the dead to die no more, then there was proof that his words had been true, that He was not mistaken regarding his own person, his work, his relation to the Father, the prospects of Himself and his people. Everything that Christ had said and done, claimed and promised, shines with great clearness in the light of the Resurrection. When He rose from the dead, it was shown that while the world had scorned the Son of God, the Father had been watching over Him with unceasing love; that while the world had placed Him at its bar as a malefactor, the Father had been making ready for Him a seat at his own right hand; that while the world had nailed Him to the cross, the Father had been preparing for him many crowns; that while the world had consigned Him to the grave, and then gone to its feasting and its merriment because the voice of the preacher of righteousness had been silenced in death, the Father had waited for the morning of the third day, in order to bring Him forth in triumph as the Lord of life.

Easter morning tells us that the promises of God in Christ "are Yea and Amen," that God has accepted the sacrifice of his Son. God has exalted Him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give us all that we need, to give us repentance by touching our hearts with a sense of sin, and with a sense also of the love of God, to give us pardon when we seek it with contrite hearts, to pour into our weak and sickly spirits a new life, so that we may gain the victory over sin, and walk in newness of life. Our joy then in Christ's resurrection is the joy of those to whom He is therein declared to be the Son of God, and who see in Him their accepted sacrifice, and their ever-living Redeemer.

Second, in the risen Christ we have the pattern of our new life, and the power that fulfils the pattern. "Like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Paul's great object, he tells us, was to know Christ and the power of his resurrection. It was his prayer and his constant endeavour to be conformed to the likeness of his risen Redeemer. He is constantly holding up to us the risen life of Christ as that to which we are to be conformed. As Christ has done with death, having died for sin once, so must his people be dead to sin and live to God in Him. It is a life hid with Christ in God, no doubt; but still a life manifested in all our mutual relations, a life baptized by his Spirit and consecrated to his service. If Christ be in us the hope of glory, our characters must be daily growing through the life which He gives, more like the pattern which He left. And as the sphere of our souls widen through the knowledge that we gain, let our prayer be that the risen Saviour may shape them to new forms of holiness and glory, until the last shadow of our darkness fades into his light, and the last struggling aspiration floats up into his perfect peace.

Third, our future life becomes clear in the light of Christ's resurrection. To those to whom the resurrection of Christ is a living fact, their whole future life is a fact. Here we have a solid certainty, and here alone. As Peter affirms, it is "by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead we are begotten again unto a living hope." If Christ rose from the dead, then the world into which He is gone is a real world, in which regenerated men live more fully than they live here. He has conquered death as our representative, and in the Father's house is preparing a place for his people. And when we find our life in a risen Lord, we have a life that death cannot touch. If one with Christ, how can it be that we shall not share his destiny, and go from world to world in his company? So when we lay our Christian dead in the grave, we find our comfort and our hope in the assurance that Jesus died and rose again. And even when Death lays his icy fingers on us, and chills our physical frame, we can raise the shout of triumph: "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Sometimes in hours of weariness and dejection one feels as if he had seen the best of everything, and must now simply endure life, without the prospect of anything fresh, or attractive, or reviving. But this is not because he has exhausted life, but simply that he has not begun the real life to which God calls us. To the "children of the resurrection" there is a springing life that revives hope and renews energy. In the living Saviour all fulness dwells, and by sharing his Spirit and following in his steps, we may be partakers of his holiness. Let our Easter lesson then be to strive more persistently to realise the risen Saviour as an ever-present power to ennoble and beautify our life. Let our endeavour be from this day forward to make our communion with Him constant as well as deep, to be in heart and will one with Him in whom is all life and all hope. And if He is our life and our hope now, then when He who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with Him in glory.

MILDMAY MEN'S NIGHT SCHOOL.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Mildmay Park Men's Night School was celebrated on Wednesday evening last week, when the men and their friends gathered in goodly numbers in the Conference Hall. The distribution of prizes and certificates is a pleasing function, and those who witnessed it could not but admire the Night School as an institution, and feel an interest in the men, many of them youthful, some obviously advanced into middle life. Attendance at the classes means much: it presupposes thoughtfulness on the part of the men; and it has the direct effect of equipping them for greater usefulness in life.

Colonel Morton, who presided, read the examiner's report on the work of the session just closed. The results were very encouraging. As to the Scripture questions, they were declared to be well answered, only one of the men examined failing to get the number of marks requisite to qualify for the certificate. Mr. P. S. Badenoch reported that the session comprised seventy-two nights' work. There were 622 names on the books, and twenty-seven classes. The average attendance was 189; seventeen men did not miss a single attendance, while eleven only missed one evening, and four missed two evenings. These thirty-two men received prizes for attendance. The attendants at the classes represented 126 occupations. Having passed an examination in one or more subjects, 128 men obtained the school certificate; 109 men passed the Scripture examination. The prizes and certificates were gracefully distributed by Countess Stanhope (née Pennefather), whose attendance must have taken some present back in memory to the days of the revered founders of the Mildmay institutions, Rev. W. Pennefather and his devoted wife.

Dr. A. T. Schofield delivered a wise and earnest address founded on Proverbs ix. The chapter falls into three sections; in the first, consisting of six verses, Wisdom speaks; in the third, verses 13 to 18, Folly utters her voice. In certain respects the appeals correspond; the simple are asked to "turn in hither," in the one case to eat bread and live, in the other to participate in evil and reap the fruits of death. Man has two ears, one for the voice of Wisdom, the other for the voice of Folly, and the whole of his present prosperity, and the whole of his future destiny depend upon his power to say "Yes" to the one appeal and "No" to the other. It is not always easy to distinguish the voices, for the foolish woman addresses us in pretty much the same language as the wise. Both speak to the same men, and (oh, the pathos of the words) Folly calls "to them who go right on their ways"; while concerned with their business and other undertakings, they are invited into the fellowship of the foolish woman. And, sad to say, ten men of ability, "men with their heads screwed on," will enter there to every one who goes into the house of the wise! They heed not the counsel, "Forsake the foolish, and live"; and not having learned to say "Yes" or "No," they fall into what is the devil's house, thinking that there they may please themselves! Dr. Schofield urged his audience to reverence their bodies and their minds, to pray to God for self-knowledge and self-control, and to seek the life which is life indeed by yielding themselves to Christ, who is the Wisdom of God.

STREATHAM.—Last week Lewin-road Baptist Chapel was the centre of an earnest effort to promote the deepening of the spiritual life in the neighbourhood, and to preach the Gospel to outsiders. On Thursday afternoon an interesting and well-attended open conference was held, when a number of local friends exhorted as to the blessedness of a fully-consecrated life.

"I KNOW NOT THE MAN."

AN EASTER STUDY.

The denial of Christ by Peter has been so well and variously treated than it may seem that nothing fresh remains to be said. Yet a recent Bible talk on the subject has brought out so vividly its practical lessons that perhaps some of them may not be without value to your readers.

There can be no time when human sympathy is so precious as when our earthly affairs are darkened by misfortune; and if ever Christ needed the brave, unflinching, intelligent adherence of his disciples it was on the night of his cruel betrayal. It was, as He said, "the hour, and power of darkness." Earth and hell were in grim conspiracy to betray innocent blood. We can only, in the very faintest degree, imagine the weight of sorrow that rested on the Saviour when the Gethsemane anguish was supplemented by the traitorous kiss of one of his twelve chosen disciples. Judas had not been admitted to the sacredness of that sore agony but three of Christ's followers had been selected to be with Him, no doubt with a human yearning for their fellowship and sympathy. One of the very few personal requests He had ever made to them was that they would watch with Him through that awful darkness. But they slept instead, and to one of the Heavenly host was granted the rare honour of ministering to the Divine Redeemer, when the burden of a world's guilt threatened to crush out his life before He had accomplished his mediatorial sacrifice.

Weeks before, He had warned Peter of Satan's special designs on Him, and promised to pray for his safety; now He reminds him how necessary it is for him also to pray for himself. Had Peter been obedient to the warning, the subsequent disgrace and misery might have been averted. But an overweening self-confidence hurried him on to his sad fate. It is a noteworthy fact that physical and moral bravery are not inseparable allies. Peter had in large measure that physical courage that comes of hardy and perilous employment, and he had, too, the abnormal conceit which sometimes attends well-developed athleticism. Self-preservation and love of success were strong in him. He could not believe that voluntary submission to suffering and apparent defeat indicated anything but weakness; and we know how earnestly he had striven to deter his Master on a previous occasion from such a course. He was, in short, a character almost entirely under the dominion of the material; all else was, as yet, almost beyond his ken. How much was afterwards made of this when the Holy Spirit took possession, is a matter of history; but the undue development of his physical nature without the corresponding moral balance supplies a much-needed clue to his miserable failure on this occasion.

Immediately on the arrest of his Master, Peter gave up all hope. It was evidently a lost cause; and he must be careful henceforth how he identified himself with it. The love for his Master, which was very real—all chivalrous loyalty to his person, and all truth to his own repeated pledges of faithfulness, were forgotten in the dread which just then completely mastered him in presence of the gathering hostile crowds, and the imposing judicial inquiry. And yet he could not flee the scene. He followed afar off to see the end. The limits of this paper prevent circumstantial details, but readers for whom one of the closing scenes in the world's greatest tragedy have special interest will find them set down with vivid fascination in Dr. Stalker's recent book, "The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ."

We are most concerned to trace very briefly the moral processes in Peter's fall. There was first the short-sighted judgment, reading failure in adverse circumstances, instead of looking through and beyond them to the promised glory to which they would lead. Twice had unseasonable sleep robbed Peter of blessing that would have been a wonderful preparation for this time of testing. Had he kept awake on the Mount of Transfiguration, he would have heard celestial converse about "the decease at Jerusalem," that would have taught him to regard it from a very different standpoint. Had he denied himself the same indulgence in Gethsemane, he too would have prayed and would have been strengthened against this hour of temptation. But alas! he enters it unarmed; ventures in amongst the enemies of the Truth, attracted again by creature comfort, and, warming himself at their fire, listens without protest to their blasphemies; his first denial of his Lord is by his silence.

But in such circumstances the period of neutrality is a very brief one. If we associate with Christ's enemies we must very soon either confess or deny our fellowship with Him. Peter did the latter, and from that moment the wave of temptation, on whose crest a strong faith would have borne him onward to victory, utterly submerged him, and he stood in that Sacred Presence a dishonoured, perjured recreant. At that crisis there came to his senses, sharpened by misery, the distant cock-crowing that ushered in the kindling dawn; and at the same moment the Divine Prisoner, standing with such patient dignity before his accusers, turned and looked upon him. Reproach there must have been in that look—a tender, pitiful upbraiding; but it was the love that was there that conquered, as love always will. Foes, danger, possible death, were all blotted out by that look. Peter was face to face with his Master, and with his sin; and rushing out, he wept such tears as only one convinced of deadly ingratitude against incarnate goodness knows how to weep.

Neglect of opportunities for spiritual instruction and development; indifference to the insidious forces of evil, which, through self-indulgence and lack of moral discipline, blight the fairest promise of youth; a presumptuous trifling with circumstances of temptation by which many so much stronger have been thrown down—these are some of the dangers to which Peter succumbed. Are we of the nineteenth century free from them? "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

GETHSEMANE.

'Twas tranquil eve, and scarce a breath
The shadowy olives stirred,
When softly on the gathering gloom
Christ's orison was heard.
In deepest anguish did He pray,
That that dread cup might pass away.

Yet what forebodings thrilled his soul;
Could mockery, scourge, or thorn:
Could piercing nails or splintered cross
Have caused Him thus to mourn,
Or made the sweat of blood to flow,
With his excruciating woe?

Ah no! 'twas all but as a drop,
To sin's vast flood of shame,
The ghastly tide of guilt's remorse
That o'er the Sinless came—
The howling, surging, ruthless sea,
Of wrong that was, and still must be.

Oh, who but our Immanuel,
The great Incarnate One,
Could calmly such an ordeal take
And say "Thy will be done!"
Who but the perfect Christ could brave
Hell's direst pangs mankind to save?

Then whither shall the sin-stained flee,
The suffering spirit find
Sweet healing for the aching wounds
Of heart, and soul, and mind?
Where shall the weary and oppressed
The sick and mourning find their rest?

Where but in Him, whose heart of love
Our sins and woes hath borne,
These were the nails that pierced his soul,
And these his crown of thorn,
Who took our cross of death that we Might share his immortality.

SERVICES IN THEATRES.—A drawing-room meeting was recently held at the residence of Mr. Wm. Payne, 67, Downs-road, Clapton, on behalf of the Society for Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission-rooms. Mr. Payne gave some interesting reminiscences of meetings he had attended in the early part of the society's movements. Rev. T. C. Udall, the secretary, roused the meeting by a vivid pourtrayal of the seething mass of men and women living in this great city, in utter disregard of God's claims. Such was the class they endeavoured to reach, and greatly had their efforts been blessed. Mr. Ehrlich gave a report of the services at the Pavilion Theatre. Captain Lowe told of a new hall recently opened in Clapham. Among others who gave brief addresses was Mr. Barry Wake, one of the theatre preachers, and Dr. Hamilton, of Ram's Episcopal Chapel.

"BILLY BOY."

By A DISTRICT VISITOR.

"Don't cry, Billy boy, mother'll be home soon. Kiss little brother and be good." The only answer was a continuation of the dull, mournful wail as of an infant in pain; the monotony of it was only relieved by the repeated exhortation not to cry, from little brother, a mite of seven summers, whose old mannish expression told of the battle of life already begun.

The room, if such it could be called, was a kind of tumbledown cellar in one of the overcrowded dwellings of the slums of Walworth. Thinking it a fit place to bestow a little relief, I pushed open the door and peeped in. A kind of damp steam seemed to be in the place, which for a moment turned me sick and faint. Entering and becoming accustomed to the atmosphere, I looked round to discover the cause. Down each of the four walls water trickled in drops, and oozed in the corner through the dirty whitewash which the miserable remains of a fire in the broken grate failed to disperse. The dim winter daylight struggled hard to find an entrance through the patched window high up in the wall, yet considerably below the level of the pavement.

I turned my attention to what appeared to be the only occupant of the place. Crouched on a low stool in the corner was the owner of the voice which I had heard. He took no heed of my intrusion, but continued to rock himself backwards and forwards, holding tightly a bundle of something in his arms. "What have you there, my dear?" I asked; "and who were you talking to just now?" "To Billy boy, ma'am; here he is. Won't you please see if you can quiet him? He keeps on a crying so this morning."

The little speaker lifted the bundle he was holding so lovingly, and handed the wailing infant to me. I drew aside the piece of an old sack in which the child was enveloped, and almost shuddered at what I saw—a babe of barely eight weeks old, thin and wasted, moaning piteously, as if in pain, ceasing now and again when the other little one placed what appeared to be a piece of dirty rag in its mouth, but which, he explained to me, was its "teat." "Mother says as soon as she can spare the ha'pence she's going to buy him a proper one, made of india-rubber." "Where is your mother, child?" I inquired. "Mother's gone to work, ma'am; she sorts rags and bones. She don't get much money. She couldn't leave us anything to eat today, and Billy boy is hungry. I expect that's what makes him cry so. Mother had to pay the School Board man; a bit o' paper come 'cos I didn't go to school, and mother cried, 'cos she wanted to buy me a pair o' boots. Since father died mother's always crying."

"Why don't you go to school?" "Oh, I can't, ma'am; 'cos there would be no one to mind Billy boy, and he can't mind hisself, 'cos he's blind." I looked at the poor little thing in my arms again, and saw by the vacant expression in the eyes that poor Billy boy would never see the light of God's sunshine; he seemed now to have a fresh claim on my sympathy. "And what do you do all day here alone?" I asked of the elder child. "We don't do nothing, ma'am; I just sits here and cuddles up Billy to keep him warm. We don't very often get a bit o' fire, 'cos mother can't afford it." "Is there no one who would mind your little brother?" "No; all the women in this block go to work, and we haves to mind ourselves. Shall I take Billy boy, ma'am? He's going to sleep."

This is a sketch of one case, but there are hundreds of similar cases in the thickly-populated neighbourhoods of Walworth and Locksfields. To help the women who have in so many instances to be the bread-winners, a Crèche has been opened in connection with Richmond-street Mission, one of the many branches of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. It has for years been needed, there being no place where children can be taken care of. Now, they will receive every attention and comfort, with good food from 8 a.m. till 8 p.m. for 2d. per day. The preliminary expenses have all been met, what is wanted is some to carry it on; will readers of The Christian help? The Hon. Supt. is Mrs. F. Kinghorne, who has for many years held a large Mothers' Meeting at Richmond-street, and fully understands the need of such an institution.

THE PROPHECY OF AHIJAH.*

THE LOST TEN TRIBES.

By G. H. PEMBER, M.A.

The sad story of the children of Abraham after their settlement in Canaan is well known. They fulfilled to the letter the prediction of Moses in regard to the second epoch of their history. And apostasy from God soon led to dissensions among themselves, so that at length the nation was divided into two distinct and frequently hostile kingdoms.

But at the time of the disruption many of the God-fearing Israelites left their own tribes, and joined themselves to Judah (2 Chron. xi. 13, 17). Further immigrations are recorded as having taken place in the reign of Asa, when the pious among the Ten Tribes saw that Jehovah was with that king (2 Chron. xv. 9). Moreover, some at least among the "divers of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun" (2 Chron. xxx. 11), who humbled themselves in the reign of Hezekiah, and came to Jerusalem to the Passover, doubtless remained there, and so escaped the earlier captivity of Israel. Many, therefore, from the northern kingdom migrated to Judah at different times, were incorporated with the Two Tribes, and thenceforth shared their fortunes.

But the great masses of the Ten Tribes remained with Jeroboam and his successors, and quickly fell under the wrath of God; for in revolting from the house of David, and separating themselves from the Temple, they had deserted the king whom He had chosen, and despised the place in which He willed to be worshipped. The sin of Ephraim was double: he had forsaken his God and his king.†

The lawless spirit of the Ten Tribes was manifested immediately after the separation: for in defiance of the second commandment they set up golden calves at Bethel and Dan, and dared to worship again the abomination that had brought affliction and death upon them in the wilderness. Nay, they seem to have gone still further, and to have served "other gods and molten images," thus breaking the first commandment also (1 Kings xiv. 9).

Therefore, the Lord sent a message to Jeroboam by Ahijah the prophet, who, after predicting the utter destruction of the king's house, and the immediate death of his sick child, went on to pronounce the doom of his people in these words:—"For the Lord shall smite Israel, as a reed is shaken in the water; and He shall root up Israel out of this good land, which He gave to their fathers, and shall scatter them beyond the river (the river is, of course, the Euphrates); because they have made their Asherim,‡ provoking the Lord to anger (1 Kings xiv. 15).

Such was the decree; but the mercy of the Lord delayed its execution for more than two hundred years, at the end of which time Shalmaneser transported the captive Israelites to localities in Assyria and Media, on the other side of the Euphrates.

Now, there is great significance in the appointed place of exile. For when God called Abraham out of the Ur of the Chaldees, He first led him to Haran, and, after the death of his father, bade him leave for ever the idolatrous country of his kindred, and cross the Euphrates into a land which He would show him. Abraham did so, and was thenceforth spoken of as a Hebrew—that is "one who has crossed over"—by which name his descendants also were known to other nations.

But the Ten Tribes had begun to practise the very idolatry out of which their father Abraham was called; therefore God would send them back into the midst of it to the other side of the river, which formed the boundary to Abraham's land, and would deprive them of the name of Hebrews.

Subsequently, the prophecy of Ahijah was repeated by Amos in a somewhat veiled form, "Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus, saith the Lord, whose name is the Lord of Hosts" (Amos v. 27). Here the prophet says, "beyond Damascus," because Israel was then in fear of being carried into captivity by Syria; but Amos tells them that they are doomed to be led far beyond the capital of the Syrians. And so the real meaning of the prophecy is disclosed by Stephen, who cites it in the words, "And I will carry you away beyond Babylon" (Acts vii. 43), that is beyond the Euphrates, on which Babylon is situated.

Accordingly, in the second book of Kings, we read: "In the ninth year of Hoshea, the King of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria and placed them in Halah and in Harbor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes" (2 Kings xvii. 6). Thus the word of God by Ahijah was fulfilled, and the Ten Tribes were rooted out of their good land, and located in the Assyrian provinces and in Median cities, all of which were on the eastern side of the river Euphrates.

In the Scriptural narrative of the re-establishment of the Two Tribes in Palestine, there is no mention of the Ten. Only the heads of the houses of Judah and Benjamin, with the priests and Levites, are said to have accepted the invitation of Cyrus (Ezra i. 5).

Josephus, however, affirms that Ezra sent a copy of the permission to return to all those of his own nation that were in Media; but adds, that although some families responded, the entire body of the people of Israel remained where they were. "Wherefore," he continues, "there are but Two Tribes in Asia* and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond the Euphrates until now, and are an immense multitude, and not to be estimated by numbers." (Joseph. Ant. Jud. XI. v. 2).

Moreover, Josephus intimates that they were keeping up some intercourse with their brethren; for, in his preface to "The Wars of the Jews," he states that his countrymen to defy the Roman power was the hope that, "the whole multitude of their nation whichwas beyond the Euphrates would rise in insurrection simultaneously with themselves."

And to this hope Agrippa refers in the famous speech in which he endeavoured to dissuade the Jews from their insane resolve; for, after describing the might of the imperial city, and the subjection of the great nations to her, he exclaims, "What allies, then, will you procure for the war from the uncivilised part of the earth? For all those who dwell in the civilised† are Romans. Unless any of you is extending his hope as far as beyond the Euphrates, and imagines that those of his own stock who are living in Adiabene will come to his assistance."

It is evident that Agrippa was acquainted, not merely with the locality, but also with the circumstances of the Ten Tribes. Since the Euphrates was the boundary of the Roman Empire, they were not, like their brethren of the Two Tribes, under its dominion, but were subject to the rival kingdom of Parthia.

Lastly, toward the end of the fourth century, Jerome, having occasion to refer to the Ten Tribes in his commentary on Joel, remarks:—"Even to this day they have their habitation in the cities and among the mountains of the Medes." (See also 2 Esdras xiii. and the Midrash Rabbah.)

And it is in the same neighbourhood that modern travellers have found what they believed to be the remains of the missing Israelites. Dr. Grant supposed the Nestorians to be their descendants. Sir Alexander Burnes, and others, have detected them in the Afghan tribes; and this opinion is certainly snpported by strong evidence. It has also been pointed out that the so-called Jews of Persia will not own the name, but assume that of Beni Israel, evidently because they believe themselves to belong to the Ten Tribes.

And these different localities correspond remarkably with the only countries beyond the Euphrates that are mentioned in the second chapter of Acts. For Parthians, Medes, Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia, are said, as being sons of Israel, to have been present in Jerusalem at the ever memorable Feast of Pentecost.

Thus Divine prophecy, the historical Scriptures, uninspired writers of antiquity, and modern research, all concur in placing the Ten Tribes on the other side of the Euphrates. And in final and decisive corroboration of this testimony, we read that when the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, the Ten Tribes will be brought as "outcasts," "that are ready to perish," to the farther bank of the Great River (Isa. xi. 12, 15, 16; xxvii. 13; Zech. x. 10, 11). There He will signify to them that the curse pronounced by Ahijah is exhausted, and the long exile ended. For He will smite the hitherto impassable flood into seven streams, so shallow that men can pass over them in their shoes, without need of boat or raft. And thus, "There shall be a highway for the remnant of his people which shall remain from Assyria, like as there was for Israel in the day when he came up out of the land of Egypt" (Isa. xi. 16).

It is clear, then, that the teaching of the Bible is directly opposed to the Anglo-Ephraim theory, which regards the English as the tribe of Ephraim, and the prosperity of their empire as the fulfilment of the blessings which God has promised to bestow upon Israel "at the end of the days." For the Ten Tribes must still be dwelling within the ancient Assyrian realm, beyond the Euphrates; and "the end of the days," as we have already shown, is not the present age.

Moreover, from the twenty-first verse of the Song of Moses we learn that during the epoch of Israel's rejection—that is, during the present age—God would provoke his people to jealousy by transferring his testimony to another nation without the pale of Israel; a nation, too, which up to the time of the transference would have received no Divine commission or laws from Him as Israel had done.

The fact, therefore, that any nation of these times is, like England, prominent in the work of the Gospel affords a decisive proof that it is not one of the Tribes of Israel.

Yet, again, the prophecy of Balaam declared, that during the same period of Israel's rejection, the world-dominion should be given first to Asshur, and then to certain Western powers. And Daniel subsequently resolved Asshur into Babylon and Medo-Persia, and the Western Powers into Rome. It is, then, in these empires, and in the kingdoms into which the last of them is now broken up, that all power over the prophetic earth has been vested, until the Lord Jesus appears to take it to Himself, and to bestow it upon the twelve tribes of Israel.

Hence the present age is called the Times of the Gentiles, and it must continue until, as the Lord Himself tells us, its close is announced by signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and by distress of nations upon the earth, with perplexity heightened by a fearful commotion and roaring among the waves of the sea (Luke xxi. 24, 25).

As soon as these signs appear, the time of glory for the whole house of Israel will be at hand. But, until then, the doom of the Ten Tribes must remain unchanged, and they must endure, not merely the sentence pronounced by Ahijah, but also that which was uttered by Hosea:—"The children of Israel shall abide many days without king, and without prince, and without sacrifice, and without pillar and without ephod, or teraphim: afterwards will the children return, and seek Jehovah their God, and David their king, and will go trembling to Jehovah and his goodness at the end of the days" (Hos. iii. 4, 5).

† In later times God says by the mouth of Hosea:—"They have set up kings, but not by Me: they made princes, and I knew it not; of their silver and their gold they have made them idols, that they may be cut off." (Hos. viii. 4.)

‡ The Asherah was a phallic symbol, carved from a wooden stake, or the trunk of a tree, and sometimes fashioned into a rude representation of the god. Its mention shows that Israel had been drawn into the vilest abominations of paganism

*Of course, Josephus does not mean the continent of Asia nor even Asia Minor, but only the Roman province of that name, which included Mysia, Lydia, Caria, Phrygia, on the western side of Asia Minor. "Asia vestra constat ex Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, Lydia." (Cic., "Pro Flacc." 27.)

† hē oikoumenē, scil. gē, literally, "the inhabited earth"; but the word seems to have passed into the meaning of the settled or civilised parts of the world. Hence the Greeks used it of their own land in contradistinction to that of the barbarians; and subsequently it was applied, as in the passage quoted above, to the Roman Empire as distinguished from the rest of the world which Josephus called hē aoikētos.

THE VILLAGE BAND, in connection with the Hackney Y.M.C.A., has been able to help in some measure in many other villages around London. They are prepared to send, at their own cost, from Saturday to Monday morning, young men who will visit from house to house, and hold open-air, and, if convenient, indoor services. Should any readers know of such needy villages, where they find it difficult to get preachers for halls or chapels, or where there are no services at all, if they will communicate with me some of our men will gladly pay them a visit.

THE RELIEF OF MARITIME DISTRESS.—A meeting of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society of Sailors' Home Chambers, Dock-street, was held at its Board Room, Great George-street, Westminster, Friday, April 5. The quarterly reports of the Society's relief operations at home, abroad, and in the Colonies, embraced the exceptionally large number of 4701 persons, comprising 1621 shipwrecked and distressed mariners and fishermen, and 3080 widows and orphans, or other suddenly bereaved and, in numerous instances, utterly destitute dependents. The wrecked and missing vessels concerned numbered, in all, 451, including ocean-going, coasting, and fishing craft, of every size and rig.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

By REV. F. INWOOD.

Judgments based upon surface appearances lead to false conclusions. A book may have its covers brilliant with gold and artistic design, and yet it may be utterly worthless; or again, its covers may be dirty, brown, and broken, and yet its contents of priceless value. If you want to find out what it is worth you must look within. Thus it is with the Christian life. It is not always the man who shouts the most that is the truest Christian. Fluency and fervency of speech are often mistaken for spirituality of life. A smattering of pious phrases may cover a very shallow piety. The priests who followed Korah were like those who followed Aaron. The fire of the one looked liked the fire of the other. In men's sight it was the same, in God's it was an abomination. It was "strange fire," the offering of which called down the vengeance of heaven upon the offerers. Lip service, however faultless and musical in its utterance, is only like the "strange fire." God will have no shams. He will only accept a service which springs from love to Him. The Christian life is something more than ritualistic formalism.

In Matthew viii. 19, 20, we read: "A certain scribe came, and said unto Him, Master, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. And Jesus said unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

In these words we see another fallacy of the Christian life exposed. This young scribe is a type of those who imagine it consists in mere pleasurable excitement and sentiment. He had seen Christ's wonder-working power and felt the charm. There was a pleasurable excitement in large crowds and rapturous applause. A life like this, which had none of the ennui of daily toil, and was far removed from the rut of common duties, must be delightful. He would then and there become a disciple. In the glow of the noontide sun he saw not the shadows on the horizon which told of storm. In the thrill of enthusiastic excitement he never thought of the strain of cross-bearing.

CHRIST BROKE THE SPELL.

He never deceived. He marked out the pathway with its privations and suffering, and of that zealous young scribe we hear no more. Let us learn the lesson. The life which consists in mere raptures and sentiment is not the true Christian life, even though it may bear the name. It is nothing unless it bears upon its shoulders the Cross. Bunting and show may interest the spectators and do for parade days, but they won't stand the wear and tear of the campaign. Mere enthusiasm, generated through the electrical utterances of some eloquent speaker at a great meeting, is as evanescent as the hoar-frost at spring-tide. The sentimental piety which trots around to every series of revival meetings, but is never found when there is a bit of hard work to do, and which feeds itself upon delightsome feelings, is no more the Christian life than the proverbial chalk is cheese. In Christ's Sermon on the Mount—that great charter of the religious life—Christ has inseparably united the yoke-bearing with the rest of soul; happiness with the duty, reward with the toil; and in this matter, what God hath joined together let no man put asunder. The Christian life, as defined by God's Word, goes a long way beyond excitement and pleasurable emotions.

It also means self-sacrifice. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich." That was Christ's example of self-sacrifice, and no life is "Christian" without it. Sacrifice has been lost in the dictionary of some professing Christians. It has been replaced by the word indulgence "writ large." Twenty pounds spent over a summer holiday, not twenty pence for the cause of the Lord; hours a week over novel-reading, not one spent in the study of God's word; plenty of time for recreation, but none for worship; endless labour to make an evening party a success, but no time for work in the vineyard of the Master. Religion means sacrifice, and unless there falls upon our lives the form of the Cross, these lives are defective.

The Christian life consists of holiness as well as love. Holiness in its negative side is a cleansed state. In its positive side it is cleansed actions. Hence purity of life springs from purity of heart, and purity of heart comes through Christ, the light of life filling our souls. Such is the Christian life. It springs from the twin root of love and purity, and blossoms into practical fruits in the pure, loving, Christ-like lives of men. The glory of Christ is its end, the word of Christ is its rule, the grace of Christ is its support.—Experience.

THE BIBLE & JAPANESE SOLDIERS.

On the 6th and 7th inst. I visited different portions of the Imperial Guard in Tokyo, and divided among them 18,500 copies of the Gospels and about forty copies of the New Testament. It was the request of Colonel Sameshima that the officers should receive the same as the men, and so but few copies of the New Testament were given to these troops.

When I called at the headquarters I was accompanied by Rev. Mr. MacNair, who had met Colonel Sameshima before, and, being much interested in the work among the soldiers, went with me to see what could be done in the way of opening religious services for their special benefit. We were met by Count Hisamatsu, who is one of the members of the staff; he had spent several years in France, and who was extremely polite and agreeable. The Colonel received us most cordially, and gave directions to the Count to receive the books that were to be given to the various small and scattered portions of the command. Both of these officers appeared to be greatly pleased with what we were doing, and desirous of promoting its success.

As we went to the various barracks we found that our visit had been arranged for from the headquarters, and we were everywhere met with extreme kindness and courtesy. While it would have been a great pleasure to have given the books personally to each soldier, I am fully satisfied that the official distribution was probably wisest and best, and all that we could reasonably ask. The hearty expression of thanks and kindly feeling on the part of all whom we met was as gratifying as it was unexpected.

The day following the completion of the work of distribution, I received a letter of thanks from Colonel Sameshima which is certainly a very remarkable and interesting document. The terms of address are those of profound respect, and I am confident that they are the expression of more than mere formal gratitude and appreciation.

The question of religious services in the barracks being suggested, Colonel Sameshima gave a ready assent, but said it was a matter that required the consent of the various post commanders, and he would consult with them and let us know the result.

Taking my letter of introduction from Admiral Ito (Vice-Minister of the Navy), and accompanied by Rev. Dr. Verbeck, I went to the naval station at Yokosuka. We were met at the railway station by a Christian surgeon who is attached to the marine barracks at that place, and who is greatly interested in the spiritual welfare of the seamen. Proceeding to the headquarters, we were met by Admiral Inouye with marked evidence of special interest and consideration. His chief of staff is an earnest Christian, and greeted us with real enthusiasm, and gave us most marked attention.

By the direction of the Admiral, all the men and officers in the barracks were assembled, and addressed by Dr. Verbeck and myself. We received the very best attention on the part of all, and it was remarked that there was a decided contrast between our reception and that given to a Buddhist priest who had addressed them but a few days before.

After many expressions of appreciation and thanks on the part of the officers, I accompanied the Christian doctor and the pastor of the native church to the hospital (Dr. Verbeck having returned). We found that our visit was looked for, and the sick and wounded were gathered in three of the largest wards, so that all could meet us and hear what we might have to say. The attention received and the interest shown on the part of everyone was gratifying in the extreme.

On the 12th inst. I went to Takesaki. My coming had been made known by Rev. Mr. Patton, of Mayebashi, and it was arranged that I should address the troops on the afternoon of the following day. The commanding officer was extremely kind, and when he learned that I desired to leave at an earlier hour in order to meet an appointment at Sendai, he sent an order to assemble the men at once, so that I could address them before I went away. Then he invited us to dinner, and entertained us in a most agreeable manner.

I reached Sendai on the 14th, and was received very cordially by the vice-commander of that division. He promised to receive the books and distribute them as desired. He also approved of the opening of a place for Christian services near the barracks, and will permit notices of the same to be given to the men.

A Japanese Christian, who is a teacher in the school at Sendai, was present at the interview. After it was ended he expressed his astonishment at the great change, and felt that here, as elsewhere, there are now opened such possibilities for Christian work as they had not dreamed of before.

In a letter received this morning from Rev. Dr. Moore, of Sendai, he writes that a committee has been appointed to consider the matter of what shall be done for the soldiers, and it was decided to open a place in the city, centrally located, as a sort of club or reading room, and two afternoons of each week are to be devoted to religious instruction. The five missions are represented in the movement, and they have also the co-operation of the Japanese Christians. He adds, "I have faith in the plan, and I believe that good will come of it. We are all glad that this work has been begun, and pray that it may bring forth a great harvest."

The personal distribution of the Scriptures has been permitted in Nagoya to most of the troops at that place as well as in Toyohashi. Before this was done the men were assembled, and an address was delivered by one of the missionaries or a native helper. A considerable work has also been done in the hospital. A full account of all would make this article much too long. To God be all the praise.

SOCIAL REFORM IN SOUTH LONDON.

An important meeting in connection with the South London Evangelical Free Church Federation was held on Friday evening at the Lambeth Baths, Mr. Percy Bunting in the chair.

Mr. J. O. Bairstow, secretary of the Social Purity and Vigilance Branch, made some startling statements with regard to the horrible moral condition of some parts of South London. He also gave an account of interesting rescue work carried on under the auspices of the Association, assisted by Mr. McCrie and his workers of the Midnight Meeting Movement.

The Chairman gave a lucid explanation of the law with regard to vigilance matters, emphasising especially the position that every citizen is bound to see that the law is enforced. He condemned the apathy of the public towards the whole question.

Rev. John Fleming, general secretary of the Federation, described the origin of the movement, which was designed to unite all the ministers and Christian workers of South London in a determined crusade against indifference to religion, impurity, gambling, and drunkenness. He made an earnest and vigorous appeal to all present in favour of holy living.

Rev. F. Docker proposed a resolution calling on the London County Council to continued efforts for social and moral reform. Mrs. H. Whitall Smith carried the audience with her in earnest pleading for more faithful dealing on the part of parents with their children on questions of purity. She was especially vigorous in her appeals for the help of women in even interesting themselves in live questions when they concerned their own sex and children.

Rev. J. B. Barraclough appealed to ministers of religion and other workers to aid in the social elevation of the population, in establishing a strong and healthy public sentiment in favour of an equal standard of purity for men and women, and in putting into force the existing laws against public solicitation and houses of ill fame.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in a powerful address, dealt earnestly with the question of rescue work, emphasising the fact that many poor women are driven into a sinful life by poverty, others by wicked outrage, and nearly all by criminal surroundings. He announced that he intended to have a room opened in his own church to which the poor sisters of the neighbourhood should be invited whenever they pleased, and where they should be dealt with kindly about their unhappy circumstances.

Rev. W. Mottram and Rev. Mr. Milne also took part in the meeting.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 14.—2 COR. XII

Sufficient Grace (1-10).—It has been supposed that this experience took place when Paul was stoned at Lydia. They thought him dead, but his spirit was beholding the visions of God, to return with new ardour to his work. Some of us will miss God's best, because we have never braved the extreme hate of man. (2) The third heaven is Paradise: what must not the seventh be? It is only men in Christ to whom such things are possible. To be with Christ is to be in Paradise. Did He not promise to the dying thief that ere night fell he should be with Him in Paradise? All that the first Adam forfeited by his sin, we regain through the Second, and more. (7) Perhaps this thorn was ophthalmia, but it is of little consequence. The more important point is to notice that Paul attributed its presence to Satan's malevolence. But above all, he believed that God had permitted it for some wise purpose. Let us not be ever looking at the thorn or Satan, but away to the Divine will and to the Divine grace. (9) We never know what God can be till we are reduced to veriest weakness. It is only in weakness that his power is perfected. Let us therefore glory in all that, to the eyes of men, might cramp or imperil our efficiency: there shall be no real failure, because, in response to our faith, God will more than compensate for our lack. The less of self, the more room there is for God.

The Signs of an Apostle (11-31).—Paul was very tenacious of his apostolate, not for his own glory, but for the comfort of his converts, and because of the testimony he was able to give to the resurrection of the Lord. Notice that the signs of an apostle consist as much in patience as in mighty works. What touching phrases: "I seek not yours, but you"; "I will be most gladly spent out for your souls"; "in the sight of God speak we in Christ." Each is a sweet morsel, deserving meditation. (20) How completely the Apostle's happiness and life seemed involved in the spiritual condition of the members of this church. Such sympathy with those whom we would benefit is the condition of a successful ministry.

MONDAY APRIL 15.—2 COR. XIII.

Christ's Indwelling (1-10).—Very emphatically the Apostle declares that Christ is speaking within him, not in the weakness of Calvary, but in the strength and majesty of his throne. That weakness was momentary, but his might and glory are eternal. Let us see to it, that we become such transparent mediums for Him, that the Risen and Glorified Christ may indeed be mighty through us towards those whom we address. The power of God is ever willing to pass through us as cleansed channels. (5) Better be sure on this side of the grave, than awake to the doom of the self-deceived. There are but these alternatives. We are either reprobates, or the Christ of God is actually and blessedly resident within. You are sure that you are not a reprobate, you have definitely chosen and surrendered yourself to the Lord Jesus, then He has most certainly taken up his abode within you. If you would only accept this, and make way for Him, you would become aware of the energy of his life working through your being. (8) No one can really injure the truth. As well try to stop the sunrise. All opposition will sooner or later be merged in the triumph of truth. (9) It is the noblest life which, through its own expenditure, builds up others. (10) The world is apt at destruction: and indeed not much art is needed for pulling down. But the Divine work in the world is one of construction. The Lord gives us all authority for building up.

Farewell (11-14).—Be perfected, is really be adjusted, properly jointed, articulated. God wants to set us, as the skilful surgeon does in the case of of a dislocated limb. Let Him do it. Let Him comfort, as a mother does. Let love and peace have sway within the sphere of heart and life; so shall the Holy Dove abide. (14) This threefold benediction is a proof text on the doctrine of the Trinity, but it is more, in so beautifully attributing to each blessed Person his appropriate grace. The love of the Father is the fountain of all; the grace of the Lord Jesus the channel of all; whilst the communion of the Holy Ghost conducts us into partnership with the aims and resources of God.

TUESDAY, APRIL 16.—GAL. I.

Deliverance (1-5).—Paul insisted on having received his commission direct. It was pleasant that he should associate with himself the brethren who were of much humbler rank, but Christianity knows but one order—that the lowliest are the greatest. (3) The enjoyment of grace and peace is only possible when sin has been dealt with, and when we have been brought out of the transient and visible into the unseen and eternal. Do we live in view of this stupendous fact? This age is evil enough, but we do not belong to it. We have come out of it, as Israel out of Egypt, and this is the will of God.

Another Gospel (4-10).—It was not another form of the one Gospel to which the Judaizing teachers were enticing Paul's converts, but to a different one, a perversion, a travesty. There is but one Gospel, the message of which is the unmerited love of God in Jesus Christ, altogether apart from right and ceremony. (10) Though an apostle, a slave; though eager to win men, never swerving to please them. To please Christ makes us superior to man's fear or favour.

A Fragment of Autobiography (11-24).—Paul was forgiven, but he never could forget how he wrought havoc in the church, or magnify sufficiently the good pleasure of God in his appointment. (16) Has Jesus Christ been revealed as the Indweller? If not, ask that He may be. Only so can you preach Him. (17) In opposition to the allegations of the false teachers, it was most necessary to establish his reception of the Gospel at first hand, that all might be convinced at the independence of his testimony. Let us learn to glorify God in one another.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17.—GAL. II.

Paul's Relations to the Church at Jerusalem (1-10).—Even when he appeared before the Apostles, they altered none of his methods. They ratified his teaching, and commissioned him for the Gentiles. Notice that a man must move by revelation; that it is well to compare our teaching with the general current of Evangelical doctrine; that we must never yield even in non-essentials when compliance may be misinterpreted; that men are entrusted with special functions; that God works in and through his servants; that as we yield to the Spirit He becomes mighty in us; that with all our teaching we must combine philanthropy towards the poor. These are stay hints of the habitual tenor of the Apostle's thought and practice. They are the sculpturings on the pillar of his strong and noble life.

Peter's Vacillation (11-21).—A man may have been filled with the Holy Ghost, and yet act unworthily of the Gospel. Let us beware. It was not the first time that Peter had failed in a crisis. He feared to outrage the strong Hebrew sentiment of the converted Jews, and his mistake involved many others. Paul argued that to go back to ceremonialism was to contradict justification through faith. If legalism were right, then they were guilty of a great sin in having left Moses. If the Gospel were right, it was absurd to add legal exactions to what Christ had finished. (20) In the meanwhile a high tone of living was secured by the fact that the cross stood between the believer and his past, whilst Christ indwelt, living through every avenue of the being, and effecting a righteousness more perfect than ever could have been secured by the most exact observance of the outward observance of the law.

THURSDAY, APRIL 18.—GAL. III.

Christ made a Curse (1-14).—The whole controversy turns on the relative positions of faith and works, in which the entire weight of Scripture and experience argued for the sufficiency of faith. Through it we may receive the Spirit; through it we may minister the Spirit to others; through it Abraham was justified. Faith is the Gerizim of the Gospel, the home of blessing. The work of the law is Ebal. Once and for ever Christ has set us free from the curse of the law. It alighted on Him, hence his forsakenness and anguish of soul. There is therefore nothing to hinder the love of God, as expressed in his blessing on Abraham, coming freely on all who believe. The promise of the Spirit is for all, but must be appropriated by a living faith.

The Seed (15-22).—Note the stress the Apostle lays on the singular—the absence of the "s" determines the trend of his teaching. Abraham's seed is Christ and all who believe. The law of Sinai and Leviticus was a parenthesis. The Church is in the true line of descent from the patriarch. Each of us may claim the provisions of that early covenant that led Abraham from Haran to Canaan.

Sons of God (23-29).—The law was but a tutor. Legalism is no state of freedom, but of irritating surveillance. Let your life be moulded, not by an exterior legislation, but an in-forming Spirit. Directly you believe, you are a child. All who believe make up the second man, Christ. Are you Christ's? Then are you heirs of that incomparable heritage of blessing which God gave to the first Hebrew.

FRIDAY, APRIL 19.— GAL. IV.

The Spirit of the Son (1-7).—The Son has come that we might be sons. He obeyed the ceremonial law that He might emancipate us for ever from its pressure. He took upon Himself the form of a servant, that we might become heirs of God. We are first made sons, and then become conscious of the cry of the spirit of adoption. We do not always feel that we are children. The test that we are children is that we feel God to be Father.

Known of God (8-20).—Surely to be free, whether from idols or from ceremonies, was more worthy of those who were capable of knowing God. It was inconceivable that they should voluntarily turn back. Their vacillation was evidently due to sinister influence exerted on them by false teachers tampering with their frank and ingenuous disposition. They had received him with open arms, now they were equally opposed. Changeful, fickle, wayward, such were the Gauls. How bitterly this great lover of souls suffered! With him it was travail. None of us should be satisfied until Christ is formed in us, and in those we love. Oh, to be zealous in good things at all times!

The Allegory of Ishmael and Isaac (21-31).—In every heart, as in the early Church, there is perpetual conflict between the flesh and spirit; but all that partakes of legalism misses the inheritance. Directly we import our own merit or effort into our dealings with God, we miss the unsearchable riches of the Gospel. Hagar and Ishmael must be banished; Isaac, the child of promise, must fill our heart with laughter; only so can we have peace.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20.—GAL. V.

Severed from Christ (1-12).—We are absolutely free. Free from the curse of the broken law, from the slavery of indwelling corruption, from the necessity for ceremonialism, and to forego this, and to take up with the system of which circumcision was the sign, indicated so absolute a misunderstanding of the whole system of the Gospel as made it clear that there had never been any real connection with the Saviour. Circumcision could no more commend a man to God than ermine can make a judge; and it was foolish and wrong to insist upon an outward rite in connection with a great spiritual system. Let us beware lest we put any rite where these men put Leviticus.

Flesh and Spirit (13-26).—It might be argued that to relax the bondage of Moses would be to throw open the doors to self-indulgence. But the Apostle replies that the Spirit of Jesus is love, and perfect love is law-fulfilling. Moreover, there is the work of the Holy Spirit, which is expressly intended for the ordering of heart and life. If a man walks in the Spirit, he cannot fulfil the promptings of the self-principle which is its keen antagonist. If the Spirit is in the soul like sap, his fruits will abound in the life; besides, on the cross of Christ the believer has left the flesh, and entered into a new world, where love and purity are supreme. To walk by the Spirit, to be led by the Spirit, to live by the Spirit, this is the sole and sufficient condition of a holy and God-pleasing life.

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.—According to "Whitaker's Almanack," Lincoln Fair is the greatest fair in England. It is held the last week in April. Mr. Northcote Willy intends visiting this fair, and would be glad of parcels of good Gospel tracts for free distribution among the crowds at Lincoln during the fair week. Parcels of tracts, carriage paid, may be sent to the office of the Bible Carriage Mission, 123, Victoria-road, Headingley, Leeds.

HAMPSHIRE VILLAGE MISSION.—The work of this mission has been greatly blessed during the six years it has been established. Colporteurs and Gospel cars visit every year about 200 villages and hamlets in Hants, Wilts, Sussex, and Surrey, preaching the Gospel, conducting house-to-house visitation, circulating the word of God and Gospel literature. The testimony of many is that it has been a means of grace to their souls. The 1894 report shows a deficiency of nearly £50, and this cripples the work somewhat. Scripture portions, penny testaments, Gospel books and tracts are needed for distribution in the villages and at fairs, markets, etc. Mr. J. Hasell Charlton, Hants Village Mission Depot, Fareham, Hants, is superintendent.

Watchfulness.—Matt. xxiv. 42-51.

Golden Text.—Mark xiii. 33.

It is generally agreed that this discourse was spoken on Tuesday afternoon, when our Lord, having left Jerusalem, was on his way to Bethany. It was spoken from the Mount of Olives, overlooking the city. It was called forth by a remark of the disciples (1), and their subsequent question (3). This lesson is occupied chiefly with the first of the parables, in which our Lord enforces the duty of watchfulness.

The event which calls for watchfulness is the second coming of Christ. It was not fulfilled in the gift of the Holy Ghost, nor in the destruction of Jerusalem. The first was doubtless a coming of Christ spiritually, and the second may be regarded as a coming in judgment; but in neither event was there a personal, visible coming such as Jesus promised, and such as the angels led the disciples to expect (Acts i. 11). The event of the future upon which we may calculate with absolute certainty is that the same Jesus whom this world crucified will come again.

Concerning this event, our Lord tells us that it will take the world by surprise (37-41). The parallel between the ungodly world and the men of Noah's day holds good. "They knew not until the flood came." But were they not warned? Yes; so are men to-day. But how few heed the warning! The weather forecast for a day makes more impression upon men than the announcement of the Saviour's return! Among those who profess to be his servants some will be found unwatchful. To such the coming will resemble that of a thief in the night (43). To all, whether faithful or unfaithful, the word applies, "Ye know not." To attempt to fix the day or hour is worse than foolish; it is wicked. Do you think He may come this year, this month, this week, to-day? You say, "I think not." Note our Lord's reply, "In such an hour as ye think not." The most unlikely time in the judgment of men may be his time. Therefore, be ready always.

In the streets of our towns and cities fire-escapes are to be seen in various places. Why? Because since a fire may occur at any moment, prudence suggests that preparation should be made for it. In a steamer which takes the shortest journeys there is always a supply of life-buoys. They may be needed at any moment, therefore they are ever at hand. Are we as wise in preparing for this greater event? Put the question to each one—Are you ready?

The parable (45-51) instructs us as to the consequences of his coming, and as to what watchfulness and true readiness really mean. The question, "Who?" (45) suggests that such servants are not commonly found (Luke xviii. 8). The term servant applies not only to those who hold official position, but to all disciples. See parable of the labourers (xx. 1-16). "Faithful" is first, because there is no true wisdom where faithfulness is wanting. We cannot command success, but we are responsible for being faithful. The work is that of ministering to others, whether as public teachers or in any other way in which love can prompt us to serve. Such fidelity is true watchfulness (46). Not in speculations about the time of his Lord's coming; not in a vain curiosity that leaves practical service for profitless dreaming, but in "doing." At the Lord's coming such a man has a double blessing—first that of doing his Lord's will (James i. 25), and next that of the reward to be given him (47).

The evil servant (48-51) gives us a dark picture. It is to be feared that such are so numerous that there is no need to ask, "Who is he?" No one desires to find them, and if he did they are too numerous to need looking for. He is still called a "servant"—not that he is one actually, but he has taken the position of one. He is dealt with according to his profession. He still says "My Lord," yet the title, so far from expressing a true relationship, only increases the man's responsibility (See Luke vi. 46.) He is not like the scoffers who deny that the Lord is coming. He believes in the fact; but "in his heart" says that the time is not yet. The wrong thought leads to wrong action. He takes advantage of his Lord's delay. He would like to be found attentive when the Lord comes, but for the present he may do his own will. But while thus wickedly employed the Lord comes, and judgment falls. The true character of the man now appears. He professed to be a servant, he proves to have been a hypocrite, for among the hypocrites he finds "his own place."

The lessons suggested are—(1) Be Christ's in truth, and not merely in pretence. Receive Him as Saviour, and yield to Him as Lord. (2) Watch against everything you would not wish to be doing when He appears. (3) Be occupied always for Him.

For the Young.

Very tiny and pale the little girl looked as she stood before those three grave and dignified gentlemen. She had been ushered into Rev. Dr. Gordon's study, where he was holding counsel with two of his deacons, and now, upon inquiry into the nature of her errand, a little shyly preferred the request to be allowed to become a member of his church.

"You are quite too young to join the church," said one of the deacons, "you had better run home, and let us talk to your mother."

She showed no sign of running, however, as her wistful blue eyes travelled from one face to another of the three gentlemen sitting in their comfortable chairs; she only drew a little step nearer to Dr. Gordon. He arose, and with the gentle courtesy that ever marked him, placed her in a small chair close beside himself.

"Now, my child, tell me your name, and where you live?" "Annie Graham, sir, and I live on K—— Street. I go to your Sunday-school."

"You do; and who is your teacher?" "Miss B——. She is very good to me."

"And you want to join the church?" The child's face glowed as she leaned eagerly towards him, clasping her hands, but all she said was "Yes, sir."

"She cannot be more than six years old," said one of the deacons, disapprovingly. Dr. Gordon said nothing, but quietly regarded the small, earnest face, now becoming a little downcast.

"I am ten years old; older than I look," she said.

"It is not usual for us to admit anyone so young to membership," he said, thoughtfully. "We never have done so; still——"

"It may make an undesirable precedent," remarked the other deacon. The doctor did not seem to hear, as he asked, "You know what joining the church is, Annie?"

"Yes, sir;" and she answered a few questions that proved she comprehended the meaning of the step she wished to take. She had slipped off her chair, and now stood close to Dr. Gordon's knee.

"You said, last Sabbath, sir, that the lambs should be in the fold——"

"I did," he answered, with one of his own lovely smiles. "It is surely not for us to keep them out. Go home now, my child. I will see your friends and arrange to take you into membership very soon." The cloud lifted from the child's face, and her expression, as she passed through the door he opened for her, was one of entire peace.

Inquiries made of Annie's Sabbath-school teacher proving satisfactory, she was baptized the following week, and, except for occasional information from Miss B., that she was doing well, Dr. Gordon heard no more of her for about a year.

Then he was summoned to her funeral. It was one of June's hottest days, and as the doctor made his way along the narrow street on which Annie had lived, he wished, for a moment, that he had asked his assistant to come instead of himself, but as he neared the house, the crowd filled him with wonder; progress was hindered, and as perforce he paused for a moment, his eye fell on a crippled lad crying bitterly as he sat on a low doorstep.

"Did you know Annie Graham, my lad?" he asked. "Know her, is it, sir? Niver a week passed but what she came twice or thrice with a picture or book, mayhap an apple for me, an' it's owin' to her an' no clargy at all that I'll iver follow her blessed footsteps to heaven. She'd read me from her own Bible wheniver she came, an' now she's gone there'll be none at all to help me, for mother's dead an' dad's drunk, and the sunshine's gone from Mike's sky with Annie, sir."

A burst of sobs choked the boy; Dr. Gordon passed on, after promising him a visit very soon, making his way through the crowd of tear-stained, sorrowful faces. The doctor came to a stop again in the narrow passageway of the little house. A woman stood beside him drying her fast falling tears, while a wee child hid his face in her skirts and wept. "Was Annie a relative of yours?" the doctor asked. "No, sir; but the blessed child was at our house constantly, and when Bob here was sick she nursed and tended him, and her hymns quieted him when nothing else seemed to do it. It was just the same with all the neighbours. What she's been to us no one but the Lord will ever know, and now she lies there."

Recognised at last, Dr. Gordon was led to the room where the child lay at rest, looking almost younger than when he had seen her in his study a year ago. An old bent woman was crying aloud by the coffin.

"I never thought she'd go afore I did. She used to run in regular to read an' sing to me every evening, an' it was her talk an' prayers that made a Christian of me; you could a'most go to heaven on one of her prayers."

"Mother, mother, come home," said a young man, putting his arm round her to lead her away. "You'll see her again."

"I know, I know; she said she'd wait for me at the gate," she sobbed, as she followed him; "but I miss her sore now."

A silence fell on those assembled, and, marvelling at such testimony, Dr. Gordon proceeded with the service, feeling as if there was little more he could say of one whose deeds thus spoke for her. Loving hands had laid flowers all around the child who had led them. One tiny lassie had placed a dandelion in the small waxen fingers, and now stood, abandoned to grief, beside the still form that bore the impress of absolute purity. The service over, again and again was the coffin lid waved back by some one longing for one more look, and they seemed as if they could not let her go.

The next day a good-looking man came to Dr. Gordon's house and was admitted into his study.

"I am Annie's uncle, sir," he said simply. "She never rested till she made me promise to join the church, and I've come."

Dr. Gordon sat in the twilight, resting after his visitor had left. The summer breeze blew in through the windows, and his thoughts turned backward and dwelt on what his little parishioner had done.

"Truly a marvellous record for one year. It is well said, Their angels do ever behold his face."

L. C. W. in The Christian Arbitrator.

* The incidents in the following little sketch were given to the writer by Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon, at Northfield, Mass. His recent departure is to so very many a most personal loss, that any reminiscence of him will be welcome.

CRIPPLE CHILDREN.

St. Matt. xviii. 5.

O my sisters, O my brothers,
As you tread the thronged byway,
Have you seen them midst the others,
Cripple children at their play?

Or a scanty pittance earning,
As for daily bread they seek,
Wistful faces, pale, upturning,
Quivering lip, and wasted cheek?

Sadder still, in dwellings dreary,
Weak and helpless do they lie,
Sick and suffering, faint and weary,
Whilst the hours pass slowly by.

Oh, if pen or brush could borrow
Tints to paint their lot of woe!
Oh, if words could tell their sorrow,
How the pitying tears would flow!

Brothers, sisters, we must know them,
Seek them out in court and street,
Find in Christ the love we owe them,
Surely here his wounded feet.

Blessed is the work and holy,
Sweet their meed who toil for such,
Unto all, both high and lowly,
The dear Saviour's "Inasmuch."

MISS RYE'S EMIGRATION HOME,

Famous as Miss Rye's name has become as a leader in the good work of emigrating children and giving them a chance in life beyond the sea, it is interesting to look back on those early years when she first entered on service in a Ragged School, where the hopeless condition of many little ones began to dawn upon her mind. She herself writes in her latest report :—

A quarter of a century has passed since my devoted secretary and myself wandered up and down the Strand, wondering and planning, and praying for wisdom to discover how the neglected children of London could be helped and gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd, and saved from the gutter and the slums. Both of us were well acquainted and connected with both Ragged and Sunday school work. For some years previous I had been engaged in sending women to New Zealand and Australia; the work had been successful, but in examining the candidates for emigration, I had been painfully struck by the physical, mental and moral unfitness of the majority of the women anxious to go abroad. Slowly—but surely—it dawned upon us, that these incapables were once little children, and then the problem was solved; the Americans had carried the débris of their war—the orphaned and deserted children left in their big cities—into the Far West, and domiciled the little ones in the farm houses of the prairies; could we not in some way imitate their work? You have here the inception and birth of the Emigration of Children; only the Atlantic lay between the perishing children and the plenty of Canada, but the sea is his, and his high road to abundance.

Since I left Liverpool in October, 1869, with the first sixty children, literally thousands have followed us—something like 30,000, I believe—and thousands of households have been made brighter by the presence of the children.

For the reception of these children a house formerly a county court and jail was taken in the old capital town of Upper Canada, Niagara-on-the-Lake, and this has served as a distributing home ever since. Miss Rye now resides, for the most part, in her Canadian Home, devoting herself to the distributing of the parties as they arrive, and the motherly oversight of those already placed out. She has also a second Home for the reception of girls who cannot keep their situations. This is under the care of a lady well fitted for this very difficult post.

AN EMPTY HOME.

Soon after the start of the work the need was felt for a Reception and Training Home in London. A suitable house was found in Peckham, which was opened in 1872 by the Earl of Shaftesbury, who interested himself greatly in this work. This Home has since then been much enlarged, while the addition of two and a-half acres of ground allows the girls freedom to run about. Visiting, last week, this Home, I found the place strangely quiet, and the secretary, Miss Still, presiding over an empty house. The truth is a strong party had just been sent off to Canada, and the new inmates, who will soon make the walls resound with merry play, had not yet been received. In the course of conversation I inquired :—

"Where do you find your girls ?"

"We do not find them—they are brought to us."

"By whom, may I ask ?"

"By Bible-women, clergymen, ministers, missionaries, and all manner of workers among the poor. Besides, widows and widowers come pleading for our help on behalf of children. Poor neighbourly women, too, often take much trouble to secure the reception of some little waif."

"Being here : what do you do with them ?"

"TRAIN THEM FOR HONEST WORK :

seek to correct the innumerable evil consequences of early neglect; and above all, and as our chiefest aim, we strive to win them to the Saviour. We have also a school attached, and while here they are educated—some come in scarce knowing a letter."

"At what age do you receive them ?"

"From four years old to sixteen; but the bulk are between nine and thirteen."

"How long do you keep them in this Training Home ?"

"That entirely depends on the case. Mostly three to six months, but occasionally a year or two. We do not send any out to Canada unless we are satisfied they are fitted for the life they will lead in farm homes for which we train them. As Miss Rye writes :—The earthly secret of our success lies in the fact that our children are early taught to work. While here they see us working all the time, and they learn to love what we love. When they get to the farm-houses, the same working with, rather than for, the mistress, carries on what we have commenced, until work becomes second nature and then the only danger is (when married) in overworking themselves, to make a competence into an independence; for there is no end to the ambitions of some of our girls. Three of them have to my knowledge bought 400dols. pianos for their daughters' benefit; one has paid 800dols. out of her own earnings for a homestead; and another, with a higher and far nobler ambition, has 150 infants in her Sunday-school class."

Among the lifelike touches in the report before me I find the following quaint remarks : Once we had heavy rain here. Large drops as big as florins fell here and there, when one of the little ones said, "Are these God's tears for the sins of the people ?" Another little one said, "I love you, and will put you into my prayers to-night." And another, "Dear Miss Rye, I am converted; and oh ! only those who are converted know what it means."

Here Miss Still opened a portfolio, and spread before me a number of photographs showing strange contrasts between the wastrel who was, and the comely young woman who is. The life-history of every girl who has passed through the Home is preserved and accessible if need be. Indeed the whole organisation and management show care and forethought.

"May I ask what do you reckon each rescued and emigrated child costs ?"

"Including training, clothing, and keep here, passage-money and outfit, and expenses in Canada, we reckon each girl costs us from first to last £15."

"How many have you sent out ?"

"About 2000 have passed through this Home; but, including the little workhouse girls, we have sent out altogether about 4000 to Canada."

"And now what about spiritual result ? Do you find you are training these children for God ?"

"We do, indeed; otherwise we could not go on with it. We know of hundreds who are now living to the glory of God, and serving Him in many ways. One of our old girls is one of Bishop Taylor's missionaries in Liberia; numbers are Sunday-school teachers."

"What about ways and means ?"

"We leave that with the Lord, who inclines the hearts of his people to support our work. He has done so from the first, and we are fully assured He will never fail us."

I need only add that the secretary, Miss Lizzie Still, may be addressed, Avenue House, High-street. Peckham, S.E.

EASTER SONG.

The Risen Lord.

"The Lord is risen indeed !"—Luke xxiv. 34.

Julia H. Johnston. D. B. Towner.

Mr. Heyman Wreford,

EVANGELIST, EXETER.

The God-honoured worker whose portrait appears on this page is a conspicuous example of the eternal verity of the apostolic word that the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to him that believeth. For some fifteen years past, in the old cathedral city of Exeter, Mr. Heyman Wreford has been proving that fact in an increasing degree week after week. A man of ample gifts intellectually, of great spiritual energy and abounding zeal, he has during these years been instrumental in leading multitudes out of the thraldom of sin into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Mr. Wreford was happy in his ancestry. His father, Mr. Samuel Wreford, of Exeter, was a man of high character and earnest in Christian work; so that the son had the best possible example set before him. He tenderly tells how his father when passing away left as his spiritual legacy a bright and inspiring testimony, after a life of service to Christ. The son had himself early in life faced eternal realities, and had consecrated himself to the work of an evangelist. We cannot do better in this short sketch than quote some paragraphs from the review by Mr. Wreford of the first ten years of his work as a Gospel preacher among the masses of his native city:—

The seed-time of the work among us was a time of tears and prayer. We sowed in tears that we might reap in joy. Week after week, few in number, we met together to cry to God for the unsaved around us. In answer to prayer we were led to take the Assembly Rooms, 101, Fore-street, Exeter, in October, 1880. The room was small, holding about 250 people. Here God gave us great blessing, and many of those who were converted then are helping us in the work to this day. Many notorious sinners were saved—men who had been known as drunkards and blasphemers and immoral. And we had mighty men of prayer among us. One brother now with Christ would pray for hours in the day, for the Gospel.

But God had greater blessing for us still, and in November, 1882, it was felt by many that the time had come to take a larger building. The Royal Public Rooms was taken in December. This building is capable of containing nearly 1000 people. We took it for a month at first, fearing it might be too large for us. But God was with us, for at the end of the month so many came to listen to the word that it was clearly shown us we should continue the services there. In looking back upon those days of wonderful blessing our thoughts always turn to the small room under the platform, where week after week so many crowded to the prayer meeting that there was scarcely standing room. And how those unceasing petitions were answered! Every week very many confessed Christ, and as the time passed on so many crowded to the hall that hundreds had to be turned away. Every available seat was filled a quarter of an hour before the meeting began. In December, 1883, we commenced an afternoon service at three, in addition to the evening one, and a blessing rested upon us at both these services. Many policemen, railway men, avowed infidels, and well-known drunkards were converted, and boldly proclaimed their trust in Christ in our open-air meetings held every night in different parts of our city.

Again came the longing desire in many hearts for a still larger place. This was felt to be a most serious step, and one that demanded the exercise of much earnest waiting upon God. Difficulties were one by one swept aside, and on Sunday, April 6, 1884, we held our Gospel services for the first time in the Victoria Hall, Queen-street. Here we had accommodation for more than 2000 people, and from that day to the present, Sunday after Sunday, the Gospel has been proclaimed in that large hall. I feel I would rather leave to others to tell the story of God's great goodness to us through all these years. In many homes in Exeter the story can be told, and in eternity all will be revealed.

It will be readily understood that the labours of Mr. Wreford and his warm-hearted helpers were not confined to the public preaching of the Gospel message on Sabbath days. A network of Christian effort grew up, every branch of which was a fruitful feeder of the salvation work carried on. Special services were held among the young. A large Bible-class for young men was a training school for numbers of earnest and effective helpers. Visitation was carried on throughout the city by a large band of workers. This department of service involved the distribution of much Gospel literature. To meet these demands a Gospel depôt was opened at 42, High-street, Exeter, in 1890, and it continues to be a centre for the diffusion of large supplies of printed matter, in the shape of tracts and narratives suitable for arousing the careless and leading them to spiritual decision.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Baker-street, W.)

While unsparing of effort as an evangelist, Mr. Wreford has also been busy with pen and printing press. Many of his stirring Victoria Hall addresses have been published and scattered abroad. Since 1884 he has issued a little halfpenny monthly magazine called A Message from God. Each number contains short, red-hot, narrative and other Gospel appeals. The diffusion of such literature is the best possible antidote to the sceptical or corrupting material thrown off by the teeming press of to-day, and the Gospel depôt forms a worthy handmaid to the more public work of the platform.

One of the most notable events in Mr. Wreford's history was his lengthened tour round the world in the early part of 1892. He had lately taken to himself a helpmeet, and the young couple spent the first year or so of their married life in travel. They visited in turn Egypt, Syria, Ceylon, Japan, Canada, and the United States—a truly admirable and enviable honeymoon jaunt. But it was with them no mere holiday trip. Full notes of the journey, with its many incidents, accidents, and fresh experiences, were kept and stored up for future use in the Master's work. The fruit of the deeply interesting sojourn in the Holy Land has been found, partially at any rate, in the pages of the little monthly which Mr. Wreford edits; and its readers have enjoyed many a delightful sketch of the impressions received while traversing those holy fields that were for ever made sacred by the footsteps of the Saviour. Mr. Wreford's poetic gifts, which are considerable, and his vivid literary style, found worthy themes in these months of travel in Syria. We must make one brief specimen prose extract from the January issue for this year of A Message from God. The writer is describing "Evening in the Holy Land":—

The day was drawing to its close, and our horses looked eagerly to where, on a wide plateau, the white tents of our encampment were seen; and although we were some distance from them yet, still the sight of rest was good for all of us. How beautiful for faith to be able to look up from earth's journeying to "the rest that remains to the people of God," and to be able to anticipate the glorious happiness of the Father's house....How often, as we rode along, have I peopled the scenes through which we passed. I have seen the renovating hand restore the lost fertility of ages. The waiting land seems to cry aloud for the people of God, and the watching hills seem to look afar to catch the first beams of the sun of emancipation....Around are the solemn olive trees, and below the fertile fields. As the shadows deepen, the points of light in the azure floor shine one by one—like angel eyes. The last bird has reached its nest, the drowsy hum of the insect is heard no more, and over all the scene once peopled by the tents of Issachar, the stillness of the evening reigns. Oh! blessed calm! Oh! fragrant night. The rush of nations is unheard here, the machinery of life moves slowly, and the pulsations of our being seem to harmonise with the peaceful throbbings of the heart of nature. God of eternity! Thy presence fills the scene. To Thee this night we bend the knees and fold adoring hands in prayer, and under the skies of Palestine, where Christ was crucified, own Him to be our Lord to the glory of God the Father.

During Mr. Wreford's long absence the work at Exeter was well sustained, the burden of preaching work falling on a fellow evangelist, Mr. John Beaumont. A very warm welcome awaited the traveller when he returned to his post at Victoria Hall, where he still heralds forth, week by week, the sweet gospel invitation, with many signs following. While he is not lacking in capacity for eloquence of speech of no mean order, Mr. Wreford's words are in the demonstration of the Holy Ghost, and in power. His work at Victoria Hall is a bright and powerful testimony for God in a populous centre, where frigid and formal religiousness is too prevalent, and where the forces of evil are confessedly strong. May God spare and qualify him to keep alight the beacon fires of warning and brotherly entreaty among the careless masses of the great western city.

Mr. Wreford, we may add, is now qualifying himself as a physician, in order that he may minister with skill and effect to the wants of the bodies as well as the souls of his fellow men.

THE CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE FOR LADS, Cumming-street and Collier-street, Pentonville, N., tells in its quarterly letter of much sorrow and distress amongst the poor people. But the women's Bible class has given great encouragement, and the Wednesday night girls' class also is most satisfactory. The work among the boys also goes on well.

CLEAR SHINING AFTER RAIN.

By Dr. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

One of the numberless touches of exquisite poetry in the Old Testament is that which describes the "tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." The verdant grass plot which gladdens the eye is the result of a double process—shower and sunshine. Both are indispensable. We find in this beautiful expression a type of our deepest and richest spiritual experiences. It is a type of the most thorough work of conversion by the Holy Spirit. Over every impenitent soul hangs the dark cloud of God's righteous displeasure; his Holy Word thunders against sin, and his threatenings beat like a storm of hail. Repentance and faith in Christ sweep away this cloud; the thunders cease; the face of the atoning, pardoning Saviour looks forth like a clear blue sky after a storm; for there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus. No two cases of conversion are exactly similar, yet in every thorough work of grace the darkness and dread which belong to a state of guilt give place to the smile and peace of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

What is true in the beginnings of the most thorough Christian life is often realised in the subsequent experiences of the believer. Rain and sunshine both play their part in developing godly character. It ought to be a comfort to such of my readers as are under the heavy downpour of trials to open their Bibles and read how it fared with some of God's most faithful children. Abraham toiled on his sorrowful way to Mount Moriah under a dark cloud of apprehension; but the clear shining came when God approved his faith and spared the beloved son Isaac to the father's heart. The successive strokes of trial that burst on the head of Joseph only made his exaltation the more signal when he became prime minister of Egypt. There are forty-one chapters of the Book of Job through which beats the tempest which smote the four corners of his house, but in the forty-second chapter comes the clear shining after rain, and a blaze of restored prosperity. The biographies of Elijah and of Daniel prove how light is sown for the righteous; and the eleventh chapter to the Hebrews is a meteorological record to show how faith paints rainbows on thunder clouds.

In our days God often employs stormy providences for the discipline and perfecting of his own people. He knows when we need the drenchings. Every rain-drop has its mission to perform. It goes right down to the roots of the heart, and creeps into every crevice. Not one drop of sorrow, not one tear, but may have some beneficent purpose. The process is not joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness and purity and strength. Christ's countenance never beams with such brightness and beauty as when it breaks forth after a deluge of sorrow; and many a Christian has become a braver, stronger, and holier man or woman for terrible afflictions; there has been a clear shining after rain.

This principle has manifold applications. Sometimes a cloud of unjust calumny gathers over a good man's name; lies darken the air, and it pours falsehoods, forty days and forty nights. But when the shower of slander has spent itself, the truth creeps out slowly but surely from behind the clouds of defamation, and the slandered character shines with more lustre than ever. The same storm that wrecks a rotten tree only roots the more firmly the sound tree, whose leaves glisten in the subsequent sunshine.

All ye children of God who are under the peltings of poverty, or the downpour of disappointments, or the blizzards of adversity, "think it not strange as though some strange thing had happened unto you." Millions have had the same experiences before you. No storm ever drowned a true believer, or washed out the foundations of his hope. The trial of your faith will be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of your Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Two things ought to give you courage. One is that our Lord loves to honour and reward unwavering faith. He permits the storm to test you, and then sends the smile of his sunshine to reward you. Another thought is that the skies are never so brilliantly blue as when they have been washed by a storm. The countenance of Jesus is never so welcome and lovable as when he breaks forth upon us—a sun of consolation and joy after trials.

Long years ago, on a day of thick fog and pouring rain, I ascended Mount Washington by the old bridle-path over the slippery rocks. A weary, disappointed company we were when we reached the cabin on the summit. But towards evening a mighty wind swept away the banks of mist; the body of the blue heavens stood out in its clearness, and before us was revealed the magnificent landscape stretching away to the Atlantic Sea. That scene was at the time, and has often been since, a sermon to my soul. It taught me that Faith's stairways are over steep and slippery rocks; often through blinding storms; but God never loses his hold on us, and if we endure to the end, He will yet bring us out into the clear shining after rain.

So it's better to hope though the clouds run low,
And to keep the eye still lifted;
For the clear blue sky will soon peep through,
When the thunder-cloud is rifted.

THE CENTRAL SOUDAN MISSION.

Mr. Hermann Harris writes in a little report he has issued:—"This little mission is now entering on the fifth year of its existence stronger and more united than ever. We have three workers—Messrs. Holt, Lomax, and Greenwood—actually in the Central Soudan, and several more hope to go forward this autumn to the interior from the Tripoli and Gabes Training Homes. Four or five new volunteers are already accepted to take the place of the men going forward. We are more convinced than ever of the absolute necessity of each worker for the Soudan acquiring a fair knowledge of Arabic before taking up the Hausa or any other negro tongue.

"It will interest you to know that I was recently married to a worker in the Pentecostal League, Miss Alice U. Townsend, of Bray, co. Wicklow. We return to Africa together early in April, and hope to preach the Gospel in Tripoli and Tunis, while superintending the management of our training homes and the general business of the mission.

"Dr. and Mrs. Fallon (late of Nyassaland) have been led to unite themselves with this mission, and a special home department will be organised under their supervision. The headquarters will probably be in Bristol, but for the present, and until further notice, all communications may be addressed to Dr. Fallon, at No. 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C. From June 1 next Dr. and Mrs. Fallon will be happy to conduct short missions, providing that in each mission an opportunity is given for representing the claims of the Central Soudan Mission."

Dr. Fallon writes:—"The latest news we have had in connection with our men Holt, Lomax, and Greenwood, who left Lagos last August, on their way into the interior, is just to hand, after nearly seven months' silence. They report having arrived on the Upper Niger, at Bida, where they have been detained in an unhealthy locality owing to the fickleness of the carriers, who had taken their money and decamped, and where they met Mr. Kent, of the Interior Soudan Mission, and nursed him till he died, about a week or two after his comrade, Mr. Gowans, at Zaria. Our men had all been down with fever, and were short of supplies, and ask for special prayer for themselves in these trying circumstances."

HOME TEACHING SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND (31, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.).—The death is announced of the secretary of this society, Mr. Ralph Tait. To the vacant office the committee have recently appointed Miss Edith M. Bainbrigge, daughter of the late Major-General Bainbrigge, R.E., who did excellent service for her father in helping to establish workshops for the blind at Blackheath a few years ago.

"RISEN WITH CHRIST."

Yea, we with Christ are risen
Above the snares of death;
No more we feel its terror,
The venom of its breath;
The grass enshrines a treasure
It hath not power to keep;
Now death to us is blessed—
A taking rest in sleep.

Yea, we with Christ are risen
Above the cares of earth;
Its gain and loss and changes
Are things of little worth;
'Tis true, oh may we feel it,
And with an ardent love
Be daily, hourly seeking
The "things which are above."

Yea, we with Christ are risen
Above the death of sin;
Our glorious Priest hath entered,
And we have passed within,
To sit in heavenly places,
And share the life He gives,
He is our Resurrection,
We live, because He lives.

Yea, we with Christ are risen
Above the doubt and fear;
To Him all power is given,
And we to Him are dear,
So dear, so doubly precious,
That for our sins He died,
Then rose, and lives for ever,
And we are justified.

Yea, we with Christ are risen
Above the pain and grief;
For every throe of sorrow
We know a sure relief.
Our souls already triumph,
Although the flesh is frail;
Our risen Lord is nearest
When powers of ill assail.

Yea, we with Christ are risen
Above our ghostly foes;
His finished work secureth
Our haven of repose.
'Tis true, 'tis sure, 'tis steadfast,
Although we cannot see;
We change, but nothing changes
Our firm security.

Yea, we with Christ are risen,
Ascended in our Lord,
He took our human nature
And bore it up to God,
So perfectly uniting
Our nature with his own,
And thus He ever pleadeth
Before the Father's throne.

Yea, we with Christ are risen,
How holy should we be
In walk and conversation,
And saintly purity;
Oh, by this blest assurance,
Which all his own possess,
Should we not closely follow
The Lord our Righteousness.

KURKU AND C.I.H. MISSION.—The annual report for 1894 contains a map of the sphere of work, showing the relative positions of the eight stations of the Mission, which are now being worked by sixteen missionaries. Some idea of the work being done may be gathered through the extracts quoted from the private letters of those at work in the field, as well as from an interesting account by Mrs. M. Baxter of her recent visit to four of the stations. Copies of the report may be obtained gratis on application to the hon. sec., Mr. F. W. Howard Piper, Beechwood, Highgate, N.

SAILORS AT CARDIFF.—This is one of the most important seaport towns in the world, and its Sailors' Rest should be well supported. The least landsmen can do is to provide for the comfort of our seamen when on shore in a strange town. The Sailors' Rest is doing this in a measure. Men can go there to write and read, without the temptation of drink. After the evening meetings the workers have friendly talks with the men, find out their difficulties, and seek to lead them to the Saviour. To carry on the work effectually we need help.

REV. JOHN M'NEILL IN BOMBAY.

A most successful series of evangelistic services in Bombay by Rev. John McNeill was brought to a close on Friday evening, March 22. Bombay is a difficult field for Christian effort, and notoriously slow in rising with hearty Christian enthusiasm toward evangelistic work. Hence the power that has throughout the whole mission rested upon the missioner may be gauged by the fact that from the commencement of the mission on Sunday evening, March 10, to its conclusion magnificent audiences gathered nightly, and listened with rapt attention to some of the most powerful and direct addresses ever delivered in the city. It is impossible in a few lines to give an adequate idea of the work that has been accomplished; but, leaving outside the High Church party (represented mainly by the cathedral congregation), it is not too much to say that the Christians in the city have been stirred. All denominations have united in the endeavour to forward the mission, and God has owned the effort.

The success of the mission has been the more remarkable seeing that very little support has been rendered by that portion of the Press which is most widely read and distributed in the city. While long columns are devoted to official utterances, latest betting, &c., a paragraph of an inch or two occasionally has been the extent to which the official organs have noted the mission.

Prayer-meetings were held every morning both before the mission began and during its continuance in various parts of the city, and proved to be times of refreshing to the workers who met together. The meetings were held during the first week at the Framjee Cowasjee Hall, and from the very first the place was filled. On Sunday evening, March 17, the service was held in the Town Hall, which was crowded with an audience of 1200 people. For the remaining week of the mission the services were conducted in the Novelty Theatre, which is perhaps the largest hall in the city, and at the conclusion of the mission was packed to its fullest extent. In addition to these meetings, Mr. McNeill preached in the Grant-road Methodist Church and the Scotch Kirk on successive Sunday mornings, and several times addressed the large number of native students at the Free Church College.

The addresses will live in the memory of those who heard them. "Christ Jesus was," to use the preacher's own words, "the centre and circumference of everything," and his assertion was fully vindicated that to draw a congregation it must be nothing but Christ and Him crucified as the sinner's only hope and plea that must form the subject of preaching. With burning words the preacher denounced the promulgation of an emasculated Gospel, in which Christ is merely held forth as a magnificent model, or in which atonement by sacrifice is kept far in the background. Combined with the most stern denunciation of sin in every form, there has been the most earnest entreaty, and in many instances the most tender pathos. Mr. McNeill was not far wrong when he said there were "big hulking fellows outside who were literally afraid to come to the meetings, lest they should be convinced by the truth, and converted to God." Perhaps one of the most telling addresses of the mission was the exposition of Psalm xxiii. Few will ever forget it.

After-meetings have been held only occasionally, but numbers have testified to the saving grace of God. Mr. McNeill preaches rather for definite results and immediate faith in the first meeting, and he added, "I generally get what I work for." The only sorrow connected with the mission is that it has so quickly come to a close, but brief as it has been we had to cry, "What hath God wrought!" That a deep, solid, lasting work has been accomplished is the conviction of all who have been praying and watching for it, and fruit will be seen in additions to church membership for many a day to come.

No one knows the blessing such a visit as Mr. McNeill's brings to jaded, careworn pastors and teachers struggling against the blighting influences of these great heathen cities, and the happy memories that will cluster for many a day to come around the fortnight's mission of our friend. The pity is that such visits are so seldom.

May God speed him continually in his work is the prayer that will follow him from Bombay to other shores. H. E. Barrett.

Baptist Church, Bombay.

The Bombay Guardian of March 23 says:—"Rev. John McNeill leaves Bombay for England by the mail steamer to-day (Saturday). Many will be sorry to have so soon to say farewell to him, but, what is better, many are rejoicing that he ever came among us with the good tidings of salvation."

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S ANNUAL.

Already, while April is young, the "May" meetings are upon us one of the earliest being the annual gathering of the London Young Women's Christian Association. This was held on Wednesday week, when the young women and their friends crowded Exeter Hall in every part. Lord Kinnaird presided, and an abstract of the report, laid before the meeting by Mr. W. T. Paton, stated that the past year had been one of marked progress, both in the development of the work and in the improved financial position of the Association. The year opened with a balance of £1170 owing to the treasurer, which was subsequently increased, through the extension of the work, to £2648. This large liability has been discharged. The expenditure for the year was £8423 7s. 11d., and the income £8423 10s. 8d. During the year, twelve new centres have been opened, viz.:—Gray's Yard, Lavender-hill, Chelsea, Clapham, Dalston, Stratford (two), East Greenwich, Rotherhithe, Southwark Park, Marylebone, and Wandsworth. Walthamstow and Leytonstone have been joined on, making in all fourteen new London centres. At Wimbledon a new room has been built. Crouch End and Stoke Newington branches have moved to more suitable premises. Percy Institute, King's Cross, has been renovated, and the meeting room enlarged. The Park Mission Lodge has removed to larger premises at 9, Taunton-place, Regent's Park. Kent House, 89 and 91, Great Portland-street, has been re-opened as a Home for Students and Governesses. The Welbeck Home and Restaurant, 131, Mortimer-street, have been united with the Central Institute and Morley Halls.

The number of homes, institutes, and evening rooms is larger than ever—viz., fifty-one—and there are ninety-two other branches, making a total of 143 London centres. The members and associates number 13,348; junior members, 846; total, 14,494. The Park Mission, in addition to much other work, has dealt with 357 special cases of girls needing help. Workrooms and factories in various parts of London were largely visited by workers of the Flower Mission. The Central Employment Agency, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, was used by 3726 employers 6327 persons seeking situations. The Business Employment Agency, 316, Regent-street, was used by 1726 seeking situations and 425 employers. The work of the Barmaids' Branch, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, has been very encouraging. The Nurses' Union has a membership of 390 hospital nurses. The Emigration Department has enabled a number of young women to proceed to the colonies, and all are doing well. A large number have been helped with holidays in the summer or after recovery from illness, in many cases entirely free, by the Convalescent, Sick-aid, and Holiday Departments. Our work has become such a power for good socially, morally, and spiritually, that not only must it be supported, but largely extended.

Six prizes were distributed to those members who had introduced the greatest number of members, who had collected the largest amount of money, and so on.

Lord Kinnaird, in the course of his opening address, called special attention to the employment agency and barmaids' branch. He believed that if the Lord's people would take time to think they would come to the conclusion that this work among young women is worth doing, and deserves support.

Rev. E. A. Stuart rejoiced to feel that there is one definite purpose before every worker of the Y.W.C.A., and that is the winning of young women to Christ. Passing on, he outlined some of the incidents in the last momentous week of our Lord's life, when He set his face as a flint to go up to Jerusalem, while fully knowing what awaited Him there. In this Via dolorosa godly women again and again cheered Jesus by their love and sympathy. Amongst these were the sisters of Bethany making a feast and anointing his feet; the weeping group by the wayside, as He passed from the Pretorium to Golgotha; the women who stood by the Cross; and the two solitary women who lingered at the tomb. In these scenes we have gratitude, self-denial, pity, courage, and constancy. These points Mr. Stuart applied in a forceful and earnest manner.

Mr. W. R. Lane addressed himself, as might be expected, to those still undecided for Christ. After dwelling on the perfect wondrous life of the Lord Jesus Christ, who did always the will of his Father and finished the work given Him to do, the speaker showed how that sinless, unforfeited life was laid down for our sinful, forfeited life—"the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." On this Mr. Lane based a clear, ringing Gospel appeal that all would believe, rest on the finished work of Christ, and thus become pardoned sinners, passing from death unto life. Having touched on some of the hindrances and difficulties, he closed with a fervent plea for immediate decision.

The workers on behalf of Young Women held on the three subsequent days a conference on practical methods, many points of importance to those engaged in the work being discussed. On Thursday, the Countess of Chichester, who presided, said the cares and troubles of working women were many, and it was imperative that those who were in a position to comfort them should do so. Addresses on the various branches of the work of the Association in all parts of the world were delivered by Miss Reynolds, the Hon. E. Kinnaird, Miss M. Gollock, Miss Hodges, and others. At the afternoon sitting of the Conference the chair was taken by Mrs. J. H. Tritton. There was, she said, much sorrow and hunger in the homes of many girls, and she earnestly entreated the workers in the cause to do their utmost on behalf of the suffering and depressed. Miss Clifford, Mrs. Cox, of the Factory Helpers' Union; Miss Browne, of Manchester; Miss Saville, Miss Coles, and Armistead also spoke.

Friday's Conference began with a united Communion. Later on came a conversazione at Morley Hall. The Hon. G. Kinnaird presided. This meeting was arranged specially for country secretaries and superintendents of homes. The subjects for conversation were: "Unreliable Secretaries," "Criticisms," and "The Difference between a Boarding House and a Home." In the afternoon the chair was taken by the Vicountess Portman. Miss Wingate spoke on "Voices from the Past." The Hon. E. Kinnaird read a paper written by Mrs. Armistead on "Home Study." The Hon. Mrs. Waller read correspondence from superintendents, secretaries and others connected with Y.W.C.A. in the colonies. An Indian lady, in native costume, a member of the Association in Bombay, said English workers were much needed to guide and extend the work there.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Theatrical Mission and Institute was held at Macready House on Thursday last. Canon Wilberforce, who presided, said that a perusal of the Society's reports had impressed him with the very practical character of the agencies employed. The Institution followed the Divine method of attending to the bodily wants of the members and then seeking to reach and benefit their souls. To bring those who come under our influence to the saving knowledge of Jesus Christ is to confer the greatest blessing one person could possibly bring to another. The public little know the enormous boon that Macready House is to those who work till late at night for the amusement of the theatre-going public.

Canon Barker, in an earnest speech, drew attention to some of the ways in which the Institute helps its members, by sheltering them from evil influences, by providing good food at cheap rates, and sleeping accommodation for those who have to live away from home, and by helping those who may be in temporary need. The opening of Olympia House was a very happy thought; it must prove a great comfort to many of the hundreds of girls who take part in the Olympia spectacles. The Canon concluded with an earnest appeal for increased help in carrying on this work.

Dr. Norman Kerr, Colonel Griffin, and others followed with short addresses, and an opportunity was then afforded those who remained to the close to inspect the Institute.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET, addressing a Local Veto meeting in the City Temple, said that the present was a memorable crisis in the history of the cause of temperance, and it was just now that the friends of humanity should labour their hardest.

THE TRUTH ABOUT OPIUM.*

Mr. Joshua Rowntree, late M.P. for Scarborough, has brought to a successful issue his plan for placing before the public, in a reasonable and accessible compass, the gist of the evidence given to the Royal Commission on Opium. The magnitude of the task upon which he has laboured for several months may be estimated by the fact that the five volumes of Blue Books (four of them unindexed) which he has had to read and analyse contain two thousand pages of double columns of close print, expressing the opinions of upwards of nine hundred persons, elicited by twenty-eight thousand questions. By painstaking classification Mr. Rowntree has been able to give a clear view of the whole in a pamphlet of 101 pages.

The evidence is dealt with calmly and with impartiality, revealing Mr. Rowntree's legally-trained mind. The result of the study of the evidence, amply quoted, is a splendid vindication of the position of the anti-opium party. The pamphlet is full of surprises to the reader. One of the earliest specimens of this occurs on pages 18 and 19, concerning poppy growing. After a high official of the Indian Government had declared that "official" compulsion to cultivate poppy is unheard of, a native landowner was asked about his own village. He replied that the zilladars (petty officers) "go and threaten them with persecution, and they instigate the police officers to do something to them. There are different ways of tyrannising over them. Lately I received a communication from the Opium Department to make my ryots (tenant farmers) grow more opium."

A little further on we came to an extract from a memorandum submitted to the Opium Commission by Sir John Strachey, an ex-Anglo-Indian official. In this he says:—"Speaking in general terms, the consumption of opium in India is so infinitesimally small that I may say, without exaggeration, that no opium question exists at all." Following this, Mr. Rowntree quotes the evidence of Dr. K. Chunder Bose, who estimates that ten per cent. of the residents of Calcutta take opium. Another Indian witness calculates that 20 to 25 per cent. of the grown-up population in the villages of the Umballi district consume opium. Further, an Indian pleader (solicitor) in the Judges' Court at Assam is quoted, "I believe fully a third portion of the population of Kamrup is given to the vile habit, and in Upper Assam it is worse." And this section of the subject is concluded by an extract from the evidence of Mr. D. D. Gildar, a Parsee educationalist and moral reformer, and editor of the Students' Friend, Bombay, who submitted statistics to show "that while the population of Bombay has increased by only 6 per cent., the consumption of opium has increased by 84 per cent., and that throughout the Bombay Presidency, while the population has increased 14 per cent., the sale of opium has gone up 60 per cent. during the last decade."

Similar contracts meet us in the medical evidence. Sir William Moore, late Surgeon-General in the Bombay Presidency, declared that "opium-smoking was practically harmless." But Brigade-Surgeon J. H. Condon, M.D., who is still resident in India, and is one of the best-known Christian laymen in that country, said, "I never met a confirmed opium-eater or smoker that did not hate the habit, but the only cure any of them seemed to think of as being of any use was to stop the supply of opium. I have gone into the history of some hundreds of cases. My experience is that it is only a matter of time. All break down,"

No fair-minded reader, and, above all, no reader with a conscience enlightened by the Holy Spirit, will be able to rise from the perusal of this pamphlet in any doubt as to where the truth is amidst the maze of contradictions. No difficulty will be found in agreeing with Mr. Rowntree's conclusion that, "whether as regards India, Burmah, or China, these five volumes of evidence, carefully compiled as they have been in the main, through the instrumentality of an able Government fighting for its revenue, as necessary for its life, yet leave an unmistakable conviction that the opium habit, apart from any medical use, is physically injurious and morally indefensible, just in proportion to the extent to which it prevails."

We trust that all who take an interest in the anti-opium movement will procure this pamphlet, and read it carefully.

LANTERN PREACHING IN INDIA.

In a letter dated Panchamadur, Sitecot, India, Miss F. M. Reade says: "I thought you would like to have a letter from the actual battlefield in a very jungle. With David and a new helper I have been out in camp nearly a month, while Samuel Subba Rao holds the fort at Thirnvithi, sending me supplies and coming out occasionally. We spent a fortnight at a village named Maliamuttu, where truly the Lord seems to be working, and we were greatly encouraged.

"We were pitched in a Huppu tope, and one evening I showed the magic-lantern, having invited the people of the villages round, as well as the women of Maliamuttu itself, who had been daily coming to see me. They belong chiefly to the Reddy caste, a very superior class of landowners, and were very doubtful as to whether their lords and masters would allow them out so far.

"We begun at 7 p.m., and went on till 9. Then I closed, putting out the light, when to my utter amazement and, at first, amusement, there was a general cry of 'You have not shown us Kailasam. Show us Kailasam' (i.e. heaven). Some came round me, and most pathetically entreated me not withhold a sight of Kailasam from them, saying, 'You have told us about the true God, we thought you would show us the true heaven. What! We have come so far, and now you send us away, without showing us the true heaven.' It was with the utmost difficulty we pacified them.

"Meanwhile, a large party from a more distant village had arrived, and pleaded that they might not return disappointed. I could not refuse. So we relit the lantern, and went on till 10.30 again, all listening with the most intelligent interest, and especially asking questions about the sin-offering. The picture that is blessed to awakening whenever I show the magic lantern is that of the sin-offering—a lamb with a knife beneath, a rope round its neck, and the priest laying the kneeling offerer's sin upon it.

"The people here are the densest, hardest idolators I have ever met. I went into the village, and a crowd of women, with a few men, gathered. After explaining the truth, one woman said, 'Cow dung is God, and it is my god, and I do not want any other.' So likewise said they all. They have a ceremony in which they make little images of Pilleiyar of cowdung, and prostrate themselves before them in worship, and then throw them on the fire.

"February 20.—We have returned to Maliamottu, and the Lord is giving such encouragement in seeing seed sown years ago in other villages springing up. Truly it looks like harvest. Oh, do ask prayer for a downfall of the Holy Spirit and a great ingathering!"

Any information regarding Miss Reade's work will be thankfully given, and any contributions received by Miss Clara M. S. Lowe, 8, Childebert-road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

On Saturday last the removal of the headquarters to the building recently erected in Newington Green (a short distance from the old offices in Pyrland-road) was celebrated. For the first time the weekly prayer-meeting so long held at Room No. 6 of the Mildmay Conference Hall was held in the public room on the ground floor of the new premises, the proceedings partaking somewhat of the character of a consecration service.

Mr. Theodore Howard, one of the Council, who presided, read the account of the dedication of Solomon's Temple, and gave an address appropriate to the occasion. In the course of his remarks he referred in terms of hearty appreciation to the services rendered to the cause of God by Mr. B. Broomhall, the late secretary. Several other friends took part in the meeting.

The new premises consist of a suite of offices and a home for missionaries on furlough.

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—Pastor Fuller Gooch was one of the speakers at the monthly meeting at the House of Rest on Friday. His treatment of the subject, which he entitled the "Seven-fold Application of Grace," founded upon the first seven verses of Isaiah xliii., was very striking, and full of deep teaching respecting God's provision for his children. In the evening, Mrs. Rendel Harris, of Cambridge, spoke upon consecration, and all that the word conveyed in connection with the fully surrendered soul.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

The friends of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East held their annual meeting last week in the drawing-room, 118, Westbourne-terrace, W. Mr. Victor Buxton, who presided in place of his father, reviewed the position of the Society, and described what he had himself seen of its operations at Bethlehem, Nazareth, Shefa-Ama, and other places in the East.

Rev. Dr. Bruce spoke on the cruelty shown and the degradation endured by the women of Mohammedan lands. In speaking of the work of the Society, he said that at Ispahan there had been as noble a band of missionaries as any in the world, and their work had been greatly blessed. But there were times of great difficulties and trial, and they needed much the sympathy and prayers of friends at home. In Persia it was a capital offence to become a Christian, and if a woman became a Christian her husband had the right to kill her, and no one could stop him. Yet with this danger before them there were several women asking for baptism.

Miss Townsend spoke of the work in the village of Shefa-Ama, where it was begun about six years ago with a school. Their efforts were much looked down upon by the Roman Catholics, but God had greatly blessed them, and now there were one hundred day scholars in attendance. This branch of the work led to other efforts being made. The ladies were able to visit the parents of the scholars in their homes. The visitation led to their holding little weekly meetings in the homes, and the people listened readily. More lately a medical mission had been started, and, as experience had shown, nothing seemed to reach the people so effectually. Miss Mitchell, who set out but a year ago, had sent home a few figures regarding her work. From October to December she had seen and treated 860 persons at the dispensary, and eighty-five at their own homes.

Miss Lambert said that no doubt many were interested in the war in China, but it had had no influence upon them; Foochow was too far south, and their work had gone on as usual. In speaking of the school work there she gave several interesting incidents showing how greatly God had blessed it. She also stated that they had formed amongst their pupils a little Society for Preaching the Gospel. There were already eighteen members, and these went forth two-and-two, with an old woman to escort them. It cost them something, for it was quite contrary to Chinese custom; but with a chaperon they were tolerated.

Archdeacon Warren, of Japan, bore strong testimony to the value of the work of the ladies of the F.E.S. as he had seen it in Japan. They had worked diligently and patiently, and he thanked God for sending them to the country.

Miss Webb, secretary, gave a few details of the work during the past year. At Hong Kong there had been much painful anxiety owing to the plague, but the latest reports showed that the people were gradually returning to the place. She mentioned that the Society had for some time an agent in Korea; indeed, their missionary was the first European lady who ever went to that country. She also referred to the successful medical work in India of Miss Eagar, who had lately become a fully qualified practitioner. In regard to funds they needed additional support, and it would be a great help if some lady would support a substitute for service in the foreign field. This was done already in some cases, and it was an example which might be followed.

SPAIN.—Pastor Antonio Martinez de Castilla, of the Evangelical Mission in Reus, Tarragona, is in England, seeking opportunities to interest friends in his work. The province has a population of 250,000, while the city of Reus contains 40,000. The mission is under the control of the Presbyterian Synod of Spain, and has been in existence nineteen years. In addition to services in the chapel, there are two day schools, attended by ninety children, who receive religious instruction. Through the children opportunity is secured of visiting whole families, and bringing the Gospel under the notice of many adults. The people make their contribution to the carrying on of the work, and friends in Great Britain, Germany, Holland, France, and Switzerland, afford indispensable assistance. Prominent ministers in Glasgow have formed a committee in aid of the mission. Communications for Pastor Martinez may be addressed (for a few days) to the care of Miss Nugent, 29, Eaton Square, S.W., afterwards to Reus, Tarragona, Spain.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END.

The Weaver Brothers have been holding a three weeks' mission in connection with Mr. F. N. Charrington's Tower Hamlets Mission. During the redecorating of the Great Assembly Hall, the week-night meetings have been held in the Children's Hall, formerly the Old Mile End-road Chapel, and for Sunday evening services the Paragon Music Hall was engaged. These two earnest evangelists have drawn large gatherings. Both halls were filled to their utmost capacity during their visit. Seldom if ever has the Old Mile End Chapel seen such congregations within its walls. On the last Sunday morning of their visit it was literally packed from floor to ceiling. They held four Sunday night meetings in the Paragon, and on every occasion soon after the advertised time of commencing the boards had to be exhibited "House full."

Mr. Bewley F. Weaver is a counterpart of the veteran evangelist, Richard, his father. Those of us who remember him and his preaching nearly thirty years ago, can realise that in his son Bewley we have a second Richard. A blind man going into one of Bewley's meetings, when he is well warmed up to his subject, might well think that his ears deceived him. The voice, the earnestness, all remind one of the father's early days. Mr. Frank Weaver is the Sankey, but many feel that to some extent his abilities are lost, as his speaking powers are good, and he has very little opportunity of exercising them. He would be more useful separated from his brother. It almost goes without recording that these two devoted men of God were greatly blessed. Numerous letters from all quarters were received from those benefited by their services. Here is a sample: "Please praise God with me for the conversion of my two sons last Wednesday evening. They have been much prayed for, and our God has answered. This is great joy to me, because your honoured father, some sixteen years ago, was the means, in God's hands, of leading me to the Saviour."

A few out of many other instances of conversion will be interesting and encouraging. The Weavers held a mission at Nottingham before coming to Mr. Charrington. During their stay there prayer was repeatedly offered that the Lord would lead a young lady, an actress on the London stage, to attend the meetings in the Paragon. Soon after the second Sunday meeting a letter was received from her relations containing the joyful news that she had been led to the meetings and had decided for Christ, given up her profession, and was about to offer herself for the foreign field of labour for Christ.

A young man just home from India, in the service of the Eastern Telegraph Co., was idly strolling down the Mile End-road, when he saw the Paragon lighted up on Sunday night, and wondering what was going on, curiosity led him to enter, and he became convinced of sin. The following Tuesday found him sweetly resting in Jesus. He is about to return to Madras to live, work, and witness for Jesus.

One Sunday night five companions from one workshop were seated together, they were all deeply impressed, and the following night the whole five confessed Christ.

A noticeable feature about the work has been the number of young men who have confessed Christ, and the backsliders that have been restored. The Weaver Brothers left with the prayer of hundreds following them, and on their return they will receive a hearty welcome from all who labour for Christ in connection with the Great Assembly Hall.

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—A special meeting of this Institute took place on Monday week; Sir George G. Stokes, Bart., F.R.S., in the chair. Short papers were read by Sir J. W. Dawson, Professors E. Hull, Parker, Duns, Rev. G. Whidborne, and Mr. J. Slater upon the questions in regard to evolution raised by Professor Huxley in his recent address on "The Past and Present." It was pointed out that the value attached to the word "evolution" is a varying quantity; and that as regards the Darwinian theory of evolution, all naturalists admit that the hypothesis is as yet quite insufficient to account for man's place in nature; it is only a working hypothesis. Although one may recognise how magnificent in such master hands as those of Professor Huxley have been the results of scientific methods, yet even he confesses to have met with mutual contradictions and intrinsic weaknesses in the hypothesis. As regards man, it is held by naturalists that he is by nature on a far higher platform than the lower animals.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.

The sixteenth anniversary gatherings of this Union took place on Thursday last in Exeter Hall. Meetings were held afternoon and evening, and at both there were crowded attendances.

In the afternoon the Rev. E. A. Stuart (president) occupied the chair. Mr. T. B. Bishop, hon. secretary, reported with regard to the work of the Union at home and abroad, and described it as having given cause for great encouragement on all hands. Most gratifying results have crowned the work in foreign lands, including Ceylon, Japan, China, the Sandwich Islands, and Tinnevelly. In the latter district there are now eighty-one flourishing branches of the Union, each comprising some four or five villages.

The Chairman emphasised prayer as one of the great needs in Christian work. He further urged that, besides being devoted readers of the Bible, the members of the Scripture Union should be careful to mark, learn, and inwardly digest the Word of God.

Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an address to workers, basing his remarks on Acts x. under the heads (1) Workers waiting for direction, (2) The worker's message; (3) The worker's trust in the co-operating Spirit. He spoke of the necessity in the case of all who would labour successfully for the Master of their being anointed by the Holy Ghost. He described the co-witness of the Holy Ghost as one of the most pressing requirements in Christian effort.

Rev. Martin Hall gave an address especially to members of the Children's Scripture Union, his theme being "Giving up, Growing up, Going up." as applied in a spiritual sense. Mr. Hall presented a picture of these three upward calls, in the person of a poor Lancashire factory girl named Annie, who was a diligent Christian, and reader of her Bible. She recently died, and her influence had been such upon her fellow employees in the factory, that they had been permitted, according to their desire, to place her Bible in a certain corner there, and many of them might be seen daily poring over it, because they had noticed Annie's beautiful Christian walk, which they said was all on a piece with the book.

Mr. J. R. Naylor, Derby, dilated on the importance of Christians being definite or pronounced, as such, in these days when so many were lukewarm in the service of Christ. He proceeded to state, in respect to Scripture Union progress in Derby, that they had branches of it there in connection with most of the churches, and through its instrumentality many young people had been led to Christ.

Mr. Josiah Spiers enlarged on the foreign work, which he said had now been established for twenty years. He stated that for the benefit of the young people of foreign lands the Children's Special Service Mission had printed suitable picture leaflets in fifty different languages, the total number printed up to the present time being thirteen millions. He explained how enthusiastically the leaflets had been received in France, Germany, Holland, Sweden, Portugal, Italy, Spain, and other places more distant. In conclusion he pleaded for donations towards a special effort to raise £3000 for the carrying on and extension of the work abroad.

Mr. F. A. Archibald, who presided at the evening meeting, suggested that the union should extend their efforts for the spiritual benefit of boys engaged in a seafaring life, as, for instance, those on the North Sea, who number no fewer than 5000.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Organising Secretary, gave an interesting account of the work in different cities and towns he has recently visited. He mentioned the case of one poor but devoted Christian girl in the north of England who had been instrumental in winning for the Scripture Union as many as 190 members.

Rev. Stephen Coles, Ceylon, spoke of the work there. He stated that altogether he had seen through the press in the island, 200,000 picture tracts for distribution amougst the natives. He further mentioned that there was sometimes a great dearth of Bibles in Ceylon owing to want of funds to send them there, although the natives were crying out for them.

Mr. Livingstone Learmouth, Edinburgh University, told of services held in the city under the auspices of the Children's Special Service Mission in the beginning of last year, and said that by the end of June 200 boys had joined as members Mr A. G. Dodderidge, Trinity College, Cambridge, addressed the meeting as one who, during five weeks' vacation from college, is endeavouring to extend the work of the Scripture Union by personal visitation in different parts of the country, especially amongst the educated classes. He spoke strongly against novel-reading as a great hindrance to creating interest among young people in their Bible reading. Mr. J. R. Naylor, and Rev. Martin Hall, who is shortly leaving for Uganda, also delivered addresses.

CONFERENCE OF EVANGELISTS.

The all-day conference of evangelists, referred to in former issues, will be held in the rooms of Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday, May 2. This gathering has been arranged in conformity with a widespread desire amongst evangelists for an opportunity of Christian fellowship and of conference as to plans, methods, etc., in their important work.

It is proposed to divide the conference into three sessions. At ten o'clock proceedings will commence with a devotional meeting; at half-past ten Mr. W. R. Lane will introduce the subject, "The Work of an Evangelist." At noon, the daily prayer meeting will be held as usual. At one o'clock, dinner will be served, the conference being resumed at half-past two and half-past six o'clock respectively, tea being served at five o'clock.

It is earnestly desired that the notice of the meetings shall be brought under the eye of all evangelists. Our readers are invited to assist in making the matter known to all. Applications for tickets admitting to the conference, luncheon, tea, etc., should be addressed to the hon. sec., Mr. James B. Wookey, to Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

MR. HENRY THORNE'S MISSION.

A well-attended meeting was held in the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. last Friday evening, in connection with the Thorne Evangelistic Mission, Mr. F. W. Lawrence, of Beckenham, presided. Mr. Thorne gave a very interesting account of his work in various centres. The many tokens of blessing and the great ingathering of souls as the results of these missions formed a striking feature of the report.

The meeting was addressed by the chairman and by Rev. C. L. Wilson, of Old Basford, Nottingham. Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. E. P. Iliffe, Upper Clapton; Mr. W. Mell, Margate; Mr. Rogers, High Barnet; and Mr. Robert Burn, all gave testimony to the effectual character of Mr. Thorne's work as they had witnessed it.

MADAGASCAR AND THE MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.—Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary to the London Missionary Society, speaking on Wednesday night at the City Temple on the subject of "Madagascar," said it was time that a plain word should be spoken as to the policy of silence as regards agitation, but not as regards wise approach to the Government, which the directors had adopted. They were acting on the sound general principle that missionary societies should not be mixed up with politics, except as the very last resort. The Government had done its best to secure, as far as paper could secure, the safeguarding of British missions among the Malagasy. This was very clear from the last Convention with France. Was Great Britain to vindicate the independence of all countries but those she herself annexed? He appealed to the friends of missions to pray and not to agitate.

CAMPOS MISSION, BRAZIL.—Rev. Solomon L. Ginsburg, in a report of his work during last year, says: "One of the chief obstacles in our way was the revolution and the consequent lack of guarantees; but the Lord has guided us through all our difficulties, and abundantly blessed what we were able to do. The progress and spiritual life manifest in the Church are reasons for thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father. We are in a small and rickety old house, all tumbling to pieces, with a very inadequate hall, accommodating only 100 seats. The Roman Catholics use all means in their power to prevent us from hiring a better house. The only way out of this dilemma is to have a building of our own. Everything being very dear, we shall be unable for a long time to satisfy our great want. The number of persons interested is very large; of these, forty-eight have accepted Christ, and, after a thorough examination, have been received as members of this Church, being baptized in the river Parahyba, which runs through this city. Colportage and Y.M.C.A. work is carried on, and a church has been organised at San Fidelis, a neighbouring town to Campos."

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

In 1896 the Evangelical Alliance will (God willing) celebrate its jubilee. It is proposed to hold a great International Conference in London in the early part of July of that year. This will be the tenth of the series of these œcumenical assemblies convened by the Alliance—all of them except the first two being held outside of Great Britain.

At the last two of these conferences the wish was expressed by the delegates from various countries that the Jubilee Conference should be held on the spot where fifty years ago the Evangelical Alliance was definitely organised—in London. This unique occasion was thus referred to in the "Life of Rev. Edward Bickersteth" (third edition), Vol. II., p. 359:—

The month of August, 1846, was occupied with that work on which his heart was set with earnest desire—the actual formation of the Evangelical Alliance. Nearly a thousand Christian brethren from England, Scotland, and Ireland, from France, Germany, Switzerland, and the United States, besides some from the British colonies, were gathered together in London; and their meetings for united prayer and friendly conference lasted fifteen days—from Aug. 10 till Sept. 2. It was naturally a time of deep interest and of intense excitement, and though several difficult questions were raised in the protracted discussion, especially on the subject of slavery, which alone threatened to be an insuperable difficulty, the general character of the proceedings and the issue of the whole Conference were causes of deep thanksgiving to all those who desired the prosperity of a work of love. The services of united praise and prayer were particularly interesting and solemn.

It is expected that a large number of representatives from all parts of the world will assemble next year in London, for the Evangelical Alliance has during the past thirty years become a world-wide institution, having its branches and auxiliaries in almost every country.

The annual conference of the British Evangelical Alliance is to be held (D.V.) at Belfast this year, from September 24 to 26.

THE DIAMOND AND THE WHEEL.

"Alas!" cried a diamond to the wheel upon which it was being cut, "here I have been tortured for the last three days. What a misfortune it was that I ever came your way!"

"Say not so," replied the wheel in encouraging tones. "The last stone that came to me was so rough and dull that you could scarce tell it was a diamond; but when I had done with it, it was placed in a king's crown."

"A king's crown!" exclaimed the astonished stone, "and do you think that I shall ever adorn the brows of a king?"

"It is quite possible; but if not allowed to enjoy so great an honour, you may find some other exalted and brilliant position; but you will never see the glories of a royal house unless I do my utmost for you."

"Then grind away," said the gem, as it nerved itself to endure the trial. "I'll stand it if it means an increase of beauty and promotion."

THE NEW "DAYSPRING."

In the April issue of his very interesting Quarterly, devoted to the interests of Missions in the South Seas, Mr. Langridge says that instructions have been received from Australia to build the new Mission Ship. The whole responsibility has been undertaken by a warm friend of Dr. J. G. Paton, one of the famous ship builders on the Clyde. It is thought that in five or six months, if all goes smoothly, the Dayspring's flag may float o'er the wave. In that case, perhaps, about September, we should wish her God speed on her long voyage to the Pacific. It is hoped that before finally sailing for the Colonies the ship may visit and be seen at Glasgow, Belfast, Liverpool, and possibly other ports.

£1000 a year will be needed for the maintenance of the Dayspring; £200 a year for the support of the special missionary representative of the fund, and £400 a year for the maintenance of native teachers.

REDHILL CONVENTION.—This well-established annual gathering for the deepening of the spiritual life was held in the Town Hall last week, when addresses were given by various brethren. We are obliged to postpone till next issue our report of the proceedings.

JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

One of the oldest and most esteemed living workers among the sons of Abraham is Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel in Jerusalem. From a recent conversation with Mr. Joseph, who is at present in England, a member of our staff gathered some interesting particulars relating to his Gospel labours in the Holy City. Preaching work among Jews is carried on in the mission hall every evening in the week. The work among young men has been hopeful and fruitful. One young Jew, brought to a saving knowledge of the truth there, is now a student in Dr. Guinness's College at Harley House, and is showing much promise of future usefulness. Another is about to enter the college.

Those who attend the Gospel meetings, even though they may have made no outward profession of faith in Christ, are subjected to much persecution by their relatives and by the Rabbis. Mr. Joseph has been placed under excommunication by these Jewish teachers, and the ban extends to those who show any interest in his proclamation of Jesus as the Messiah. These inquirers have to be provided with employment in making olivewood articles for sale. Mr. Joseph has rented five cottages for the sheltering of these persecuted brethren and their families.

At this juncture of his work our brother finds himself in considerable monetary straits, and he is seeking the fellowship of Gentile Christians in an effort to raise £400 for liabilities incurred in connection with the operations of the Mission. The rental of mission hall and other necessary buildings is high, and the difficulties experienced through the boycotting of the Rabbis add to the burdens which our brother has to bear. Those who have seen his work in Jerusalem speak favourably of it, and we commend his present pressing needs to the Christian sympathy of our readers. Mr. F. W. Newth, of New Barnet, is treasurer of the Mission.

CAGE LANE, PLUMSTEAD.

On Thursday evening last was held the annual meeting of this mission, which was started in a small way twenty years ago by Miss Kate Russell, now wife of General Anderson. The chair was taken by Lieutenant-General Sir W. Sterling, who gave an excellent address. Amongst the other speakers were Colonel A. N. St. Quintin, Colonel Travers, Messrs. John Wood, F. E. Paynter, George Hughes, and others.

The report, which was read by Lieutenant-Colonel St. Quintin, showed that much success had attended the self-denying labours of General and Mrs. Anderson and their co-workers, and that the treasurer had a small balance in hand. This was a matter of thankfulness, since this report closed in the midst of a most trying winter, when the distress around was greater than ever remembered.

CHRISTIANS IN SYRIA.—Telegraphic instructions (says a Reuter telegram) have been sent to the United States cruiser Marblehead, which is now at Gibraltar, to proceed immediately to Beyrout. The commander of the United States squadron on the European station has been directed to order vessels of his squadron to visit Alexandretta and Adana. The commanders of the ships are to confer with the United States consuls and resident Americans there, and if they find that there is good ground for the apprehension expressed in those quarters that a massacre of Christians is probable, the commander of the station is to intimate to the responsible authorities that the United States will afford full protection to American citizens living peaceably at those places under treaty guarantees.

ROME.—The April issue of The Gospel in All Lands gives a picture of the Methodist Episcopal Mission building just erected in Rome. It is a noble structure, and will, it is hoped, be ready for dedication to its sacred purpose in September next. Rev. Dr. McCabe writes:—"When I was a boy in my teens, I heard Charles Elliott talking to the Ohio Conference about 'preaching the Gospel to them that are at Rome, also.' Some of the preachers said, 'Dr. Elliott is a good man, and he is a very learned man, but he is a little visionary.' At that time we could not carry a copy of the Bible into Rome, and now a great hall in our mission and publishing house will bear the name of Dr. Charles Elliott, and I hope a splendid portrait of the dear old Irish dreamer will adorn its walls."

A BOLD CONFESSION.

An Occasional Letter, by Herr C. T. Lipshytz, of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, relates the experiences of a young Jew who recently confessed Christ. An Austrian by birth, "D. G." came to London about two years ago to learn English. He had been brought up in strict conformity to rabbinical traditions, and had been well educated. Receiving a tract in the street from the hands of Mr. Lipshytz, he expressed astonishment that one of his own people, a self-respecting son of Abraham, should speak with reverence—in fact, with enthusiasm—of Jesus, whose very name he had been taught to regard with contempt. He afterwards accepted a kind invitation to attend Gospel services in the Mission Hall.

Later on, he took a prominent part at the evening Bible classes in the discussions regarding the Messiahship of Jesus. At length, his difficulties being explained and his objections answered, he publicly confessed Christ in baptism. His heart overflowed with joy, and he wrote to his friends, telling them of the grace of God as he had experienced it. After a residence of several months in the Mission House, he returned to his native country to take a situation at Vienna. What followed may well be told in his own words:—

"Arrived in Vienna, I wrote to my brother, asking him to send me a little money to go on with. After four days he came to the city, and gave me what I requested. He afterwards brought up the question of my baptism, and at length I asked him to cease arguing the matter, as I would not forsake the Lord Jesus. On the following day he persuaded me to go home with him and stay there for the time I had to wait until entering upon my duties. I thoughtlessly consented to the arrangement. Before we left Vienna he bought me a silver watch and a gold chain.

"Two days after we had reached home, he began again about my baptism, and insisted, for the sake of our dead parents, that I should deny the Lord Jesus, and again be a Jew. I refused, and told him that I was convinced that the Lord Jesus was my Saviour, and I was prepared to suffer martyrdom for his sake. On the following day the Rabbi of the place came—also to talk with me about my baptism. My brother became very urgent, and said I must turn Jew again. I declared that I was ready rather to die for the Lord Jesus than to deny Him. Then my brother and the Rabbi abused and cursed me. I said: 'The more you curse me, the more you abuse me, the more convinced I become that Jesus is my Lord and Master, for He said: "Ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake."' Then my brother began to thrash me, and I had to leave the house.

"I took lodgings at the house of a Christian postman. In the morning of the third day of my stay there, a policeman came and arrested me for theft! In reply to my inquiry as to what I had stolen, he said I stole a gold chain and silver watch from my brother, and then left his house. For sixteen days I was remanded before trial. My defence did not help me, as no one witnessed the gift to me of the watch and chain by my brother. I was convicted, and sentenced to fourteen weeks' imprisonment. Though I was not guilty, I was brought under a stigma, so that my word will not be believed. Of course, I lost my situation, and am sorry that I returned to Austria."

The story, painful as it is, is only one of a type. Many others have suffered precisely as D. G. did. His mistake was that he went home with his brother. That he wrote to him for financial help is excusable, seeing that, in due time, he would have come into a small patrimony. On being released from prison, D. G. worked his way back to England, and Mr. Lipshytz secured for him a suitable situation, in which he is now very happy, and giving every satisfaction to his employer. Moreover, he is growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The Letter describes the general work of the Mission. Copies may be had from the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C.

GIVE as you would if an angel
Awaited your gift at the door;
Give as you would if to-morrow
Found you where waiting was o'er;
Give as you would to the Master
If you met his searching look;
Give as you would of your substance
If His hand your offerings took.

IN SURREY VILLAGES.

Much has been said and written of late to draw attention to the great need of our villages and their spiritual condition, but it is evident few realise it, or more would be done to enlighten their darkness.

Having laboured in the Gospel in the Surrey villages for the past fifteen years, and being a large employer of labour, I see and have seen much of the people, and am often pained by their grievous ignorance; in fact, large numbers of the inhabitants of our lovely villages within fifty miles of London are as ignorant of the truth as it is in Jesus as any in India or China; and this is not all—these people are kept in darkness by the Ritualistic priests.

In one village where I have a Mission Hall the people are earnestly and regularly visited by the clergy, and told that if they attend the Mission Hall they are on the high road to hell for so doing, and that only baptism can save them. In many and many a Surrey and Sussex village are the people thus kept from the light, and great indeed is the need of the Gospel.

Backed up by an earnest band of voluntary workers I am doing all I can to bring the Gospel to the people and point them to Jesus; and they are eager to hear and many to receive Him, walking miles to attend a Gospel service, and numerous are the cases which we could recount of changed lives and homes made bright and happy.

Children from our Sunday-schools sing the Gospel hymns to godless fathers and mothers, and those who are born again tell of the Saviour they have found in homes where He is not known.

Some time ago I purchased a piece of land in a large village entirely without the Gospel, but not only am I unable to proceed to erect a hall upon it, but for lack of funds must do less than I am doing rather than more. Gipsy W. Smith, who has been helping me for the last year or so, and who has been much owned of God, I am unable to retain for the summer tent work as I had hoped. I am in urgent need of £400 to erect the hall and carry on my summer campaign.

Immense sums of money and thousands of missionaries are being sent out to the heathen in foreign lands, and rightly too; but I plead also for the souls of these poor priest-ridden villagers who claim a share of our help. It is difficult to make known this great need to many who would gladly help, hence we often have to fall back before the enemy of souls instead of pressing on from village to village with the glad tidings, as we wish to do seeing that the time is short. W. Hodson.

THE MELANESIAN MISSION.

The annual meeting of the London committee of this mission was held on Friday afternoon at Church House. Bishop Selwyn presided, and there was a large attendance. It was shown that there are eight native clergy and nearly 200 teachers of all classes, 105 stations and schools on the islands, manned by about 200 teachers, the scholars numbering nearly 3000. The chairman said that Bishop Wilson's consecration in January, 1894, had been one of the events in the New Zealand Church, and the warm welcome he had received upon taking up his appointment was a source of great satisfaction. Another cause for congratulation lay in the fact that the work was being mainly done by the natives themselves; throughout the mission there was life and strength. Bishop Barry remarked that whilst he was Primate of Australasia he always felt the deepest interest in the mission, as it had grown out of the Australasian Church, Dr. Codington and Sir George Grey testified to the excellent work being accomplished by the mission.

THE MANCHESTER AND SALFORD STREET CHILDREN'S MISSION held its annual meeting on Wednesday week; Mr. Alexander M'Dougall presided. The report stated that 331 parcels of provisions had been given away, 109 persons had received a night's shelter and temporary help, 41 unfortunate women were assisted, 35,416 free meals were given to poor children and others, 1057 meals were given to poor men, women, and children, 1389 children were sent to Southport, 10,400 meat pies were distributed, besides tea, clothing, bread, and butter in large quantities. The chairman remarked that although he had never known a time when there had been such real need as in the past winter, he had also never known a time when there had been so much good feeling both on the part of the givers and the recipients. Work of the kind carried on by that mission was equally blessed to those who gave and those who received. Principal Holliday said the report was simply a revelation of good work done. He had no idea that their philanthropic work was so extensive, and he was certain that it deserved every support.

THE HUMAN MIND.

Prebendary Reynolds, in his weekly scientific address on Wednesday last week, in the church of SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C., observed:—Human nature is threefold, and our body, soul, spirit, are developed by an eternal energy, resident in the universe, and by this divine intelligence the wells of truth are filled to overflowing for replenishment of the earth. Our anatomy is strange, our mental composition stranger. We are a sort of museum with material and mental curiosities belonging in part to heredity, with things new strangely blended. We are furnished from a long-continued process, gathering representative parts from all precedent life and mind.

Bodily force makes or gives concrete form to our structure. Spiritual force represents all that is mentally beautiful, creative, moral, in our soul. The mental contains the potentiality of five great knowledges; material, vital, sensitive, intellectual, moral. Interpret ourselves, and we interpret the universe. To equip us with material instruments for these various knowledges, the brain contains about 4,800,000,000 of fibres. The wisest man does not use to the fullest even a small part of this material equipment, but as no part is in vain, it proves that preparation has been made for our well-nigh infinite advance. He, in truth, is wisest who counts this life as best in preparing him to be best here, and counted worthiest of remembrance as complete in every part. We build up the mind by pleasant thoughts working out intellectual and moral problems. We weaken the mind by evil, godless, devilish thoughts, which generate a poison more deadly than those we extract from material substances.

LORD PLUNKET, AND SPAIN.

A crowded meeting of Churchmen was held in St. Martin's Town Hall, under the presidency of Colonel Sandys, M.P., to express sympathy with the Archbishop of Dublin and the other Irish bishops in the face of the obloquy cast upon them by other Churchmen for having consecrated Rev. Juan B. Cabrera as first Protestant bishop for Spain. The Bishops of Liverpool, Worcester, and Sodor and Man wrote excusing their absence, but cordially approving the objects of the meeting. Bishop Ryle said he failed entirely to see that Archbishop Plunket and his brethren had done anything wrong in consecrating Bishop Cabrera.

The Bishop of Worcester commended the "noble stand" of the Archbishop, his courage, dignity, gentleness, and forbearance in the midst of much blind and unreasoning clamour. Resolutions were passed sympathising warmly with the action of the Archbishop, and with the poor and once persecuted Protestants in Spain, who had "kept alive the flame of pure Gospel teaching in the face of a superstitious and tyrannical priesthood." The speakers included Professor Mayor, Canon Woodward, Mr. James Inskip, and Canon O'Connor.

A similar meeting, influentially attended, was also held on the preceding Friday in Exeter Hall lower.

SOLDIERS' HOME, CURRAGH CAMP.

This home was erected and established by Mrs. Perry at her own expense, a lady who has for many years devoted herself to the spiritual welfare of the soldiers quartered at the Camp.

The work is undenominational. A service is held at the Home every evening all the year round, and once or twice a week special services are conducted by ministers and members of different denominations. Much blessing has attended the services, and many soldiers have received spiritual life through the instrumentality of the work. There is at present a considerable deficit in the funds; I doubt not many Christian officers and friends of the soldier will be willing to contribute to the support of this excellent work. Communications should be addressed Mrs. Perry, The Soldiers' Home, Curragh Camp, Ireland.

John La Touche.

HORNSEY.—At Hornsey Tabernacle, founded by the late Dr. Kirton, a good work is being carried on, chiefly amongst the large class of young City clerks, who make up the bulk of the population in this rapidly growing suburb of London. Useful institutions are at work with success. The Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and young Christians' Band are flourishing, but there is great want of accommodation, and there is a debt of nearly £500 to be removed from the ground and building. A sale of work is to be held at Whitsuntide. Gifts of various kinds will be gratefully welcomed by the pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Durban, 43, Park-road, South Tottenham, N.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.

The severe weather caused great privation among all classes of workers, especially the Dockers, the class that this Mission reaches. The work has proved a great blessing to the poor men gathered into the Hall Sunday and week evenings. Among these are many to whom the Gospel addresses have proved the power of God unto salvation. Many are strong, able-bodied men, who want work and not charity, but owing to the condition of the labour market, and being unskilled, they are compelled to seek help through whatever means may offer. It has been a great strain upon the Mission to supply daily food for starving men, women, and children. It was a pitiable sight to see men clamouring for admission round the Mission doors. Many, it is found, have not entered a place of worship for years till they came to the Mission. There is now a palpable awakening, and conviction has laid hold of a few.

DEPTFORD MEDICAL MISSION.

When working in St. Giles', Seven Dials, and in the alleys now happily cleared away and replaced by wide, healthy streets, it was my privilege to have under my control a convalescent home; but here in Deptford, with closer alleys, more poverty, more sickness, more need, we have no place to which we can send our convalescents. I believe that of all adjuncts that can be attached to a Medical Mission a convalescent home is the most useful. It affords opportunities of restoration to complete physical health, and of spiritual influences at a time when the heart is softened and solemnised by the remembrance of a recent period in life when time and eternity drew very near together.

The Council of the Medical Mission, recognising the urgent desirability of such a home, have granted £25 toward the same. Through the kind interest of personal friends, I have received £177 2s. 4d. I feel assured that, for the sum of £350, the initial cost and working expenses for the current year can be met, and if this can be placed in the hands of the council, they will accept the responsibility, and the home will be opened this spring.

Fred. Arthur Pring,
Hon. Director Deptford Medical Mission.

YOUNG CITY WORKERS.

Mrs. Fisher and her helpers have lately had several good gatherings of business men and women. On March 20, after tea, a missionary meeting was held, Miss de Hailes giving an account of five years' labour on the Congo. She was accompanied by a native Christian lad of sixteen, whom she had redeemed from slavery, and through her teaching and assiduous care during sickness had led out of heathen darkness into light. The following Wednesday a meeting of the two Welcomes was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Aldersgate, addresses being given on "Old London" and "Health and Nursing." Mrs. Fisher is at present making special efforts to organise the circulation of good Gospel literature among these city workers. She will be thankful of any help friends may be led to send.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A muster of the members of the Christian Harbour Lights was held at 215, St. George-street, London Docks, on Thursday evening, when Capt. Harold Blackburne presided. A large company of sailors was present. The chairman urged the sailors to live a life of faith and trust in Christ, and cited his own experience derived from twenty-four years at sea, to show that in all their trials the help of the Saviour would be found equal to their needs. Mrs. Blackburne followed with an excellent address. After several testimonies, pledges were taken, and a number enrolled themselves as members of the Christian Harbour Lights.

BETHESDA TOWN MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—In view of the increasing demands upon the resources of the Mission, I have asked other friends to assist in the superintendence of the Mission. The providence of God has brought us a band for superintendence as well as work, who have formed the following committee of management: Major S. D. Cleeve, R.E., Messrs. G. H. Cooke, R.N., J. Elliot, and G. H. Fison. These friends have invited me to continue in the office of superintendent and secretary. I would earnestly request prayer for the Mission; also assistance in liquidating the debt of £340 on St. John's-road Mission Hall, Fratton, and the deficiency of £80 in our general fund which is owing to myself.

Ben. H. Key, Com.

Downham, St. Edward's-road, Southsea.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. C. Clark has been appointed general secretary of the Hammersmith Association.

During the past six months the number of new members and associates at Exeter Hall has more than doubled.

The new secretary of the Cork Association, Mr. James Chambers, has been heartily welcomed on entering upon his work.

The Association at Upton Park has rapidly increased in membership from nineteen to 115. At its annual meeting the other evening a clear balance-sheet was reported. Dr. Carless took the chair, and an address was delivered by Mr. W. Hind Smith.

The Kilburn and Brondesbury Association, which has made great progress through the warm interest manifested in it by its president, Mr. John Balfour, and the hard work of its hon. sec., Mr. J. W. White, held its annual meeting on Thursday. Dr. Monro Gibson was the principal speaker.

The London Association have been honoured by a visit during the past week from Mr. W. E. Dodge, Chairman of Board of Trustees of the New York Association. Mr. Dodge has been a princely supporter of the work in New York from its commencement. He expressed much gratification with the progress made in this country since his last visit some ten years ago.

In connection with the Norwich Association there is a band of Christian cyclists, with upwards of twenty members, and great prospects of good work before it. This band has already decided on a badge which could be used by any Y.M.C.A. Cycle Mission Band. Information about the badge would be gladly given to any who are likely to require it by Robt. J. Cunningham, Secretary Norwich Y.M.C.A. Cycle Mission Band.

The annual meeting of the Belfast Association was held in the Ulster Hall on Thursday, 4th inst., and there was a large attendance. The report stated that the membership is about 2,000, and the income last year was over £852. The contract for the new suite of buildings which are to be finished in two years, and which are to occupy one of the finest sites in the city, has been signed. The new buildings will cost about £15,000.

Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe was the principal speaker at the annual meeting of the Hampstead Association on the 1st inst., held at the Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill, and was supported on the platform by several of the clergy and ministers. The report presented by Mr. J. H. Swinburn, hon sec., showed that the several departments of work had been maintained throughout the year with much usefulness, and had led to an increase in the membership.

At the invitation of Mr. Lionel Newbery a social gathering of members of the Y.M.C.A.'s forming the N.E. Metropolitan District Union was held in the Gymnasium of the Hackney Association. Encouraging reports were given by representatives from Ware, Upton Park, Ilford, Tower Hamlets, Grays, Stratford, Walthamstow, North Woodford, Bow, Canning Town, and South Woodford. An address was afterwards delivered by Mr. W. R. Lane. A Foreign Missionary Convention will be held on Good Friday afternoon, meeting at 3 p.m., subject: "The Zambesi Industrial Mission." Public tea at 5. Evening at 7, "The China Inland Mission."

As president of the Richmond Y.M.C.A., Mr. J. Tillett invited the members and friends of the work, including the neighbouring clergy and ministers, to a reception at the Duke-street Schoolroom on the evening of Tuesday, April 2. The occasion was exceptional, opportunity being taken to make a presentation to Mr. P. Gouldsmith, the retiring hon. sec., and to welcome a new secretary in the person of Mr. P. F. Kistner, an old member of the Association at Stafford Rooms, and until recently connected with the work of Hampstead. The proceedings were of a deeply interesting character, both from the warm eulogiums bestowed upon the efforts for the good of young men put forth in the past, and the heartiness of the reception given to the new worker appointed.

Mr. M. H. Hodder presided on Friday afternoon at the monthly meeting of the National Council. Among the business dealt with was a proposal recommending closer co-operation between the Y.M.C.A. and the Inter-University Christian Union, particularly as this might affect the foreign work of the Association. A letter received from India laid great stress upon the importance of a university man being sent out to take up distinctly spiritual work among educated natives in the colleges of the Bombay Presidency. The following resolution was approved:—"That in reply to inquiries addressed to the council touching the question of the introduction of billiard-playing in Y.M.C.A.'s the council place on record the expression of their high appreciation of the value and usefulness of recreative agencies. They are of opinion that recreation—properly so called—as cricket, boating, gymnastics, swimming and cycling and such games as are by general consent held to be beneficial, should be warmly encouraged. They do not regard the game of billiards as coming under this category, and recommend therefore that the inclusion of this in the arrangements of the Y.M.C.A. should not be entertained."

THE Y.W.C.A.

The members of the Brentwood branch recently gave a display of musical drill to a large audience.

At the Shrewsbury Y.W.C.A. a nine days' mission has been held by Mrs. Legg (of Hampstead), and praise is going up to God for the abundant answer to prayer which He has given. Souls have been saved, and others have claimed an "indwelling Christ."

The members of the Clapham Helpers' branch and other friends met recently at the new Institute, Y.W.C.A., 195, Lavender-hill. Hon. Emily Kinnaird and Miss Laura Barter addressed the meeting, stirring the hearts of all present with reminders of our "Stewardship to God" and the need of the fire of the Holy Ghost.

During the past year the Sunday Afternoon Bible class at the Hammersmith ("Lady Havelock") branch has undergone many changes, numbers of the old members having left and others taken their places. The attendance has been good, and great blessing is recorded. A dressmaking class has been taught by a teacher sent by the L.C.C. The members number 115, of whom forty-one were enrolled during the year. Miss Mary Holt is hon. secretary.

The annual report of the Redhill branch is highly satisfactory. The neighbourhood is divided into districts, each district having a lady visitor, who month by month seeks to be a personal friend to her members. Prayer meetings have been well sustained, a monthly evangelistic service has been held, and the Bible class has increased; 396 of the members are total abstainers. A missionary sale of work realised £13, from which £10 was voted to the North India School of Medicine, for Christian women of Ludiana, of which one of the members, Miss Edith Brown, M.D., is principal.

The annual festival of the Plymouth (Central), Mutley, and St. Jude's-road Y.W.C.A. was held on April 3, at the Y.W.C.A. Home, 18, Lockyer-street, when the annual reports were presented, and Miss Meyer, of Brighton, spoke on the general work of the association. A large number of members gathered for tea in St. Andrew's Hall, after which addresses were given by Dr. Hingston and others. Miss Meyer spoke earnestly on "Willing-hearted Women." This branch is now the largest in Devonshire, having a total of 524 members (Plymouth Central 444, Mutley 64, and St. Jude's-road 16). During last year the Mutley Home was furnished and opened for boarders, and a new branch started at St. Jude's-road.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The Bradford and District Union has made good progress during the year, fifteen new societies having joined.

New Christian Endeavour Societies have recently been formed at Douglas (Isle of Man), Blyth, and Salem (Manchester).

The Hope Mission C.E. Society, St. Luke's, has held its third annual meeting. Mr. E. Francis took the chair, and a very encouraging report was given by the secretary.

At the Bridport Society's first anniversary an address was given by Rev. C. H. Marsack Day, of Bridgwater, on "The Happiest Motive for all Christian Endeavourers."

The St. George's-place Y.P.S.C.E., Canterbury, have been celebrating their second anniversary. In the afternoon Rev. W. Cuff preached, and in the evening a public meeting was held, Pastor W. Townsend presiding, and addresses given by Rev. W. Cuff and various other ministers of the town.

The Cotton-street Baptist Chapel Y.P.S.C.E. celebrated its first anniversary on Thursday, March 28. The chair was taken by the president, Rev. W. Joynes. The secretary reported that during the year twelve members have joined the church, and that five have become Sunday-school teachers. Miss Wise, who is shortly going out as a missionary to Peru, gave an address on the state of South America and its need of the Gospel.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN TURKEY.—A good medical man in the interior of Turkey, even though he be a foreigner, is sure of winning the respect of all classes of the people. Dr. Shepherd, of the American Mission at Aintab, received an ovation at that town on his return from America. The Governor and his Council, with other dignitaries on horseback, and a great multitude on foot, of all classes of the people, went out some distance on the road to express joy at his return and to escort him to his home.

IRISH NOTES.

A meeting to wish God-speed to Mr. Alen Crawford, of Mount Randal, Belfast, who is going out as a Presbyterian Missionary to China was held in Windsor Presbyterian Church, Belfast, last week, and was largely attended.

The special committee appointed by the last Methodist Conference to consider the better organisation of work among the young, has met in Dublin, and has recommended the formation of an Association, to be called the Methodist Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. This recommendation has given great satisfaction to the Societies of Christian Endeavour already existing in Ireland.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Lady Henry Somerset last week addressed large audiences in Greenock and Dumfries on behalf of temperance reform, with special reference to the Local Veto Bill.

The Scottish branch of the National Anti-Gambling League are taking steps to test the legality of betting as permitted on some racecourses throughout the country.

Rev. Egerton R. Young addressed a crowded meeting in Inverness last week, and gave his thrilling account of life in the far North-West, and mission work among the Indians.

The friends of temperance in Dundee have been approaching the magistrates and the Town Council with the view of securing a reduction of licensed places for the sale of drink.

Another Disruption figure has gone in the death of Rev. John Fairbairn, of the F.C., Greenlaw, in his eighty-seventh year. He was the second oldest minister in the Free Church.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Homes of Shelter was held in the Whitehall Shelter on April 3, Mr. Hugh Brown, Lord Dean of Guild, in the chair. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. The report stated that the term of residence had been extended from six to twelve months. Above 3000 women on discharge from prison had in the year accepted the invitation to the free breakfast. Mr. J. R. Miller, Rev. J. Wilson, Mr. A. A. Fergusson, and Miss White spoke in support of the work.

The jubilee of Rev. Dr. Fergus Ferguson, of Montrose-street E.U. Church, Glasgow, was celebrated on the 2nd inst. by a large meeting in the City Hall, at which Dr. Ferguson was presented with his portrait and illuminated addresses from temperance and other societies. Dr. Ferguson has for fifty years been pastor of this one congregation, and has been widely known as an ardent temperance advocate. In the course of his speech he said that when he began his ministry there were only four ministers in the city who were pledged total abstainers. Dr. Stalker and Dr. Oliver were among the speakers during the evening.

A KESWICK FUND FOR MISSIONARIES.—For the last two years I have been privileged to receive gifts towards a fund to enable returned missionaries and students preparing for the mission field, who could not themselves bear the expenses of a visit to Keswick, to attend the convention. I received £16 last year, and was able to send five friends to the convention—two ladies and three gentlemen. I trust we may be able to do better this year. Those who have been thus helped have expressed again and again their deep gratitude for the great blessing they had received. I shall be glad to receive gifts towards a similar fund for the coming convention. It would be well if those intending to contribute would do so as soon as possible, so that we may know how far we may be able to help.—Yours in Christ's service, Wellesley C. Bailey, Sec. Mission to Lepers.

SUNDAY REST IN FRANCE.—The anniversary of the League for Promoting Sunday Rest was celebrated in Paris last week, M. Léon Say presiding over an enthusiastic public meeting. It was shown that the league has succeeded in all directions. Letter-carriers had obtained a Sunday half-holiday, and the work of letter-sorters had been greatly lightened. Sunday was now regarded as a day of rest by most business houses. The exceptions were those which catered to alimentary needs, like restaurants, but still there were millions of Sunday serfs in France—a deplorable fact, for without the Sunday rest the workman lost all elasticity and broke down while still young. His mind could not grow, family life could not be enjoyed, and he was driven to look for a solace from his monotonous serfdom at the dram-shop. The League embraces persons of every religious belief. The Bishop of Autun wishes the league God-speed. The venerable M. Jules Simon hopes that its efforts would soon be felt in every cottage and workshops in France.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOMAS TROTMAN, KENTISH TOWN.

This honoured brother has been called home at the ripe age of seventy-five, after a life of useful and faithful service. He kept up to the last a little meeting, which those who attended found singularly helpful.

REV. DR. W. ANDERSON, TOOTING.

Many will have heard with regret of the calling home of this well-known minister, who unhappily became involved in a prolonged lawsuit over Defoe Chapel. Since he lost the chapel, he has held services in the Vestry Hall, an attached congregation gathering round him.

MRS. WILLIAM HAUGHTON.

Many friends will grieve to know that Mrs. Haughton passed away on March 25, after only a week's illness from bronchitis. Hers was a long loving life of service to God and to those among whom she lived. As the daughter, sister, and wife of three successive rectors of Barton-with-Irstead, Norfolk, it was her lot to spend many years of her life in that neighbourhood, and earnestly did she seek to promote the spiritual and temporal welfare of those around her.

DR. J. A. BROADUS.

The American Church are now mourning the death of Dr. J. A. Broadus, a man of great influence and a leader among the Baptists. Born in the State of Virginia in 1827, he exercised a powerful ministry during many years, and latterly was president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville. Dr. Broadus was the author of a number of theological works, and also wrote on homiletics. He was a member of the International Sunday-school Committee and of the Bible Revision Committee, and though a man of strong personal convictions, he yet loved all who loved Christ.

MISS LOUISA M. HOOK, CALCUTTA.

This well-known worker, who went to Calcutta in 1868 as a missionary of the Women's Union Missionary Society (U.S.A.), has entered into rest at Morristown, New Jersey. Miss Hook was one of the pioneers of the movement among Christian women which has resulted in the organisation of so many missionary societies, and in the sending out of so many lady missionaries. During her long term of service she only took one furlough out of India. Both in Calcutta and Allahabad she was well known in missionary circles. In both cities she was superintendent of the work under the care of her Society, and her death will be lamented by many outside the circle of Christian society. During her later years in India Miss Hook's health was very infirm, but she held on to what she considered her post of duty with extraordinary tenacity, and only consented to retire from India when it became clearly evident that she could no longer continue to render effective service.

RESCUE WORK IN MANCHESTER.—The friends of the Manchester Mission have held enthusiastic meetings at Radcliffe. Sister Myra admirably advocated the claims of the submerged tenth of Ancoats, showing the need not only for the Gospel to be preached but the Gospel to be lived among the people in the persons who call themselves Christians. Rev. D. L. Pawson gave an account of the work done amongst the men at the Central Hall, also in connection with the Men's Home and the Labour Yard. Rev. S. F. Collier enumerated the various agencies at work, showing their use and ability, also the need for extension in connection with the Homes, etc. In the evening, Rev. W. H. Kelshaw stirred the audience with the recitals of incidents in slumdom. Sister Margaret, Sister Daisy, and Rev. S. F. Collier followed with accounts of other departments of the work.

LORD HALIFAX AND THE POPE.—The chairman of the Church Association, Captain Cobham, has called the attention of the Earl of Rosebery to recent acts and utterances of Viscount Halifax. He says: "It was only on the faith of his having subscribed 'in the presence of God' a solemn declaration that he is a member of the Church of England, 'as by law established,' that Viscount Halifax was appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner. The religion established by law is recognised in all constitutional documents as being the 'Protestant' religion. If decent consistency, or even intelligible meaning, is to attach to such a statutory declaration as that made by Viscount Halifax, I submit that he has been unfaithful to his obligations by suing to the Bishop of Rome, as well as by publicly advocating 'explanations' inconsistent with the 'religion established by law.' Such conduct imposes upon your lordship the duty of advising Her Majesty to remove Lord Halifax from a post which his opinions disqualify him from holding, and which places it in his power to aid in diverting the funds of the Established Church into channels favourable to Romish aggression."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Hawkhurst, Kent.—Mr. John H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a twelve days' united mission here. There has been a real work of God. The clear and faithful preaching of the Gospel has been much blessed in the quickening of Christians and the conversion of sinners.

Bradford.—Mr. William Forbes has concluded a fifteen days' mission in Ripley-street Chapel, Bradford. The Sunday services were well attended, and a number of inquirers were led to decision. The addresses to the three large meetings of men—about 600 present on each occasion—were much appreciated.

Mr. William Nobbs has lately been visiting Staines and Salisbury, at both of which God gave blessing. He is now at Brimscombe, Gloucester, looking forward to the Good Friday gatherings at Stroud, where in past years a great work has been done. On Easter Monday there are meetings of the same character at Chalfont. Mr. Nobbs will be glad of prayer for continued blessing on these gatherings.

Keswick.—A Gospel Mission has been held in the Drill Hall, Keswick. It was opened on Sunday, 24 ult., by Mr. W. R. Lane, who continued in charge until the Tuesday following, when, owing to domestic affliction, he was obliged to return home. Mr. Charles Inglis took his place until Friday, 29th ult., when Mr. Theodore Nicholson, Carlisle, succeeded him and conducted the meetings till the close on Thursday last. The attendance has been very good, the interest well sustained, and the cases of decision numerous.

Nottingham.—At Edwin-street Chapel an eight days' mission has been conducted from March 24 to 31 by Messrs. Collins, Gott, Marshall, Martin, and Rushbrooke, five students of the Midland Baptist College. The services have been thoroughly evangelistic, the addresses being earnest and pointed appeals for definite decision to follow Christ in all things. The result of these services is that a number of people have come forward expressing a desire to become Christians. One of the most encouraging features has been the leading to decision of a number of young men.

Mr. Charles Inglis concluded last week a mission at Tottenham, which has been greatly owned and blessed of God. The addresses have been solemn and heart-searching; numbers have been brought, night by night, under conviction of sin; and in the inquiry-room both men and women had been led to decide for God. Christians have also received great blessing in the afternoon Bible readings, which have been largely attended. Weary workers have been refreshed, and much appreciation was indicated by the busy pencils taking notes. Mr. Inglis is this week preaching at Walthamstow, after which he goes to Hastings, Dublin, and other centres. C.

Perth.—A successful mission, conducted by Mr. Webster, of Rochdale, has closed in connection with Perth City Mission, and a good many have professed faith in the Lord Jesus. There have been some remarkable cases of habitual drunkards reclaimed, and showing it openly by bearing witness at the open-air meetings. The meetings were held in the Mission Hall during the week, and in the City Hall on the Sabbath. The Bible readings in the afternoon and the addresses on Sabbath morning to Christians has produced a quickening in the believers which is being already seen, and cannot fail to bring forth fruit in many days to come. A. Turner

Mr. Julius Rohrbach writes:—"We have had a fortnight of special Gospel services in our halls at Moabit and Charlottenburg, conducted by Pastor Kaiser, formerly editor of the 'Evangelisches Allianz-Blatt,' of Blankenburg, and the Lord greatly helped his servant in his messages both to believers and unbelievers. Many have been quickened and stirred to greater zeal and self-denial for the service of the Lord, and not a few have been set free from the bondage of Satan to serve the true and living God. Our hearts are cheered in the midst of masses of indifference, ungodliness, social and political strife, militarism, and officialism. The power of the name of Jesus has been made known. Difficulties abound, yet we look above to Him for whom cometh our help. Pray for us."

Mr. J. J. Sims has concluded a successful four weeks' mission at Brighton, in connection with the Brighton branch of the "Evangelistic Mission." A number of congregations united, and Mr. Sims spoke at Athenæum Hall on Mondays, Railway Mission Hall on Tuesdays, Connaught Institute on Wednesdays, and Emmanuel Church School-room on Fridays. At the farewell tea on April 1 many testimonies were given, both of sinners being converted and Christians being blessed. Amongst those who spoke very warmly of the benefits of the mission were Mr. W. Willett, who presided, Rev. J. G. Gregory, and Mrs. Gates. Mr. Sims is now preaching at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, on Sundays, at 3.30 and 7, and week nights at 8, at which he is giving illustrated addresses on "The Book of Revelation." The prayers of God's people are asked for much blessing.

C. Russell Hurditch.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler writes:—"I am preaching every Sabbath, and in good health."

Rev. Dr. Maclaren, Manchester, has much improved in health. In a letter received from him last week—posted at Brindisi—he says he trusts that the sea air on the run home will completely restore him.

Miss Jessie A. Ackermann was recently laid aside by a severe illness. Lady Henry Somerset has invited her to be her guest at Eastnor Castle, Sussex, where she is now taking some needed rest.

Mr. Frank Paton, third son of Dr. J. G. Paton, has accepted the invitation to become the special representative in the New Hebrides of the "John G. Paton Mission Fund." He will probably be stationed on Tanna.

Professor L. J. Bertrand, director of the mission to French priests, has arrived in London, and has arranged to address several meetings towards the end of the month. He will be glad to hear from friends of his work, at 3, The Manor-way, Blackheath.

Rev. Andrew Murray has accepted the invitation of the South Africa General Mission to visit this country, and will probably, says The Life of Faith, take part in the forthcoming Conventions at Guildford, Keswick, and others. He hopes to arrive at the end of May.

Mr. George Müller spoke on Sunday week, at Brimscombe, Gloucester, the meetings being crowded, and in fact, all could not find entrance. This venerable servant of Christ was much helped of the Lord in his ministry of the Word, and believers were refreshed and built up.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey paid a flying visit to Jackson, Miss., on their way to Mexico. Previous to this southern trip the evangelists had been at work in all the states of the Union, except Mississippi, and now they have completed the list. After the visit to Mexico they will return to Northfield for the summer.

Rev. James Adler, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, has completed the revision of the Judeo-German New Testament. Nearly half a million portions of this edition have already been circulated in Russia and elsewhere. The March "Occasional Paper" of the "Prayer Union for Israel" is by Mr. Adler. It is a statement of Christian truth, presented in a way that should appeal with special power to Jewish readers. A large number of copies have been disseminated. Mr. Adler's address is 43, Poet's-road, Highbury New Park, N.

Rev. W. Lancelot Holland has issued a letter to his people at St. Thomas's, Edinburgh, giving his reasons for leaving the Church of England, and consequently resigning his incumbency. After prayerful study of the Holy Scripture, he says, "I have tried to reconcile the 'traditions and ceremonies' of the Prayer Book with the simple teaching of the New Testament, but find a reconciliation impossible." Moreover, he enumerates a number of unscriptural doctrines and practices which, owing to recent judgments, are now no longer illegal, and against which no remedy exists.

The Bishop of Bedford, who has for some time been in ill-health, has, to the deep regret of many, felt compelled to resign. "Though resigning the bishopric of Bedford, Dr. Billing will," says The Daily Telegraph, "retain the rectory of St. Andrew Undershaft, together with the title of his suffragan see. The active duties of the office will be undertaken by Canon G. F. Browne, of St. Paul's, who has consented to become Dr. Billing's successor, without resigning, for the present, his stall in the Cathedral. Dr. Browne will probably be known as the Bishop of Stepney, and it is arranged that he shall be consecrated in Easter week."

Mrs. Bishop left Siberia on December 11 after a very successful journey of five weeks; and after spending the Christmas fortnight in Japan she returned to Corea, where she has been studying the important changes that are being carried into effect. She has had three very interesting private audiences of the Corean King and Queen. On the way from Seoul to Chemulpo she sustained a somewhat severe concussion of the spine by the overturning of her "jinricksha" while going at full speed down hill, and was detained for ten days at a Chinese inn, but recovered sufficiently to proceed to Swatow by Nagasaki and Hong-Kong, from whence she proposes to return northwards in the spring. Mrs. Bishop has decided to remain in the Far East for a second year.

Help towards Sales.—Help is offered to all evangelical workers, holding sales for missions—either home or foreign—by an earnest worker, who will supply gratis, good art work, and other saleable articles.—Address letters, Missions, Lower Bourne, Farnham, Surrey.

STRANGERS' REST.

Last Friday a most interesting meeting took place, when Miss Beatrice M. Hurditch and Miss Coote, proceeding to take charge of the Strangers' Rest at Zanzibar, were specially commended to God, and his blessing sought on their labour among the sailors in that dark continent.

Mr. John Cory presided, and in opening the proceedings said he had always felt a great interest in the work of the Rest on the East African coast, and had rejoiced at the encouraging accounts received from time to time. Sailors were in as much danger on land as at sea, and there was great need of Christian work. He felt thankful that God had put it into the hearts of these two sisters to give themselves to this work.

Pastor Fuller-Gooch delivered an address from Acts xiii. 1-5. He wished for the sisters who were going forth the living presence and power of the Holy Ghost, and that thus filled they might be blessed in their work among the sailors at Zanzibar.

Miss Hurditch described the leading of God in her case. Miss Coote was unable to be present on account of illness. Mr. Hurditch, speaking as a father, said that though it was hard to lose a daughter who had been a great helper in his work, both he and his wife willingly did so.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac pleaded for £40 to repair and renovate the Rest, which was getting into a very bad condition, and they had no funds for the purpose. Mr. John Cory said he would give a fourth if the remainder was raised. J. Hickson.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE-READING ASSOCIATION.

The thirteenth anniversary was celebrated last last week at the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct. Mr. W. R. Rickett presided. Mr. C. Waters (hon. sec.) reported that in 1882 the number of members was 11,000; in 1886 the number increased to 100,000, and to-day the number is half-a-million. The host of earnest fellow-workers, some 6000 strong, are heartily congratulated on the success of the Association. The total number of English cards of membership issued this year is 535,000; of these 463,000 are located in 5730 branches in Great Britain and Ireland, and the rest are distributed in about fifty colonies and foreign countries throughout the world. Of these the principal are—Australia, New Zealand, Canada, United States of America, Jamaica, India, British Guiana, Cape Verde Islands, Chili, Columbia, Congo Free State, France, Italy, Egypt, and Persia. The Association is doing a peculiar and effective missionary work. In the person of its representative in India, Dr. J. L. Phillips, it is developing and strengthening the Sunday-school movement in that country. Addresses were given by the chairman, Revs. J. G. Train, and E. Griffith-Jones.

In the afternoon a conference of branch secretaries was held at the Offices of the Association, 56, Old Bailey, when Mr. E. Towers presided.

COREA.—Bishop Ninde, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, had an audience of the King of Corea in February last. The King said to him: "There are many Americans in Corea. We are glad they are here. Thank the American people. We shall be glad to receive more teachers." Three days after this interview, a representative of the foreign department of the Corean Government asked the superindent of the Methodist Episcopal Mission in Seoul to receive two hundred students into his mission school.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—The nineteenth anniversary meeting of this institution took place recently at Lady Brassey's town mansion, 24, Park-lane. From the report it appeared that in the year 1894 there had been an increase both in books and readers. The free lectures and the evening classes had been continued. The library was described as standing in the midst of twelve large board schools, and it was said that unless something was done for those who came from them they drifted into loafers. The readers had numbered 47,062 during the year, while the number of attendants at the lectures was 5,050. The committee regretted that the much-needed new building scheme had not been proceeded with, and they urgently appealed for funds so as to enable them to do more for Bethnal Green and its population of 250,000. Mr. George Howell, M.P., described the district as a most needy one, a fact which ought to encourage friends to support the work. He found that the character of the books read was very satisfactory. Rev. W. Ingram, master of the Oxford House, referred to the library as a pioneer institution. Addresses followed by Mr. Pickersgill, M.P., Dr. Newman Hall—who showed that the nation was a loser when the people's education was neglected—Dr. Garnett, Mr. David Chadwick. Mr. F. A. Bevan, and others.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In New York over thirty Episcopal clergymen have joined in a public protest against the legalising of the Sunday afternoon opening for drinking saloons.

A proposal to affix the seal of the London County Council to a licence for the sale of intoxicating drink was defeated by fifty-seven votes to forty-three.

The chief constable of Monmouthshire, to prevent the imposition of so-called bond-fide travellers, has recommended the magistrates to grant only six-day licences in certain parts.

Recently published statistics show that the working classes in England alone last year spent more money on intoxicating drink than the total rent of all the houses in Great Britain.

The National Council meetings of the B.W.T.A. to be held in London will be preceded on Sunday, June 16, by special devotional services in 200 places of worship and halls throughout the metropolis.

Mrs. Ella Williams, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the Dominion of Canada, and one of the leading speakers and writers on Temperance reform in that country, died March 28.

A Local Veto demonstration, organised by the B.W.T.A., was held in St. James's Hall on Sunday afternoon in connection with the West London Mission. Mrs. Bamford Slack was the principal speaker.

A demonstration of local preachers in favour of the veto bill has been held at Wesley's Chapel, City-road. Mr. T. Snape, M.P., said they were face to face with a big struggle, but Christian people were not afraid of a struggle for the right.

Mr. Joshua Rowntree has issued a pamphlet entitled "The Opium Habit in the East," containing a study of the evidence given before the Royal Commission on Opium. He maintains, dealing with methods of inquiry, that there has been a failure in that strict impartiality in hearing evidence and examining witnesses.

Archdeacon Farrar, addressing a crowded meeting at Exeter Hall on the subject of "Temperance Reform," said he was of opinion that, notwithstanding the number of years of work for the cause many more would have to pass before a really effective measure, dealing with the liquor traffic, could be introduced and carried into law.

Drinking and gambling, it is feared, are likely to become as great curses in Palestine as in England. In a village of Scripture fame a low drinking and gambling den has lately been opened in the sookh, with disastrous effects on the villagers. Several men have taken to drinking, one has become notorious as a wife-beater, and several others have gambled away money, olives, and clothes.

The Torquay W.T.A.U. has held a successful series of meetings. On Tuesday afternoon, April 2, a drawing-room meeting was held at the residence of Mrs. Talbot Greaves. The same evening a public meeting was held in the Albert Hall, presided over by Rev. Talbot Greaves. On Wednesday afternoon and evening well-attended meetings were held in the Y.W.C.A. On Thursday afternoon a drawing-room meeting was held by invitation of the Dowager Countess Castle Stuart at her residence, "Ochiltrie," while Mrs. Hawkes also addressed a mothers' meeting in the Parish Room, Victoria Park. Similar meetings were held on Friday. Altogether, ninety names were taken, many being fresh pledges.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY. — The Church of Rome has recently made great strides at Dorking, and a Roman Catholic church now occupies a most important position in the town, hence this Society arranged a meeting, which was held in St. Paul's Church-room, on Thursday last, and was well attended. Rev. H. C. Sturdy presided, and referred to the great need there is at the present time of resisting and exposing the errors of Romanism and Ritualism, Captain Williams, secretary, gave an illustrated lecture on "The Reformation of England," and towards the close made an urgent appeal for funds on behalf of the Protestant Reformation Society, the sum of £500 being now required.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on an eight days' mission at Gospel Hall, Tatsfield, by B. H. Angel, from April 14 to 21.—On behalf of the Dowlais B.W.T.A. Branch; also that much blessing may attend a Gospel temperance mission to be held in the town during Easter week, conducted by Rev. Isaac P. Dickerson.—For blessing on the open-air work of the Stratford Mizpah Band, commencing for the season on Good Friday.—For Gospel meetings this month in Portarlington, Ireland, in a Wooden Hall of the Irish Evangelization Society's, by Messrs. Loney and Robinson.—For blessing on a conference of Christian workers in the Mission Hall, Helensburgh, N.B., on Saturday afternoon, April 20. PRAISE.—For blessing on the work of the Lamp Mission in connection with the Stratford Mizpah Band.

The Book World.

Nuggets of Truth from the Epistles. By William G. Carr. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) An American teacher who has made many friends in Britain, here opens up, in a very terse manner, portions of Scripture with which Christians generally need to be more familiar. A number of Bible Readings on fundamental truth are added. The volume will prove of real service to many Christian workers.

How to Visit Italy, a new guide book, edited by Dr. H. S. Lunn, gives a large amount of information regarding the chief towns of Italy. Archdeacon Farrar, Dr. Russell Forbes, and others, have made welcome contributions to its pages; and those who contemplate a brief tour in the peninsula will find here as much direction as they can reasonably expect. There are maps and illustrations. (2s. 6d. Dr. Lunn, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W.).

A Popular History of the Reformation and Modern Protestantism, by the late G. T. Bettany, M.A., B.Sc., is an admirable recital of a story which the present generation requires to remember. There are many illustrations, some of them reproductions of famous statues and pictures. The author gives us a succinct narrative of events, and a good idea of the men who played a part in them, not only in Great Britain but also in the several countries of Europe. (Ward, Lock, & Bowden.)

The Pathway of Life, by Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage, is a volume of discourses accompanied by nearly 300 illustrations. The sermons are characterised by the famous preacher's well-known animation, and the title-page thus declares the aim:—"Intended to lead the young and the old into paths of happiness, and to prepare them for a holy companionship with Him whose kingdom is as boundless as his love." Some of the pictures are hardly works of art, but there is an excellent portrait of Dr. Talmage. (7s. 6d. Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company.)

Palestine Re-peopled (3s. nett), by Rev. James Neil, M.A., is now in its thirteenth edition. It is replete with information regarding the land and the people; and considers one of the most interesting developments of our time in the light of the prophetic Scriptures. For those who cannot get the bound volume, a cheap edition in coloured covers (1s.) has been published. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) Other valuable works by the same well-known authority on Oriental topics and Biblical exposition are: Pictured Palestine (7s. 6d.), a very attractive work, true to life and useful as a Bible help; and Palestine Explored (3s. 6d.), dealing with the natural features of the land and the rites and customs of the people, as they throw light upon Holy Scripture. The former of these is in its second edition, the latter in its seventh. Both are of sterling worth, not only as repertories of facts, but as guides to the true explanation of Biblical figures of speech. This field of study is one which has not yet, in a general way, been allowed its proper importance; but Mr. Neil is doing good service in directing attention thereto at once in a popular manner and with the trustworthy precision of an expert. THE HALF WAS NEVER TOLD, and THE LITTLE PILGRIM.

A BEAUTIFUL LAND BY FAITH I SEE, and RAISE ME HIGHER!

SHALL WE MEET BEYOND THE RIVER? and SHALL WE GATHER AT THE RIVER?

SHALL WE SING IN HEAVEN FOR EVER? and WHO ARE THESE IN BRIGHT ARRAY?

JESUS LOVES ME, and WE ARE BOUND FOR THE LAND OF PROMISE.

JESUS, LOVER OF MY SOUL, and JESUS, WE LOVE TO MEET.

THE SAVIOUR LIVES, NO MORE TO DIE, and JERUSALEM, FOR EVER BRIGHT.

BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD, and AND IS IT TRUE WHAT I AM TOLD?

OH, SING OF HIS MIGHTY LOVE, and HOW CAN I KEEP FROM SINGING?

JESUS SAVES ME ALL THE TIME, and WHITER THAN SNOW.

COME TO THE SAVIOUR, and RING THE BELLS OF HEAVEN.

WHO'LL BE THE NEXT? and PASS ME NOT.

WHO'LL BE THE NEXT? THERE IS A CITY BRIGHT; and JESUS, I WILL TRUST THEE.

WAITING AT THE WELL, and 'TIS BETTER FARTHER ON.

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN, and CONSECRATION.

IF I COME TO JESUS, and A CHILD'S PRAYER.

THERE IS A GATE, and WEEPING WILL NOT SAVE ME.

DOWN FROM THE REALMS OF LIGHT. (Two Pages.)

THERE IS LIFE FOR A LOOK, and THERE IS LIFE FOR A LOOK (Tonic Sol-fa).

I LOVE TO TELL THE STORY, and OH TO BE OVER YONDER!

I LAY MY SINS ON JESUS, and JESUS, ONLY JESUS.

A HOME SONG, and I'M WEARY, I'M WEARY.

WASHED IN THE BLOOD, and THE VALLEY OF BLESSING.

THE CROSS, and THE PRECIOUS NAME.

WONDROUS LOVE, and WHITE ROBES.

THE RIFTED ROCK, and CLINGING TO THE CROSS.

I LEFT IT ALL WITH JESUS, and COME, THOU LONG-EXPECTED JESUS.

O GOD MOST HIGH, MOST HOLY, and O DARK AND DREARY DAY.

I HAVE HEARD OF A SAVIOUR'S LOVE, and ANGELS HOVERING ROUND.

WHEN TO MEET JESUS. (Two Pages.)

THE HOME OVER THERE, and THE LITTLE PILGRIM'S SONG.

JESUS THE WATER OF LIFE HAS GIVEN. (Two Pages.)

TRUSTING JESUS, and ONLY TRUST HIM.

A BRIGHT AND GLORIOUS LAND, and MERCY FOR THEE.

PRAISE YE THE LORD, and PRAISE.

WHEN MY WEARY HANDS ARE FOLDED, and MY REDEEMER.

A LIGHT UPON THE SHORE, and THE OTHER SIDE.

MEET ME AT THE FOUNTAIN. (Two Pages.)

LOST ONE! WANDERING ON IN SADNESS, and TELL ME THE OLD, OLD STORY.

WHITER THAN THE SNOW. (Two Pages.)

THE BEAUTIFUL STREAM, and YET THERE IS ROOM.

WHAT SHALL I DO TO BE SAVED? and ONLY A STEP TO JESUS.

PRECIOUS PROMISE, and JUST A WORD FOR JESUS.

HOLD THE FORT, and THE GATE AJAR FOR ME.

JESUS LOVES EVEN ME, and I AM COMING.

BURY THY SORROW, and IF I WERE A VOICE.

ROOM AMONG THE ANGELS, and DANIEL'S BAND.

SWEET BY-AND-BY, and MORE TO FOLLOW.

COME TO THE SAVIOUR, and ONCE FOR ALL.

THE LIFE BOAT, and WE ARE WAITING BY THE RIVER.

HERE AM I, SEND ME, and KNOCKING! KNOCKING! [THERE. WHO IS

JEWELS, and WHEN JESUS COMES.

THE LORD WILL PROVIDE, and THAT WILL BE HEAVEN FOR ME.

FATHER, TAKE MY HAND, and I AM SWEEPING THROUGH THE GATES.

THERE'S A LIGHT IN THE VALLEY. (Two Pages.)

ONE MORE DAY'S WORK FOR JESUS, and LET THE LOWER LIGHTS BE BURNING.

THERE IS LIFE FOR A LOOK, and YET THERE IS ROOM.

THE EDEN ABOVE, and FOR ME! FOR ME!

ONLY AN ARMOUR-BEARER. (Two Pages.)

THE LOST SHEEP, and WHITER THAN SNOW.

JOY IN SORROW, and RESCUE THE PERISHING

WHAT SHALL THE HARVEST BE? (Two Pages).

A CRY FROM MACEDONIA. (Two Pages).

IT PASSETH KNOWLEDGE, and IT IS FINISHED!

I AM PRAYING FOR YOU, and WE SHALL MEET BY-AND-BY.

HAVE YOU HEARD? and BEHOLD HIM!

ALL OF THEE! and AND CAN IT BE?

MY PORTION FOR EVER, and TAKE THE WINGS OF THE MORNING.

ONLY WAITING, and WONDROUS WORDS!

GATHERED HOME, and ART THOU LONGING?

HOW CAN I KEEP FROM SINGING? and THE SANDS OF TIME.

KEEP ON PRAYING! and SING AND PRAY! ETERNITY DAWNS.

OVER THE LINE, and IS JESUS ABLE TO REDEEM?

WHERE IS MY BOY TO-NIGHT? and REMEMBER ME, O MIGHTY ONE.

THE GOSPEL BELLS, and JOY TO THE WORLD.

YIELD NOT TO TEMPTATION, and TEMPTED AND TRIED.

THE BLOOD OF THE LAMB. (Two Pages.

MEMORIES OF GALILEE, and DAY BY DAY THE MANNA FELL.

HARK, HARK, MY SOUL! and COME, YE DISCONSOLATE.

PRAY, BRETHREN, PRAY! and TRUSTING IN HIS WORD.

NEARER THE CROSS! and COME, ALL YE SAINTS.

"BLESSED IS HE THAT COMETH!" and EVENING PRAYER.

TAKE ME AS I AM, and COME, WANDERER, COME!

IS YOUR LAMP BURNING? and THE SHADES OF EVENING.

WHILE THE DAYS ARE GOING BY, COME, OH COME, WITH THY BROKEN HEART.

OH TO BE OVER YONDER! and LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS.

"EVER! NEVER!" and "NEVER! EVER!"

PEACE, BE STILL. (Two Pages).

HAVE YOU ANY ROOM FOR JESUS? and "VERILY, VERILY!"

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

The Catacombs at Rome.

Their Contents and Teachings.

By the late BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.

Fourth Edition. Revised and Improved.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive Christianity; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of Romanism; Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the Early Christians. With many Illustrations.

The Dean of Achonry says:—

"'The Catacombs at Rome' is one of the most useful books I know: as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome; and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church at Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S ILLUSTRATED EDITION

A complete and authentic account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of early Christian and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the world.

Complete in One Vol. Cloth bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.
Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"Only let this book have a place in every British home and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth, who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

BY ELIZA RICHARDSON.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE VEIL LIFTED; or, The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM; With Incidents of Convent Life.

1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE CONFESSIONAL; A Personal Narrative. Neatly printed in red and black; suitable for enclosing in a square envelope.

"If our young people could be induced to read Mrs. Richardson's description of conventual life, its physical sufferings and privations, its fearful monotony, and its hopeless outlook, something of the romantic illusion which attracts youth to the Romish Church would certainly be destroyed."—Literary World.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Notes and Comments.

THE news that peace has been concluded between Japan and China, the negotiations at Simonoskei having led to a definite result, will be received with profound thankfulness, while many will pray that the fresh treaty may turn to the furtherance of the Gospel. The action of the Japanese authorities in Manchuria, against the opium habit, will awaken hope that Count Ito and Li Hung Chang may be led to devise fresh measures for preventing the further spread of the evil.

By the intervention of the Board of Trade in the Boot Struggle we were led to hope that in a short time things would be brought to a happy issue. Knowledge of the matters in dispute, strict impartiality, and an honest desire to end the strife, are qualifications of the highest order; but at present there seems to be little chance of agreement being arrived at. Meanwhile, the distress of those locked out is keen, and many others who are indirectly involved, such as workers at Bermondsey, are also suffering. These repeated trade troubles make the heart sick, and every lover of peace would hail the establishment of any method by which they may be avoided.

The sorrows of the poor come in many forms, their very thrift sometimes intensifying them. Near Brierley Hill the poor colliers' houses are falling down, owing to subsidences caused by the coal mines underneath; as many as thirty-eight of them, being owners of their modest homes, have received notice to leave. One stoutly refuses to go, even at the risk of death. In a little cot an old worn-out man of seventy-three is spending his last days. When he was a young man, his father bought the ground on which the small house stands; father and son were their own builders. For more than forty years he has lived in it. With tears running down his cheeks he said: "I never thought they would have moved me till they took me to the churchyard, but I have got to go now, after bringing up all my family here. Never mind," he added: "I have another home to go to soon," and he pointed upward. Now, would not Lord Dudley, the wealthy owner of the coal that was under this poor man's house, be doing a wise and right thing if he were to succour these poor people?

"Far too little attention is paid nowadays to the public reading of Holy Scripture. Yet really good reading, which is reverent, and intelligent, and well articulated, is much more highly valued by congregations than many clergy suppose. It should be made a study, both as to manner and the matter." So a contemporary observes. An efficient reader is almost sure to indicate some new and subtle meanings by accent and emphasis. Jesus must have been a perfect reader, for we are told that when He read the eyes of all in the synagogue were fastened on Him. Might not edification and conversion be more earnestly sought through simple reading of the Word?

With our much reading, we may, almost without intention, overlook the Book of books; moreover, there is a tendency to read about the Bible to the neglect of the inspired Book itself. An esteemed correspondent recalls times gone by, when, in a village where she lives, "no book but the Bible was read by the cottagers on the Sabbath days: but now as education spreads, cheap books and papers seem to monopolise the attention of all, except the aged." The life of faith requires the food of heaven; and this is only supplied by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Another correspondent suggests that the Bible is neglected by worshippers in church and chapel—that there is a disposition to hear rather than to follow the reader or preacher. He says: "In a congregation of some hundreds last Lord's day, I would be within the number if I said only about thirty followed the minister in reading the Old and New Testaments." A generation ago it was different, and in some assemblies to-day the old order still largely prevails. Those worshippers who keep at hand hymn-books for the use of visitors and strangers, might also with advantage have Bibles in readiness for use by such as would accept of them. Especially should young people be encouraged in this respect.

It is said that there will presently be a great struggle in Canada over the Manitoba school question. The Roman Catholics in that province having won their appeal to the English Privy Council, the Manitoba Legislature has been called upon to apply remedial legislation; this, it is expected, will be refused. The Roman Catholics are accordingly preparing for the conflict. Canadians are said to be not averse to religious education, but they look upon Roman Catholics as not quite loyal to English rule; and to mark their disapproval of this they will probably vote for the removal of all religious teaching from the schools, that thus they may get free from Papistical teaching. This is the root of our troubles at home in our elementary schools. If the priestly party struggles for power, the result will be the uprising of the people and a demand for secular education pure and simple.

If in a campaign one side is being conquered, they do not find fault with the enemy, but seek out the cause of their own defeat. The progress of a Romanising Ritualism on the one hand, and of a Paganising Rationalism on the other, working like a double-headed plague within the Church, is very disheartening to Evangelicals. But as the microbe of Influenza or Consumption finds its way into an enfeebled body, so the microbe of Sacerdotalism or Scepticism flourishes in an enfeebled Evangelicalism.

Our hymns are a very sure index of spiritual life. Observe how the rugged mountain songs of Zion have been toned down to suit the grassy plain. In the pilgrim prayer, "Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah," our grandfathers used to sing.

> Death of death, and hell's Destruction,
> Land me safe on Canaan's side.

We have enfeebled that grand line into

> Bear me through the swelling current,
> Land me safe on Canaan's side, putting the mighty suffering Victor out of sight, and fixing the attention on ourselves.

From the noble advent hymn, "Lo, He comes with clouds descending," we have simply eliminated the resonant and rejoicing verse :—

> The dear tokens of his passion,
> See his glorious body bears,
> Theme of endless exultation
> To his ransomed worshippers:
> With what rapture
> Gaze we on those glorious scars.

Few of the present generation ever heard that hallelujah shout, or know that such a verse lies buried among the mighty dead of our hymnology.

In the Revival years of 1859-62, dear Denham Smith revived a neglected verse of the hymn, "When I survey the wondrous cross," which ran thus :—

> His dying crimson, like a robe,
> Spreads o'er his body on the tree;
> Then I am dead to all the globe,
> And all the globe is dead to me.

The weakness of that verse lies in the word "globe." We have wished the Scriptural expression might be restored by an alteration such as this :—

> His dying crimson, round him furled,
> Spreads o'er his body on the tree;
> Then am I dead to all the world,
> And all the world is dead to me.

But the great Revival and Restoration that we want is that of the Incarnate, Crucified, Risen, Living, Glorified, and Coming Christ—the objective Christ. The subjective depends on the objective. "Christ in you the Hope of glory" can only become and continue a vigorous and virile reality in the soul and spirit, as by faith we see Him Himself whom God hath exalted a Prince and a Saviour at the right hand of the Majesty on high. When He shall be manifested we shall be like Him, and he that hath this hope upon HIM purifieth himself even as He is pure.

An acute remark is made by Mr. Illingworth in his Bampton Lectures on "Personality, Human and Divine," where he treats of the freedom of the human will. Against the assumption of those who deny that freedom he sets this universal experience—that men, when they have done wrong, have a sense of remorse, and why should they have remorse if they have not acted as free agents? Mr. Illingworth says :—

> The sense of freedom has maintained itself, from the dawn of history, against a spirit far more powerful than any which philosophy can raise—the spirit of remorse. What would not humanity, age after age, have given to be free from remorse? Yet remorse still stares us in the face, overshadowing our hearts with sadness, and driving its countless victims into madness, suicide, despair, and awful forebodings of the after world. Men would have exorcised it, if they could. But they cannot. And remorse is only a darker name for man's conviction of his own free will.

This is a sound way of dealing with such questions. We want to get down to the solid rock of fact, and remorse is a terrible fact.

Although it was members of his own political party who joined in honouring Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., in view of his intended retirement from political life, there was one reason for paying him respect, touched upon by the chairman of the meeting, which is outside of parties altogether; we mean Mr. Stansfeld's services to woman, and especially to poor, downtrodden women. He said he took the subject up because no one else would take it up. He did not like it; no one on earth could like it. It cost him much for years. He did not speak of political sacrifices, or the loss of personal friendships, but of the necessity of plunging himself into the horrible details of such a question. True; and the sacrifice which he made was a still greater one for pure women; it was common to all who did anything in the question. One gentleman who travelled far and wide, speaking in favour of the repeal of the C.D. Acts, used to say he never felt so safe in Divine keeping as then, but every journey was like a walk down a sewer. Thank God that horror is past and over.

Mr. Stansfeld's words on another subject were most weighty and most opportune, viz., the "economics of peace." We have peace, but have we the economics of peace? If we look at the monstrous, the insane armaments of Europe, we cannot say that we have. He said he thought it was time to speak out against armaments which exist, not apparently to be used, but for the purpose of threatening each other. They are eating into the very vitals of industry and prosperity, and of the peace and order of Europe, and possibly, he thought, we are on the eve of a catastrophe of which the world had never seen the like. Either there will be a struggle which will inflict the greatest possible loss of life and property, or we must arrive at the proposition which had common sense enough to recommend it, of a pro ratâ diminution of the armaments of Europe. But who is to do this, who is to begin? Only a fortnight ago, while a committee were inquiring what can be done for the tens of thousands of our unemployed, Parliament launched into further outlay on our navy. Our Budget is now above a hundred millions. Where was the peace party in the House?

The days of the isolation of countries are at an end. The customs of each are observed of all, and, in certain respects at least, the tendency is to follow the good. Our temperance teaching in primary schools has led Belgium to adopt something similar, apparently something better. In 952 schools there are 16,307 scholars who have promised freely and on their honour to abstain until they are twenty from gin and other strong liquors, and to use wine with moderation. The age at which the pledge is taken is to be at least twelve, and it is done in an admirable manner:—

Each new adherent pronounces the words of his promise before the assembled school ere he signs and receives his certificate of membership. The school is decked, the pupils are in holiday dress, the local authorities, the parochial clergy, and the parents of the new adherents are invited to the ceremony. From time to time the teacher gives a lesson on the disastrous results of alcoholism, and gathers old pupils round him to keep them firm, and give them encouragement. It is found that the boy who has kept sober up to twenty usually remains so, and through the boy the family is not seldom influenced.

As it is computed that there are in Belgium 200,000 deaths annually from strong drink, and as 75 per cent of the crime is caused by it, there is only too much reason for earnest, wise, and thorough action.

The Speaker for April 6 has a very good article on "The Races that have to Go." The writer reminds us that the term "lower race" is somewhat misleading:—

Is it so certain that the non-European races are really the lower? And, if so, is their relative position a permanent one or only a temporary one? The Gauls and Germans were the lower races to the Roman world of the Augustan age. The lower race of our age may be the highest one of the next. It may or may not have been conquered, in the ordinary sense, by the higher for the time being; the indispensable condition seems to be that it should adopt the good gained by that race, and "go one better."

The comparison between the races is most interesting, and we are glad that the writer has a word to say for the black race, to which he is not so sure that the term "lower" can be applied in an absolute sense, or that their coming forward to play a more conspicuous part on the world's stage than has hitherto been allotted to them would be in itself an evil. The article is a good lesson in humility and in humanity.

The library of books which we assuredly owe to St. Paul has been steadily growing of late. A short time ago, and only four epistles were unanimously assigned to him—Romans, Galatians, and the first and second of Corinthians. They were frequently called the "great quadrilateral of Christianity." Now, the first of Thessalonians is regarded as authentic, etc. . . . But the pastoral epistles are much more doubtful, both by reason of their contents and the peculiarities of their style.

This is by the author of a recent book, discussing the gains and losses which we owe to the Higher Criticism. Although we are elsewhere told that certainty cannot be entertained about the Word of God, the author has few uncertainties in his iconoclastic work. Criticism may have received stern correction as to St. Paul's Epistles and on the authorship of the Fourth Gospel, but that does not prevent him from dogmatising with the utmost confidence as to all the questions of the Old Testament and the New. Would not a little modest diffidence be becoming under the circumstances?

The writer to whom we refer seems to have a rooted objection to miracles. He also throws everything overboard which does not commend itself to his moral sense; yet concerning the finding the book of the law in the days of Josiah he can write in this fashion:—

It seems impossible to conceive that so precious and sacred a document, the property of the nation, could have been lost. Yet the very tradition of its existence was dead. In sober fact, the book was written, then, in the interests of ethical religion. In their eagerness to enforce a truth the writers were led to conceal a fact.

Why does the acute moral sense of this writer not say in plain words: "In their eagerness to enforce a truth the writers told a lie"? If they did, we are face to face with some moral phenomena quite as remarkable as any miracles.

A correspondent residing in Italy is grieved to see how many Christian workers are driven by physical breakdown to occupy weeks, and even months, in enforced rest under the Southern sky.

There are hundreds of Christian workers laid aside from active service, and spheres of usefulness, simply through neglect of the common rules of health, and the over-strain caused by the multitudinous and imperative claims on all sides, leaving, alas! insufficient leisure to preserve in vigour and freshness healthy minds in healthy bodies. This is a deplorable and ever-growing evil. If nature's laws are obeyed, and sufficient rest and sleep taken to recruit strength, for future work, there would be fewer complaints of overstrung nerves and worn-out bodies.

But not only does the body suffer, the spirit becomes cast down, and full of gloom. Too often the joy of the Lord is dimmed, and faith loses its strength. Self and feeling are exalted to undue prominence, and worry takes the place of work. As has been well said, "It is better to last out than even to wear out."

Why should'st thou be fretting, straining,
As if all hung upon thy might?
A Father's hand above is reigning,
Through Him, not thee, all will be right.
In God's own peace and patience hide thee,
In quietness go on thy way;
And know thy Father will provide thee
With strength sufficient for the day.

A contemporary has the following:—

The Congregationalists of Brighton, who are about to erect a new church, have refused to accept a site close to Florence-road Baptist Church, on account of its proximity to that place of worship, and in order that they should not interfere with that church's work.

All honour to the Congregationalists for their fine sense of propriety and Christian courtesy. The absence of these in some cases makes this instance the more pleasing.

World-wide Evangelisation.

If in these days a group of heathen or Mohammedan sailors came to London—and I suppose there has not been a year for years past that groups of these have not been brought on our ships to London—and supposing on the voyage they had been presented with a New Testament, and had discovered therein that the early Christians were every one commanded to spread the Gospel, and that they ALL actually did spread the Gospel, would these Mohammedans or heathen not be forced to come to the conclusion that the majority of professing London Christians and English Christians were of some religion altogether different from the religion described in the New Testament?

I was born in Liverpool, and I do not say that London is worse than Liverpool, but does not the state of every one of our large towns, and, indeed, of our whole country, cry aloud for a return to the Saviour's solemn injunction and the practice of the Early Church.

Once more I venture to beg and entreat very earnest attention to the additional extracts from the address delivered by the Bishop of Liverpool in 1890:—

We want a revival among our communicants quite as much as among our non-worshipping classes. We have been too long blind and asleep on this matter. Let me explain what I mean.

I assert, then, without hesitation, that at present the laity of our Church are not where they ought to be in the direct work of Christ and the furtherance of Christianity in the land. There is a sad gulf between the Church of the first century and that of the English Church in the nineteenth century. A mischievous habit of leaving all religion to the parson of the parish has overspread the country, and the bulk of lay Churchmen seem to think that they have nothing to do with the Church but to receive the benefit of her means of grace, while they contribute nothing in the way of personal active exertion to promote her efficiency.

The vast majority of Church-goers appear to suppose that when they have gone to church on Sunday, and have received the Lord's Supper, they have done their duty, and are not under the slightest obligation to warn, to teach, to rebuke, to edify others, to promote works of charity, to assist evangelisation, or to raise a finger in checking sin and advancing Christ's cause in the world. Their only idea is to be perpetually receiving, but never doing anything at all. They have taken their seats in the right train, and are only to sit quiet while the clerical engine draws them to heaven, perhaps half asleep.

SIR BENJAMIN W. RICHARDSON, M.D., writing in the Medical Pioneer, says: "There were (in England) perhaps fifty staunch abstaining men in medicine in 1869. There are 500 now who openly declare themselves; and there are a great many more than 500 thorough abstainers who do not declare themselves—that is to say, who practise, though they do not preach, medical abstinence."

THE UNVEILING.—15.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—THE FIRST WOE.

III.

These visions of God with which the canon of Scripture is concluded unveiled to the eyes of John in the Spirit, Heaven and Earth and Hell; Him that sitteth on the throne, the Lamb in the midst of the throne, and the Seven Spirits before the throne; Balaam, Balak, and Jezebel; the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet—representing all the elements which make human history. But all outward effects are produced from inward causes. There would be no wars and fightings upon earth were it not for the lusts which war in the members of mankind. Not only Peter and James and John testify against them, but a large proportion of the Epistles of Paul and Jude are occupied with the same subject. And John's vision of the locusts proceeding from the abyss is but a graphic symbolic expansion of the utterance of Jesus: "Out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, railings: these are the things which defile the man" (Matt. xv. 19, 20, R.V.). Would it not have been passing strange if, among the dramatis personæ of these dramatic parabolic visions, no place had been found for the works of the flesh which lusteth against the Spirit? "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revellings, and such like; of the which I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they which practise such things shall not inherit the Kingdom of God" (Gal. v. 16-26). See also at the close of Romans i. the appalling list of locust-lusts which, in the human life which surrounds us, and with which we are so painfully familiar, are continually turning gardens of Eden into desolate wildernesses.

The essence of sin lies in the rebellious desire to be as God. This caused the fall of Lucifer,* and into this he seduced our first parents. Immediately, and whenever, we yield to Satan's temptation, and seek to set up self-will above the will of God, the sun and the air are darkened as with the smoke of a great furnace, shutting out the light of the Sun of Righteousness. Then out of this smoke come forth unclean appetites, unholy passions, selfish desires, which take concrete form, such as the Prophets of old, and the Lord Jesus and his Apostles, have named in the passages quoted above.

Under the first trumpet all the green grass was burnt up; and under that and those which followed a third part of all man's outward environment was affected. In those afflictions the servants of God suffered in common with other men—as the Apostle says, "There hath no temptation, no trial, overtaken you, but such as is common to man." But these locust-lusts are not permitted to hurt the grass of the earth, nor any green thing, nor any tree, but only those men who have not the seal of God on their foreheads. Compare the two sorts of men in the first Psalm.

* Compare the Greek myth of Phaethon (the shining one), who persuaded his father Helios, the sun-god, to allow him to drive the horses of the sun across heaven. But as soon as the horses felt the creature hand behind them they began to plunge, the chariot swerved from the track, and swiftly fell so near the earth as to scorch large tracts of it into the well-known deserts—gardens of Eden into desolate wildernesses.

Just as we maintain the place of his sealed servants are we free from the power of those scorpions of the earth, for against those who live and walk in the Spirit these locust-lusts have no power. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts."

Observe the honesty and faithfulness and kindness manifested in the vision. The whole impression given is a repulsive one. It begins by showing forth the terrible and tormenting power and activity of these idealised and personified lusts. They are like scorpions of the earth, for they act against the inhabiters of the earth, the dwellers on the earth, the men of the earth (Ps. x. 18), those whose god is their sensual nature, who mind earthly things (Phil. iii. 19). Many times in this book is this term relating them to the earth used to describe the men of the world (Ps. xvii. 14), in contrast with the sealed servants of God who dwell in heaven (1 Cor. xv. 48; Col. iii. 1; Rev. xii. 12; xiii. 6).

Like the sting of a scorpion, agonising to the flesh, is the torment of these venomous lusts. The mind of the Seer is not now directed to the early days of indulgence, when the man is pleased in obeying his appetite: when it communes with him like a fellow-man; plausibly persuades him of the reasonableness of the self-gratification; fascinates him with it; while the lions' teeth are hidden under the mask of the friendly face, and the blandishment of the woman's hair. The vision presents at the outset the anguished consequences when iniquity is come to the full.

The following powerful lines of Lord Byron connect the scorpion with the mind riven by remorse. The description differs from John's vision in that the scorpion is the sufferer, and stings itself to death; while in the vision the scorpion inflicts the suffering, and death flees from the sufferer. But the agony of remorse is portrayed with a dreadful faithfulness:—

The mind that broods o'er guilty woes
Is like the scorpion girt by fire;
In circle narrowing as it glows
The flames around their captive close
Till, inly searched by thousand throes,
And maddening in her ire,
One sad and sole relief she knows,
The sting she nourished for her foes,
Whose venom never yet was vain,
Gives but one pang and cures all pain,
And darts into her desperate brain.
So do the dark in soul expire,
Or live like scorpion girt by fire.
So writhes the mind remorse has riven,
Unfit for earth, undoomed for heaven,
Darkness above, despair beneath,
Around it flame, within it death.

"Their power is to hurt men five months." Five senses—and a month, a process, for each. It is through the senses the lusts of the heart are gratified, and every lust carries its tormenting scorpion sting in its own tail. The judgments of God on our surroundings are light compared with the conscience-tormenting sting which is carried in the tail of every permitted sin; and all the calamities which may fall upon our outward possessions or surroundings or enjoyments, are as nothing compared with the inward torture which follows a satiated lust.

If we adopt the view that five is the number of grace (and Dr. Bullinger's arguments and illustrations are strong in support of it), we may learn that in his grace God has put a limit upon the torment even of these scorpion-stings; for they relate to this present life, and while there is life there is hope. The conscience-stricken soul has not yet passed through the gate over which is written:—

Through me you pass into the city of woe.
All hope abandon, ye who enter here.

And yet they are on the borders of despair, for "in those days men shall seek death, and shall in no wise find it; and they shall desire to die and death fleeth from them." In those days of consummated iniquity, when men call upon the rocks to fall upon them and the hills to cover them from the wrath of God and of the Lamb. The words seem to point onward to the end, like the Old Testament prophetic formula, "In that day." For God, seeing the end from the beginning, regards not only the individual but the race. And in those days—of the last generation of men of this age—when iniquity is (as with the Amorites, Gen. xv. 16) come to the full—they will cry in vain to the rocks and mountains to fulfil their desire to die, out of a life which is not only not worth living, but is made intolerable by the stinging, tormenting consequences of an earthly, sensuous, demonish career.

But every individual is an epitome of the race. How many there are who carry the gnawing worm, the scorpion sting, the unquenchable fire, within. Oh, if they could only die to this. But death flees from them. They could end their earthly, fleshly life "with a bare bodkin." But the terror-stricken and tormented conscience tells them there is worse beyond.

Oh, preachers of the Gospel of God, here is your opportunity. Be wise to win souls. These tormented fellow-creatures are not yet past hope. Tell them not only that they may have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace, but that they can die and live again. Oh "radiant idea of death." That a scorpion-lust-tormented sinner may, while yet in the body, die out of his agony, and rise again a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Through death he may escape from death,
And life eternal gain.

"For the death that HE died He died unto sin once for all; but the life that He liveth He liveth unto God. In like manner reckon ye also yourselves to be dead unto sin but alive unto God IN CHRIST JESUS."

Go thou and learn that lesson of the Cross,
And tread the path the saints have ever trod,
Who, proving earth and self and all things loss,
Have found in inward death the life of God.

THE FLESH AND THE SPIRIT.

The flesh asks but to sleep,
For that seems best!
To creep into some sheltered place,
To slumber for a little space;
Night, 'neath the olives, grows apace,
The flesh craves rest!

The spirit wills to watch,
To watch and wake!
The Master enters now on woe
His love for us may not forego,
Oh, never was He brought so low,
All for our sake!

"Could ye not watch one hour?"
Rise, watch and pray!
Exceeding sorrowful to death,
He prays the three-fold prayer of faith.
"He is at hand," the Master saith,
"Who doth betray!"

Not flesh, but spirit is Willing to wake!
O, if one hour we watch might keep!
One hour fight off the fatal sleep,
Nor fail Him in his conflict deep,
Waged for our sake!

TAKEN FROM THE SHEEP-COTES.

(1 Sam. xvi. 1.)

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The story of David opens with a dramatic contrast between the fresh hope of his young life and the rejection of the self-willed king Saul, whose course was rapidly descending towards the fatal field of Gilboa.

Few have had a fairer chance than Saul. Choice in gifts, goodly in appearance, favoured by nature and opportunity, he might have made one of the greatest names in history. His first exploit, the relief of Jabesh-gilead, justified the wildest anticipations of his friends. But the fair dawn was soon overcast. The hot impatience that persisted in offering the sacrifice before Samuel came; his needless oath and ruthless proposal to take Jonathan's life; his flagrant disobedience to the distinct charge respecting Amalek—all proved that he was not fit to act as God's vicegerent, and that he must be set aside.

The final announcement of his deposition was made at Gilgal. At that spot, on entering Canaan, Israel, at Joshua's bidding, had rolled away the reproach of uncircumcision. The place suggested the only condition on which God can use human instruments; but in Saul's case there had been no humbling of pride, no submission of self-will, no putting away of the wild energy of the flesh. He was called whilst seeking his father's straying asses, as David was whilst watching his father's sheep; and there was a good deal of the wild-ass nature about Saul, as about Ishmael, which neither of them sought to subdue. Saul, it is said, rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord rejected him from being king.

From Gilgal Saul went up to his house at Gibeah, in the heights of Benjamin, while Samuel went to Ramah, a little to the south; there was his house, there he had judged Israel for twenty years, and there he dwelt as father and priest among the people, known far and near as the man of God (vii. 17; ix. 6, 10, 12). There, too, he mourned for Saul.

No bad man drifts down the rapids unwarned, unwept; but till such pitying tears are dried. Nor must we cling to the grave of the dead past, whence the Spirit of God has fled; but arise to follow, as He transfers the focus of his operation from the rocky heights of Benjamin to the breezy uplands of Bethlehem, and conducts us to the house of Jesse. "And the Lord said unto Samuel, How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing that I have rejected him from being king over Israel? Fill thy horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to Jesse the Bethlehemite, for I have provided Me a king among his sons."

In the selection of every man for high office in the service of God and man, there are two sides, the Divine and the human: the election of God, and its elaboration in history; the heavenly summons, and the earthly answer to its ringing notes. We must consider, therefore, I. The Root of David in God; II. The Stem of Jesse—that is, the local circumstances that might account for what the boy was; and III. The White Bud of a Noble Life.

I. The Root of David.—Once in the prophecy by Isaiah, and twice in the Book of Revelation, our Lord is called the "Root of David." "The Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the Book and to loose the seven seals thereof." And still more emphatically, among the last words spoken by the Saviour, before the curtain of the Ages fell, "I, Jesus, am the Root and the Offspring of David, the Bright, the Morning Star."

The idea suggested is of an old root, deep hidden in the earth, which sends up its green scions and sturdy stems. David's character may be considered as an emanation from the life of the Son of God before He took on Himself the nature of man, and an anticipation of what He was to be and do in the fulness of time. Jesus was the Son of David, yet in another sense He was his Progenitor. Thus we return to the ancient enigma, that Jesus of Nazareth is at once David's Lord and Son (Mark xii. 35-37).

There are four great words about the choice of David, the last of which strikes deeply into the heart of that great mystery.

The Lord hath sought Him a man (1 Sam. xiii. 14).—No one can know the day or hour when God passes by seeking for chosen vessels and goodly pearls. When least expecting it, we are being scrutinised, watched, tested, in daily commonplaces, to see if we shall be faithful in more momentous issues. Let us be always on the alert, our loins girt, our lamps burning, our nets mended and cleansed.

I have found David my servant (Psa. lxxxix. 20.)—There is ecstasy in the voice, like the thrice repeated found of Luke xv. David was found long before Samuel sent for him. Which was the moment of that blessed discovery? Was it one dawn, when in the first flicker of daylight the young shepherd led his flock from fold to pasture; or one morning when, in an outburst of heroic faith, he rescued a trembling lamb from lion or bear; or one afternoon, when, as he sat and watched his charge, the first conception of the Shepherd Psalm stirred in his heart; or one night when he heard the silent speech of the heavens declaring the glory of God? And was there not some secret glad response to the Master's call, like that which the disciples gave, when Jesus found them at their nets, and said, "Follow Me"?

He chose David to be his servant (Psa. lxxviii. 70).—The people chose Saul; God chose David. This made him strong. He was conscious that the purpose of God lay behind and beneath him; and when in after years Saul lay in its power, or Michal taunted him with his extravagant gestures, the thought that he was divinely commissioned was his firm foundation. (2 Sam. vii. 21). We are immovable when we touch and hear Him say, "He is a chosen vessel unto Me to bear my name."

The Lord hath appointed him to be Prince (1 Sam. xiii. 14).—Appointments are not solely due to human patronage, or won by human industry; they are of God. He bringeth low and lifteth up. Saul might chafe and fret; but from amid the ruins of his waning power the authority of David emerged as a sun from a wrack of clouds, because God willed it. Fit yourself for God's service; be faithful; He will presently appoint thee; promotion comes neither from the east nor west, but from above.

I have provided Me a King (1 Sam. xvi. 1).—That answers everything. The Divine provision meets every need, silences every anxiety. Let us not yield to anxious forebodings for the future of the Church or of our land. God has provided against all contingencies. In some unlikely quarter, in a shepherd's hut, or in an artisan's cottage, God has his prepared and appointed instrument. As yet the shaft is hidden in his quiver, in the shadow of his hand; but at the precise moment at which it will tell with the greatest effect, it will be produced and launched on the air.

II. The Stem of Jesse.—We turn for a moment to consider the formative influences of David's young life. The family dwelt on the ancestral property to which Boaz, that mighty man of wealth, had brought the Rose of Moab. Perhaps it was somewhat decayed, through the exactions of the Philistine garrison, which seems to have been posted in the little town. We read of the few sheep in the wilderness that composed the flock, and the present sent by Jesse to his soldier sons was meagre in the extreme. The conditions under which he brought up his large family of eight sons and two daughters were probably hard enough to severely tax the endurance and industry of them all.

External nature was his nurse, his companion, his teacher. Bethlehem is six miles to the south of Jerusalem, by the main road leading to Hebron. Its site is two thousand feet above the level of the Mediterranean, on the north-east slope of a long grey ridge, with a deep valley on either side; these unite at some little distance to the east and run down toward the Dead Sea. On the gentle slopes of the hills the fig, olive, and vine grow luxuriantly; and in the valleys are the rich cornfields, where Ruth once gleaned, and which gave the place its name, the House of Bread. The moorlands around Bethlehem, forming the greater part of the Judæan plateau, do not, however, present features of soft beauty; but are wild, gaunt, strong—character-breeding. There shepherds have always led and watched their flocks. In the Psalms David repeatedly refers to this scenery—to the green pastures and still waters of the glens; the stony pathways; the deep gorges, where the rocks meet overhead; hills and mountain scenes, clouds and storms, sunrise over the hills of Moab, like the emergence of the bridegroom from his closet; the splendour of the burning constellations of an Eastern night.

Such were the schools and schoolmasters of his youth. But pre-eminently his spirit lay open to the Spirit of God, which brooded over his young life, teaching, quickening, and ennobling him, opening to him the books of nature and revelation, and pervading his heart with such ingenuous trust as the dumb animals of his charge reposed in him. In the spiritual as in the physical realm he had every reason to say long after, "My substance was not hid from Thee when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Day by day were all my members fashioned."

III. The White Bud of a Noble Life.—He had not the splendid physique of his brother Eliab, who so impressed the aged prophet. But he was strong and athletic. His feet were nimble as a gazelle's; he could leap a wall or outstrip a troop; a bow of steel could be easily broken by his young arms; and a stone sent from his sling would hit the mark with unerring precision. Too slight to wear a man's armour, and yet able to rend a lion or bear; his face glowing with health; the blue of his eyes and beauty of his fair complexion in strong contrast to the darker visages of his companions; the sensitiveness of the poet's soul combined with daring, resource, and power to command; his dress, a coarse and simple tunic; his accoutrements, the wallet and sling, the rod and staff.

His soul is reflected in the Psalms that must be attributed to this period of his life, because so free from the pressure of sorrow and anxiety, and the strife of tongues. Amongst them are the eighth, nineteenth, twenty-third, and twenty-ninth. So full of wonder that Jehovah should care for man, and yet so sure that He was his shepherd; so deeply stirred by the aspect of the heavens, and yet convinced that the words of God were equally Divine; so afraid of secret faults and presumptuous sins; so anxious to join in the universal chorus of praise, ascending from the orchestra of nature, but yet so certain that there were yearnings and faculties within his soul, in which it could not participate, and which made him its high-priest and chorister. To these we will come again—they are too radiant with a light that never shone on sea or shore, for us to pass them so lightly by.

Ah! guileless, blessed boy! thou little knowest that thou shalt die amid the blare of trumpets announcing the accession to the throne of thy son, the splendid Solomon; still less thou dreamest that thy unsullied nature shall one day be befouled by so sad a stain: yet thy God loves thee, and thou shalt teach us many a lesson as we turn again the pages of thy wonderful career—poet, minstrel, soldier, exile, king—and read them in the light that streams from the face of thy greatest Son, who was born of the seed of David according to the flesh, but was declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead.

REDHILL CONVENTION.

Commencing in 1890, with a small beginning, the Redhill Convention has yearly continued growing in interest. Apparently the work of the Holy Ghost is deepening in the hearts of many who have attended the Convention from time to time. It is pleasant to notice some of the changes which have occurred in the six years under review. The most striking is that, at the recent gathering, a larger number of the audience had Bibles with them, and used them. The constant flutter of the leaves in all parts of the hall clearly indicated that those present were following the different speakers as they turned from text to text. Another feature of this Convention this year was the greater number of strangers who were present.

The first meeting was held, as usual, in one of the school-rooms of St. Matthew's Church, which was placed for the night at the disposal of the conveners by the vicar and churchwardens. Punctually at the hour, the large audience rose and sang Dr. Andrew Reed's beautiful invocatory hymn—

Spirit Divine! attend our prayers,
And make our hearts thy home.

This was followed by prayer by Rev. Henry Brass, the vicar of the parish, and the reading of a passage from Isaiah lxi. by Mr. Robert Wilson, who presided almost throughout the entire Convention.

The appointed speakers for the first evening were Dr. White, of Winchester, and Rev. Evan Hopkins. The former took the narrative of the walk of the two disciples to Emmaus as an example of sad Christians. He pointed out, in an earnest address, the remedy for sadness, by opening the heart and letting the Master in and giving Him full possession. Mr. Hopkins followed with an address on "Life More Abundant" (John x. 10), which he traced from its origin, "In Him was life" (John i. 4), through the consecutive steps of "Life in possession" (John iii. 13, 14, 15, 16), "Life in its indwelling" (John iv. 4). He indicated at this step its indwelling, abiding, outflowing, overflowing power. The next step, "Life in its renewal" (John v. 6), beautifully illustrated by the descriptions of the spiritually blind, halt, and withered, all needing to be set right; then "Life in its maintenance" (John vi. 35, 48, 51), "Life in its practical outflow" (John vii. 38), "Life in its illumination" (John viii. 12), culminating in the text of the address, "Life more abundant."

At the early prayer meetings of the next four days, which were arranged to suit the hours of business men and women, short addresses were delivered by Rev. D. H. Lampen, Dr. White, Revs. J. J. Luce and G. H. C. Macgregor. The hours for the daily meetings were :—Prayer meeting, 8 to 8.45 a.m.; general meeting, 11 to 12.30 and 7 to 9.15; Bible-readings in the afternoon from 3 to 4.15. Throughout the Convention the number of people who attended was considerably in excess of former Conventions.

Tuesday forenoon brought together a good audience. The two addresses of the morning were delivered by Rev. Henry Brass on "Isaiah's Vision" (Isaiah vi. 1-8) and Rev. Evan Hopkins on "Consecration," as shown in Deut. xxvi. 16-18. The latter spoke with reference to the their condition, their deliverance, their avouchment by the Lord God, and the consequences; and ended by a powerful practical application to the audience.

The afternoon was occupied by Dr. White, who gave a most instructive Bible reading on "Obedience." In the evening of the same day a new speaker in Redhill, in the person of Rev. Robert Middleton, of Norwich, gave the first address, a running commentary on the story of Eleazar of Damascus, the steward of Abraham's household, showing his steadfast practical faith in his master and in his master's God. Here we have an example to the servants of the Lord in the present day of what their unswerving faith in the Lord their God should be. Mr. Hopkins followed with an impressive and practical address.

Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, who spoke first on Wednesday forenoon, confessed in his prayer the sad lack of a consuming love for God in heart and life. "Yield yourselves unto God as those who are alive from the dead" (Rom. vi. 14) was the text of his address. We may yield to God (he said) a religious self, an æsthetic self, a reputable self, but if it is not a resurrection self, failure and disappointment must follow. The Apostle's great argument respecting the believer's crucifixion with Christ to the world and all that pertains to the evil in it, also the believer's new life in Christ and his coming glorification with Christ, were briefly sketched. God has dealt with sin; we have to deal with the old self. God's salvation is not only a deliverance from hell and a title to heaven; that is a very insignificant part of it. It means a getting back to the very heart of God, a return to closest fellowship with Himself—the grandest portion that can be given to any human soul. This being the position given to us by God in Christ, what is to be the practical outcome in our experience? Here is

THE CRUX OF THE QUESTION.

Why (said Mr. Luce) should we be cheated out of our glorious inheritance by neglecting the Apostle's injunction to reckon ourselves dead to sin and its outward manifestation? The sin, it is true, is not dead, nor is the possibility of our response to temptation. But it is our privilege to live in union with the great Deliverer from sin in all its forms. A man said at a recent convention, "If Christ is our life, how is it that our lives are so poor?" It is strange that Christians have, as it were, to be dragged into enjoying the privilege of this overcoming life. Do we want to know actually what this deliverance is? Are we willing to be experimentally crucified in spirit? If not, we shall never get any further. Mr. Luce observed that he had been asked if he found any great results from all these conventions; he was nearly heartbroken when he thought of Keswick and all these conventions, and the comparative poverty of result. When we think of self-denial as a heroic, sublime, sentimental, beautiful thing, we are willing to have it; but is it so when it means a crushing and painful thing? Pastor Stockmayer once said at Keswick, in answer to a question about self-denial, that Peter once denied his Lord by saying, "I know not the man." So we are to say to our old and sinful self, "I know not the man." This can only be done by constantly associating it with the cross and our crucifixion there.

In the same line of searching remark was the address by Rev. W. Houghton, of Guildford, from 1 Thess. iv. 3, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." What is more evident than the imperfection of our sanctification? We say God is very patient and tender with his children. Yes, blessed be his name, but how can a holy God be satisfied with anything less than our conformity to his will and character? If this is his will, surely there must be power stored up somewhere for the carrying out of that will. The speaker read from an old letter in which the writer said she thought it was harder for her to be good than anybody else. She prayed, and tried, and tried, and tried to overcome her temper, but the result was always the same—failure. Victory is not in the line of personal attainment. What we have to do is to be in the right attitude towards God, and so that we shall stand still to see the salvation of God. It is of the highest importance, both for the glory and satisfaction of God and the salvation of other men, that believers should be holy, and live on the very highest possible plane. The two root ideas of sanctification—separation and consecration—were simply and earnestly pressed home by Mr. Houghton in the remainder of his address. The great secrets of this holy life are a daily and momentary abiding in Christ, a looking to Him in the time of temptation, a reflection of his beauty and glory, and an ascription of all headship and lordship to Him.

Mr. Middleton gave the Bible Reading on Wednesday afternoon, the subject being "Sons of God"; at the same hour next day he gave another reading on the Second Coming of the Lord.

In the evening of Wednesday the addresses were by Mr. Houghton and Dr. White.

On Thursday morning Dr. White spoke on "Mirrors" (James i. 21-24). It was a remarkably interesting utterance on Christians reflecting the Master in their lives. He pointed out the three conditions for reflecting the image :—(1) The glass must have a smooth surface; (2) the object must be in proximity to the mirror; (3) the mirror must be thoroughly clean. He applied these points to the Christian and his Master.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor spoke on the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which Christ received when He was baptized of John in Jordan (Mark i. 10, 11). With the Lord Jesus the natural and spiritual birth were co-incident, but yet it was not until thirty years had elapsed that He received the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Every Christian must be born of the Spirit, but more than this, he may have such a baptism of the Holy Ghost that all his life and work may be fruitful for God.

In the evening of Thursday, Mr. Macgregor spoke on John vii. 39, "The Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." The experience of the Church is paralleled by that of the believer. The Lord Jesus must be glorified: (1) In the mind (with regard to our reading, study, etc.); (2) in the conscience (so that it may recognise no commands save his); (3) in the will (the centre of the being); (4) in the body (hands, feet, all, to be consecrated to Him. If Satan wants a particularly bitter or sharp thing written or spoken, he often uses Christian hands or lips to accomplish his end). Until Jesus is thus glorified, the Holy Ghost cannot come in his power.

Friday, the last day of these Conventions, is always a day of

THANKSGIVING AND TESTIMONY.

The early prayer-meeting was a little longer than usual, and instead of a forenoon meeting there was a special service in St. Matthew's Church, where Rev. J. J. Luce delivered an earnest address. In the afternoon hymns of rejoicing and choruses were mingled with the brief testimonies. Of those who took part in these testimonies in former years, some have gone to their rest, others have gone to China, Japan, India, Africa, South America; others are in the home fields of labour. Some very touching tributes to the blessings received at these Conventions were presented by the conveners; one card had on it, "From henceforth, Lord, and for ever, I am thine." Another said, "I did not know what obedience was till I was shown it at this Convention." Another touching one was, "This is my first Convention; I knew practically nothing before of the blessed life, and death to sin seemed an impossibility to me." Another, passing through deep waters, thanked God for clearer views about sanctification. Earnest prayer was offered that those who had been led to trust the Lord completely might be kept true to Him. At the close of the meeting, Rev. R. Champion gave an earnest, searching address.

The engagements of the Convention were brought to an end by the usual

MISSIONARY GATHERING.

A list of missionaries from the district who are in the field, or who are going out this year, or are in actual training, has been prepared. Deducting those who are temporarily in the mission field, the district, embracing a population of under 25,000 souls, has now twenty-five workers in the field or preparing to enter it. If this proportion could be applied to Great Britain, instead of 8000 we should have 35,000 Gospel messengers in the field or getting ready to enter it.

Prayer was offered by Colonel Jacob, who is giving a son and a daughter to the missionary army, and subsequently by Mr. Gedge, who has a sister at Frere Town and a daughter just accepted for service by the C.M.S.

The first speaker was Rev. W. A. Cornaby from China. He gave an interesting account of his work there, and also of the persecutions which some of the missionaries have experienced, but there was a very encouraging tone in his address. He was followed by Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael from Japan, who touched on the great possibilities of that country, and the love many of the women there have showed her. She made an earnest appeal for labourers, men and women whose hearts are on fire for the salvation of the heathen in Japan, and in Ceylon, where she has also laboured.

The last speaker was Mr. Eugene Stock, who took as his text "Did," a little word of three letters in Mark viii. 8. He gave his hearers a short commentary on the eight verses, laying the stress on the seven loaves—all there was the disciples gave to Christ, and He accepted their all; but the Lord gave them seven baskets full for their seven loaves. Mr. Stock applied the subject, urging present-day disciples to give their all to the service of the Lord Jesus,—time, talents, money, their own selves. The Lord would abundantly reward them in return. He gave several instances of consecration that had come under his notice, and concluded a very powerful address by a personal appeal. A hymn followed, and prayer, with the benediction, brought the sixth Redhill Convention to a close. Eternity will show what the full practical outcome has been.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 21.—GAL. VI.

Restoring a Soul (1-5).—A Christian man may be overtaken by some sudden attack of Satan. He will not fall utterly away, but there will be a serious trespass. Whenever this is the case, those who love Christ should seek his restoration to living union with Christ. But only the most spiritual and the meekest can do work like this. The memory of our own trespasses and failings is the condition in which the Holy Ghost can best secure the meekness and gentleness of Christ. The burdens that we are called to share are not simply those of anxiety and trial, but of spiritual failure. This is the law of Christ's life as well as of his lips. No man ever is overtaken by trespass but that Christ bears the burden with him. (4) We none of us know what we really are until we are tested. We may give ourselves credit for all our friends ascribe to us, hence God permits trial to test, and the critic to search. (5) There are some burdens, as that of existence, responsibility, destiny, which each must bear alone.

Seed-time and Harvest (6-10).—The flesh is the self-life. We sow to it when we yield to aught which is not perfectly lovely and beautiful, as well as in the grosser forms of intemperance, etc. The Spirit is love. We sow to Him in each act and word of unselfish thoughtfulness. In this we must continue, using every opportunity of doing good to all. This life of perfect unswerving self-sacrificing love, is the seed of life. Those only know eternal life who have learnt to love.

The Cross (11-18).—Let us ever guard against a life of external form. Circumcision stands for religious observances from which the spirit of love has died out. It fails to realise the law, either of Sinai or Calvary. Its spirit is bitter animosity to pure and undefiled religion, the adherents of which it persecutes. But how utterly indifferent to the soul which has stood beneath the cross is the husk of the outward. With outstretched arms that cross stands between the world and the believer who through death has entered into life. (16) All who have learnt the inner meaning of the cross are one. (17) We are slaves. Let us not be ashamed of the Christ-brand.

MONDAY, APRIL 22.—EPH. I.

In the Beloved (1-14).—The saints and faithful are "in Christ Jesus." To be in Christ is to be in the heavenlies, and to be in the heavenlies is to be in touch with every spiritual blessing. It was in Christ as our Head that we were chosen. It is only as we live in Christ that we can be kept holy and without blemish. In Christ the Beloved we stand accepted before God, and have redemption and forgiveness, the riches of grace, and the promise of glory. The one condition of the best life is the maintenance of this constant oneness, which will be maintained in us and for us by the grace of the Holy Ghost. In Christ all things were before they took shape, and in Him all things were summed up. In Him we have become a heritage. In Him we have been sealed. Our best moments, when the power of the Spirit throbs most strongly within, are an earnest of the fuller life that is to be.

The Prayer of the Ascension (15-23).—Do we enough praise for our friends or pray for them? Three things He asked: that they might know (1) what they were called to, (2) what they might be to God, (3) what God would do for them by the greatness of his power. In so far as we yield ourselves to the strength of God's might, He will raise us from the grave of selfishness, and cause us to sit with Christ in the heavenlies. In Christ we are allied to a kingdom which is victorious over all the powers of evil, and in proportion as we live in fellowship with Him we shall find all things put in subjection under our feet. (22) If we are members of Christ, He feels each stab of pain, and energises through each pulse of the will and heart.

TUESDAY, APRIL 23.—EPH. II.

The "Togethers" (1-10).—Dead men may walk. The death of the spirit is compatible with active interest in the course of this world. But the world and Satan are identical. As the Spirit of God works in the obedient, the spirit of the devil works in the disobedient. Note this trinity of evil—the world, the devil, and the flesh, and that it is equally wrong to be impelled by the one as by the other. Obedience to either constitutes us children of wrath. (5) The tense here refers to a definite past act, and the Apostle is speaking of our standing in Christ. We were one with Him when He died, lay in the grave, and rose. In the purpose of God we have already entered into the eternal life and are seated in the heavenlies. And this, not because of anything meritorious in ourselves, but by the operation of the wonderful grace which has made us what we are. (10) "God's poem," the Greek says. His creation and purpose should be worked out in our daily living, and will be if step by step we walk in the prepared path.

Made Nigh (11-22).—The state of the unconverted may be described, as here, by a series of negations. Ah, the ineffable loss of those that are far off from Jesus, and therefore out of the golden circumference of light and peace! Christ's blood is the great unifier of man with God, of man with man. He broke down the partition between Jew and Gentile, raised by the legal system of the former, which was abolished in his death. The twain, i.e., the two great classes of Jew and Gentile, ceremonialist and naturalist, thus flow together; touching Christ, they are one. (18) Notice the Trinity. In prayer we come through the Second Person to the First, by the help of the Third. (20) What a noble conception of the Church, comprehending all who believe, growing slowly through the ages, and becoming the sanctuary of God—his home in which He dwells by the Spirit. Oh, soul of man, live warily, that nothing in thee may vex thy holy and gentle Indweller!

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24.—EPH. III.

The Stewardship of God's Grace (1-13).—So that word "dispensation" would be better rendered. Each believer has the key of God's storehouse that he may distribute the wares of his own special department to others. This gift cannot be acquired, it is made known by revelation. (4) Gospel mysteries are not permanently hidden from the saints, but are unfolded in proportion to their own growth of grace. For ages God's purpose that the Church should be composed equally of Jew and Gentile was hidden from the sons of men; indeed it seemed as though Jews only were to be members of the Church. It was Paul's province to show the wideness of God's purpose, and as the ages pass in the constitution of the Church of the redeemed, the full thought of God will be gradually unveiled. The blessed spirits in the eternal world will never know what God is until the Church is complete and the Bride of the Lamb made ready. When this shall be, time and the world will be removed, as the scaffolding when the house is complete.

Love Understanding Love (14-21).—It is through the Spirit alone that we can understand this prayer, which climbs to the topmost rounds of the ladder which Jacob saw. Its measure is the riches of God's glory. As we are strong to do and suffer, so we shall experience the indwelling of the Spirit. As the Spirit indwells, so will Christ, for Christ indwells us by the Spirit. By the Spirit of love, we are taught to love. When we love we shall understand love. When we know and understand and feel Christ's love, we shall be filled out of the fulness of God to the measure of our capacity. All this is possible because God is able to do above all that we ask or think. To Him be the glory!

THURSDAY, APRIL 25.—EPH. IV.

The Oneness of the Church (1-16).—The unity is made, let us keep it at all costs. Let us avoid everything that would mar it. Lowly in the presence of others' excellence; meek in bearing injury and wrong; long suffering under provocation; manifesting forbearance for the failures of others. (4) The spirit of unity in the body makes all the differing members one. Do not magnify points of difference, but make much of the living Spirit and the living Lord. (7) Each has some grace, use it. The ascended Christ is the Custodian of gifts for thee and me. Have we claimed our share? (12) The unique work of his servants is for the adjusting of the saints, that the vital force from the heart of Christ may flow freely through them to the work of ministry. (13) The body will be worthy of the head, but every joint must supply its own quota to the whole, each several part must do its work. To speak the truth in love is more important than to tell the truth.

Our Daily Walk (17-32).—The way in which men usually live is due to their having lost the life of God. They have hardened their heart against it, and on account of this their understanding has become darkened. When the heart is wrong, there is nothing to hinder the soul yielding itself to the spirit of evil, or working all uncleanness with greediness. (20) Jesus, our Text-Book and our Teacher, our Schoolhouse in whom we are taught, and the Object Lesson on whom all truth is enshrined. (22) The old man is known by his bundle of habits, corrupt and deceitful. The new man is the Christ-life. We must put on Christ, by daily faith, and as the spirit of our life is ennobled and purified, the exterior will become new and righteous. (25) What a lovely conception of life; truth in our speech, anger in which there is no sin, daily labour to give, grace in speech, an ungrieved Spirit, the forgiveness and tender-heartedness of Christ. If only believers were to live thus, the world would know that the Son of God had come.

FRIDAY, APRIL 26.—EPH. V.

Imitators of God (1-21).—Our model is God in Christ. Children should resemble their Father. We can only resemble God in love. Every loving act exhales a sweet fragrance to God. Refrain your speech, and you will order your heart aright. (5) Mark that covetousness in the sight of God is as evil as uncleanness. Disobedience brings back on the soul that wrath of God which we escape by faith. (8) In the second verse we were told to walk in love; here to walk in light. They are one. Those in whom God's light is shining cannot be popular, as they are perpetually convicting others of wrong-doing. You can tell whether a soul has light within it, by its willingness to expose itself to the light of the Word of God. (14) The voice of Christ summons us from the grave of self-indulgence, and the light of Christ waits to illumine us with transfiguring glory. (15) Again, walk. Only those understand God's will who walk in his way. (18) The exhilaration which men of the world get in wine is an emblem of that which the saints enjoy in their spirits when filled with the Holy Ghost. That life naturally utters itself in song. Dare to thank God for all things. You will come to see his love in them all.

Christ's Love to His Church (22-33).—It is his Bride for which He gave Himself, his Body which He nourishes and cherishes. Our earthly relationships are similitudes and emblems of sacred realities, and the more we import of the eternal into the time-sphere the more blessedness we shall have. The utter renunciation of love is the alone secret of perfect blessedness. Men of the world think of how much love they can get. The children of eternity of how much they can give. O wounded member of Christ, let Him nourish and cherish thee.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27.—EPH. VI.

Christianity and Daily Life (1-9).—Where it is true, our love to Christ affects every relationship. It enters into the nursery, the kitchen, the workshop. Our obligations are reciprocal. We have to give on our side as much as we expect from others. The servant in each act, through the earthly master, should see the Divine, and in every trivial act he should have an eye to His "Well done." Not one good thing is done for which a man shall not receive again from the Lord. And the master must always remember that his authority only depends on passing on the command of his Superior. We are put to rule only in the place of Christ.

Our Wrestling (10-24).—The Apostle is dealing here with the Christian's attitude towards the evil of the world. In the ranks of the persecutor and blasphemer he sees the pawns moved over the chessboard by unseen hands. The Church's conflict is not with men or systems so much as with the spiritual wickedness of hell. Hence the all important of a church being holy, and using as far as possible the weapon of prayer. It is in the heavenly places where each soul conflicts alone with the spirit of evil, that the whole Church prevails or fails. The defensive armour mentioned here is our personal righteousness of temper and life. Be careful on each of these points, and you will be invulnerable to the fiery dart. (18). But nothing can take the place of constant and believing prayer. (24). How catholic this benediction! All that love Jesus perfectly are included. Spirit of God, make our love sincere!

BOYS IN BROOKLYN.—A correspondent sends us particulars of a good work being done among lads in the city of Brooklyn by Mrs. Barwise and a number of helpers. This lady was some twelve years ago a resident in London, and engaged actively in Christian work. She is deeply interested in the temperance movement, and it is under the auspices of the W.C.T.U. that this effort to teach and elevate boys in Brooklyn is carried on.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

APRIL 28.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—Mark xiv. 12-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Luke xxii. 19.

IT is generally believed that our Lord spent the whole of Wednesday in retirement at Bethany. The incidents of this lesson took place on Thursday afternoon and evening. According to the Jewish mode of reckoning, the 14th day of Nisan closed about six o'clock on Thursday evening, and the 15th, the day of our Lord's Passion, began.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE PASSOVER (12-16).—The Passover celebration lasted for seven days. The story of the deliverance it commemorated, and the description of the ceremony, are recorded in Ex. xii. "Unleavened bread" served a double purpose. It recalled the sufferings of the people in Egypt, hence it is called "the bread of affliction" (Deut. xvi. 3); and it typified the putting away of sin. Leaven is a type of evil. The feast was prophetic of the event which was about to be fulfilled in Jesus. With Christ our Passover as the key (1 Cor. v. 7), the details of the feast are explained.

The two disciples (13) were Peter and John (Luke xxii. 8). For the Passover Feast it was customary for a male member of the family to prepare the bread; and while drawing the water for this purpose, the man said, "This is the water of 'the unleavened bread'" (Canon Tristram). The duty of hospitality was recognised during Passover week, and rooms were allotted to strangers and pilgrims for keeping the feast. The message is therefore not so strange as appears to us. Probably, also, the man was a disciple. What was supernatural was our Lord's knowledge of the man they would meet, and of how he would respond to their request.

The upper room (15) would be reached by steps outside the house. It was furnished with table, unleavened bread, bitter herbs, wine, the Paschal lamb, and couches upon which the guests could recline.

THE BETRAYAL ANNOUNCED (18-21).—Other incidents took place, which ought not to be overlooked, especially the strife of the disciples (Luke xxii. 24) and the foot-washing (John xiii.). There is some special significance in connecting the Betrayal with the Lord's Supper. It is recalled every time the words of Paul are read (1 Cor. xi. 23). So that we can never remember our Lord's death without remembering also the base ingratitude, the hypocrisy, the perfidy of Judas.

The Lord's announcement (18) was made with deep grief (John xiii. 21). That one of the twelve should treat Him so cruelly, was a pain to Him. The discovery should have been sufficient to arrest the traitor. It was a warning to him, if he had been willing to take it. But his bargain already made with the Council, rendered it difficult to withdraw. How securely Satan binds men by their sins!

The self-distrust of the disciples (19) is much better than the vain confidence they so soon after expressed (29-31). Better the question "Is it I?" than the too confident "Yet will not I." It was an attempt to hide his own guilt that led Judas to ask the same question (Matt. xxvi. 25).

The warning word (21) denies to Judas, should he persist in his crime, all hope of future restoration.

THE LORD'S SUPPER (22-25).—Like the Paschal Feast which it supersedes, this is beautifully significant. The elements used, recall his body broken and his blood shed for us. It is the death of Christ—not merely the beautiful life—to which we owe our deliverance. Hence, the death is set forth in this ordinance as voluntary and substitutionary. By eating and drinking, is set forth the need of a personal appropriation of Christ's atoning work. As a feast does not satisfy if it is not eaten, so the provision of Christ does not meet our need unless it is appropriated by faith (John vi. 35, 51). It looks forward (25) to another feast at his Second Coming. The anticipation is before Jesus. He looks beyond the cross to the triumph; so that even in view of death He can sing (26). Probably they sang Psalms cxiii.—cxviii., with which the Passover Feast closed.

THE "A.F.D." SOCIETY IN IRELAND has for its object the assistance of clergy of the Church of Ireland. The report of last year's operations shows that happiness and comfort were conveyed to many a home by the distribution of garments and other useful domestic articles. While applying its resources to the benefit of clergymen and their families with small incomes, the Friendly Deed Society insists upon references and full particulars regarding every case in which it gives help. The Society enables unknown friends to do many unknown deeds of kindness, and it is carried on entirely by voluntary workers. Particulars may be had from Miss Foot, 14, Royal-terrace West, Kingstown.

NEW THINGS.

WE all like new things, do we not? How pleased you are with a new toy, a new book, or new clothes! I remember, when I was a little girl, someone brought two picture books, one for my brother and one for me, and as I was the elder I was allowed to choose first. One book was on the Old Testament and the other on the New. Which do you think I chose? The New Testament Picture Book, just because of that word "New," which I thought sounded so nice.

A friend of mine once went to see a little girl called Elsie, whose mother was in the infirmary, and the poor little thing was left with two brothers not much older than herself. When the lady came to the house she asked one of the brothers where Elsie was. He said he did not know; so they hunted and hunted, till at last where do you think they found her? In the dust-hole, and very dirty! The lady washed her, and made her as tidy as she could, but she had nothing to put on the child's head, so she went out and bought a pretty little red woollen cap; and Elsie was so pleased. She did not often get new things, and she clapped her tiny hands, and said: "Oh, de pitee cap, de pitee cap!" Then the lady took her to a Home, where she is now, and is very happy and comfortable.

I want to tell you about some new things I hope you are going to have soon. There is a Great Friend of yours, who is getting a lovely home ready for you. He has been a long time preparing it, and it has cost Him more than I can tell you, more perhaps than we shall ever know. I cannot tell you exactly what it will be like, but much nicer and more beautiful than anything you have ever seen or heard of, or dreamt about. Everything will be new, and everything will be a surprise; but the best thing of all will be seeing this loving Friend in his glory, and being "like Him."

This Friend says when it is all quite ready, and He is ready for you, a trumpet will sound, and then if you are ready, you will go to the new home, and be with Him, and share in his glory. He is getting the home ready for you, but are you getting ready for the home?

There are three things you must do to be ready: (1) You must be clean. Little Elsie in my story had to be clean before she went into the Home; and you must ask God to wash away your sins in the precious blood of the Lord Jesus. (2) You must have new clothes, and these you must get from God, not clothes for your body, but for your soul; these are the garments of righteousness. (3) Ask God to give you his best gift, the gift of his Holy Spirit. Then, when our Friend, the Lord Jesus, has his Home ready for you, you will be ready for Him and his trumpet-call. A. B. C.

LOVING WORDS TO CHILDREN.

CHILDREN, heed lovingly—heed and obey,
Listen while Jesus calls, "I am the Way";
Only in loving Him safety is found,
Only in serving Him joys will abound:
Children, heed lovingly—heed and obey.

Children, read carefully God's precious Word,
Deep in the soul let its precepts be heard;
Wisdom is beaming there, bright as the sun,
What we should seek for, and what we should shun:
Children, read carefully God's precious Word.

Children, speak truthfully—truth is a gem;
Falsehood and lying the Scriptures condemn;
Deem it dishonour to speak, or to do,
Aught that's dishonest, and aught that's untrue:
Children, speak truthfully—truth is a gem.

Children, act graciously, roughness eschew,
Bear yourselves peacefully all the day through;
Let not the spirit of anger arise;
Wrath is but folly—be sober and wise:
Children, act graciously, roughness eschew.

Children, seek holiness, live for the Lord,
Make Him your object, your choice, your reward;
Show that a Christian need ne'er be ashamed;
Labour for Him till the rest be obtained:
Children, seek holiness, live for the Lord.

IKWEZI LAMACI, NATAL.

MRS. AITCHISON writes in the latest report of her work in South Africa:—

Some years ago I mentioned our great wish to institute a boarding school for the girls. I have never got beyond having a few girls in the house to train in domestic duties. We have always been able to have a number of boys around us; although, to some extent, at the cost of putting on one side the project for the girls. I think we see our way in the training of these boys, and we would not let it drop for a new enterprise, but wish rather to combine the two. The time seems to have come when it is very important to get hold of the girls.

During the last few months this matter has been greatly laid upon my mind, for the young men and elder boys mingle so much with white people and civilisation; they are called out to work upon the railways, trunk roads, the harbour, and all public works, and they also go in gangs of their own free will, right away to the goldfields in the Transvaal, where they earn high wages, and learn much of civilised habits. Then they return to their homes to find all so different. They feel almost like aliens, as the girls are just where they left them. Naturally this cannot go on very long. The young men will not care to take wives from the people, and indeed the girls in their heathen state do not look with favour upon these innovations.

When we think of the consequences of these changes which are coming so rapidly upon the young men around us, we feel more and more that our work lies in trying to gather in the girls, training them, giving them the right side of civilisation, and so gradually convincing them of its advantages. This project would need a lady as the mother of the girls; also a separate house. Now, all this means expense. I believe the girls would come to us in numbers. I want your co-operation, which means both prayer and support. The former, in order that we may have wisdom; the latter for the practical part, to erect a building and furnish it suitably, and to instal a teacher-mother. All this could be commenced on a small scale, but it must be a beginning.

In the early days of our work here, a native woman, one of our first converts, came to me one day with a wee baby at her back. She said, "You know that I am the only one of the Lord's people at our kraal, and that all my friends are much opposed to me. I cannot live long (she was consumptive) and I think so much of the future of my children, especially of this little girl. I want that, when I am gone 'home,' you will watch over my child, and never lose an opportunity to train her, and tell her I am waiting in heaven for her." I gave her a promise. The mother lived on for some months. My husband was with her at almost the last moment. As time passed, the little girl was brought to live with her aunt, the witch doctor, within sight of our home, and within hearing of the bell. But all our efforts to get her seemed useless, until one day, as a last hope, I went to plead again. Then the woman consented that the girl should come to me for a year. From that time until now she has been allowed to come, sometimes for months together. Now she is a good little house-girl, useful, and can make her own clothes; is in the fourth standard in school, and can help with the others. Although we cannot tell what may be her future, I think even now she is only kept back from confessing her mother's God from home fear. But what she has already visibly attained is worth all our anxiety and efforts.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. E. A. Page, Y.M.C.A., Needless Alley, Birmingham.

SAILORS' ORPHAN HOMES.—In view of the great loss of life resulting from recent gales, the committee of the Orphan Homes connected with the Port of Hull Society's East Coast Mission has resolved to furnish as early as possible one of the Homes on the Cottingham-road, and admit as special cases twenty of the most needy and destitute children.

The Revival in 1859-60.

II.

The process of life in nature is simple. The rain falls, the sun shines, the green blade appears. So in grace: the genesis of revival is plain. The dews of the Holy Spirit descend, the sunshine of God's love breaks through, and life follows. So it was in 1859. The work began in prayer. But how did the praying begin? While we keep in view the human aspect of the movement let us not overlook the Divine side. As unbelieving theories in natural science are crowding the Divine presence out of the material world, is there not a danger lest the hurry and heat and humanism of the hour should banish into the dim distance the full recognition of the Divine sovereignty in the salvation of men? God is first in everything: especially is He first in the work of revival.

Before, and irrespective of all human wills, He wills his own will. His activity precedes and anticipates all human activity. "The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord." Who can tell or know his part in the preparations of the heart which precede and awaken the voice of prayer? Our felt need is the angel taking us by the hand. Who sent the angel? How came the sense of need? All is of God, the emptying and the filling. The commercial distress in America, the quick sympathy in Ireland, the furrowed heart in Scotland, the awakened inquiry in England—God was before it all and in it all. In the quietest and dullest period it is the duty and not least noble service of the faithful to plough and toil among the lifeless clods upon the most cheerless field in preparation for the springtide which God will send in due season. In the movement of 1859 venerable pastors were heard to testify that they had reaped in a few months a larger harvest of souls than in the whole previous thirty or forty years of their ministry. In any case it is ours to pray and work and wait, knowing that in so doing there is, apart from all results, a present harvest of glory to God and good to ourselves, for our "labour is not in vain in the Lord."

From a field so wide it is impossible in brief space to present a fair selection of illustrative facts, but a few reminiscences of the movement in Scotland may be given. A great crowd gathered on the South Inch at Perth. At first, the tone of the services seemed to be of an ordinary character. Towards the close a deep solemnity suddenly fell on the people while prayer was being offered. The hush, the feeling of awe was followed no less suddenly by a tenderness of heart which found expression in weeping. A godly pastor, long since gone to his rest, stood up, and with unwonted power spoke on the text, "The wages of sin is death." With rare point and force he showed that, although wages laboriously earned might never be paid, in this instance the wages were infallibly certain. Then anew the ancient, question began to be raised "What must we do?" Every night for many successive weeks the movement thus begun proceeded with a sweep of gracious power which carried many souls into the Kingdom of God. This was the origin of the annual conference held ever since in the Fair City, the beneficent spiritual effects of which have been felt far beyond the Scottish borders.

It was much the same at the immense gatherings in the Castle Park at Huntly, which were at once the outcome and the spring of an extraordinary work of grace throughout the North-east of Scotland. Frequently when the services were of a dull, common-place, unemotional sort, a sudden rush of feeling in prayer, or an unexpected flash in the preaching, marked the indescribable passing of a Divine breath over the assembled thousands. No voice was heard or needed to be heard from the Unseen. No vision was seen or needed to be seen of some miraculous portent in the clear heavens. Fear fell on every soul; all felt that the Lord God was passing by. And the place of his feet was glorious, for the dry bones did move and rustle and come together, "bone to his bone," and a quickened host mustered at the call of God. Probably there is scarcely a village or rural parish or secluded glen in all that wide region where even yet some of those converts are not to be found.

For three successive days our open-air meetings in the Barrack Park, Dundee, were conducted in the usual way and without any unusual result. Towards the close of the last meeting several of those most deeply concerned in the arrangements were plunged into distress at the prospect of utter failure. The heavens seemed to be brass; the Hearer of prayer vouchsafed no sign. The word was powerless, and fell on the meeting like seed on the hardened wayside. We felt our own hearts like stone. Almost in despair we retired to some distance and knelt on the grass. For the space of two hours prayer continued to be offered, prayer rising towards the close to an agony of helplessness and sorrow. Suddenly the Spirit of God fell on the entire assembly. The believers were filled with a rare joy, as with new wine. The unsaved completely and almost universally broke down. The cry for mercy rose on every side, followed in marvellous rapidity with songs of deliverance. On that green spot many entered the life of faith and peace.

The work thus begun continued for the space of two years, with alternations of apparent cessation and fresh outbursts of awakening and inquiry. In one memorable week over one thousand persons openly and joyfully announced their surrender to the Lord Jesus Christ. At one stage of the movement the interest seemed to abate, if not to cease. On this a band of praying men met in Euclid-street Chapel, and spent a night in wrestling supplication, a night to be remembered in eternity. This was followed by a fresh visitation of the Holy Ghost, and many were added to the Lord. John Macpherson.

A MESSAGE.

When the cloudlets are returning
After falling of the rain,
When thy feeble heart is burning
With a weary, anxious pain,

When suspense and shadows darken
And the pathway seems as night,
Breathe the Master's name, and hearken
Unto Him who is thy light.

"I am with thee, child, for ever—
Nearer than the storms that beat;
And my strength shall fail thee never";
Listen to his whisper sweet.

'Mid these troubles be thou learning
Changeless doth his love remain,
Though the cloudlets are returning
After falling of the rain.

THE CHINESE NEW YEAR (writes Mr. J. J. Coulthard, of the C.I.M.) is being celebrated, and it affords a glorious opportunity for reaching numbers of people who are at leisure to hear the Gospel. The chapel (at She-ki-tien) is daily crowded, and the preaching is listened to with earnest attention. May many be born again at this time, is our earnest prayer!

THE THANKSGIVING MEETINGS.

The Conveners of the Thanksgiving meetings for May 1 in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, are receiving a very hearty response to their circular of invitation. We print below a few of the replies:—

Rev. Walford Green (President of the Wesleyan Conference) writes:—"I am in full sympathy with your meetings. We do well to give thanks and be joyful in our King."

Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, hopes to be able to be present at the 11 o'clock meeting on May 1.

Rev. Newman Hall, D.D., regrets that pressure of engagements prevents his personal presence, but is one with the brethren in prayer, intercession, and giving of thanks.

Mr. John Kirk, Ragged School Union:—"I rejoice that the Praise meetings are to be resumed. May continued blessing follow. I shall do my best to attend. Shall also regard it as a privilege to make the meetings known amongst our Ragged School workers."

Rev. Peter Thompson, Wesleyan East-end Mission:—"I have meetings in Jersey on May 1, and greatly regret that I cannot personally be present at the Thanksgiving meetings. My colleagues and fellow-workers will attend, and we shall all join most earnestly in prayer that this 'day of Praise' may 'glorify God' and greatly promote the extension of his kingdom."

Rev. D. H. Moore, Baptist Tabernacle, Barking:—"I hope to be present on May 1. I enjoyed last year's meetings, and shall be delighted to join in thanking God for the blessing given us at Barking."

Mr. H. M. Maynard, of Walthamstow:—"The idea of repetition joyfully welcomed. Hope to come."

Rev. D. M. Cameron, Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road:—"I hope to attend the meetings. It is a good thing to give thanks to God. I remember seeing much of his mighty power in the great Revival of 1860. That was the year I was brought to God."

Rev. J. E. Martin, Baptist Church, Erith:—"I shall hope, if possible, to attend the morning and afternoon meetings. May great blessing rest upon the gatherings."

Rev. B. Sackett, Ebenezer Chapel, Commercial-road:—"I am truly glad that you are again making arrangements for a series of Thanksgiving meetings on May 1, and shall (D.V.) be there myself, and get as many of my workers to be present as possible."

Rev. Philip Gast, Islington:—"I purpose (D.V.) giving up the whole day, so as to join you at the Thanksgiving Meetings on May 1. The good Lord send a tidal wave of blessing over all true Gospel work."

Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Upper Norwood:—"My fullest sympathy is with the step, and I look forward to being present during the day with prayerful pleasure."

The meetings, as already announced, will be at 11, 3, and 7; and we are asked to say that friends staying all day can have luncheon (1s. 6d.), and tea (8d.), but tickets for these must be obtained beforehand from the Secretary, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. Friends wishing for hand bills and tickets for distribution can obtain the same by sending full name and address on post-card to The Conveners, Thanksgiving Meetings, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

THE STOCKWELL TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY has concluded a successful series of six months' Saturday evening meetings in the renovated Stockwell Institute, the object being to keep the public out of the public-houses.

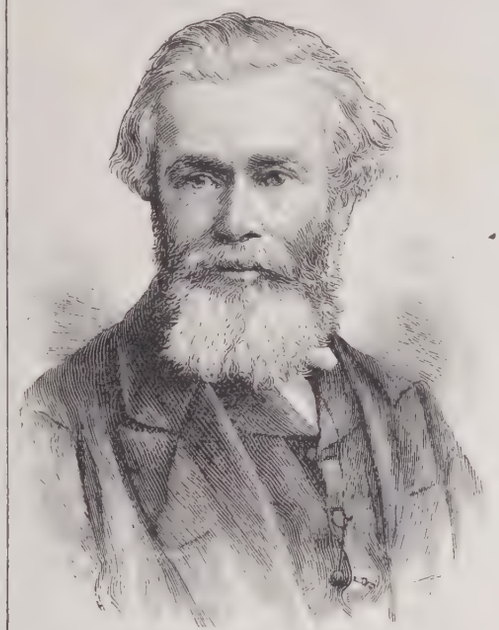
IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.—In consequence of the serious damage done to the roof and ceiling by the great snowstorm in January, this hall has been closed for repairs for twelve weeks. Happily, the schoolroom had been enlarged two or three years ago, or the Mission would have been totally homeless. In the reopening service, Rev. Dr. Newman Hall took part. An eight days' Gospel convention was also a time of real blessing. Ministers and friends from London, Manchester, and the Potteries neighbourhood have spoken with much profit, and the work has been restarted in confidence and hope. Close upon £500 has had to be expended upon the repairs, etc., and an earnest appeal is being made for £300 yet deficient. This mission has always been distinguished by its spirit of self-help, but an amount like that now required is beyond the resources of the membership. The treasurer is Mr. Ambrose Wood, Architect, Hanley, Staffs.

The late Rev. James Gall,

EDINBURGH.

We lately recorded the decease at a ripe old age of this well-known resident in the Northern Capital. To-day we have the privilege of giving his portrait, with some biographical particulars, for which we are chiefly indebted to a capable and authoritative writer in The Free Church of Scotland Monthly:—

Few men in modern times have served God in his kingdom so long, so faithfully, and so successfully as James Gall. His labours as a Christian instructor and leader began when he was a boy of twelve or thirteen, and continued till within a few weeks of his death in the eighty-seventh year of his age. He was brought into the vineyard as a labourer thus early by a notable leading of Providence. His father, who was the chief founder of the Sabbath-school system in Scotland, and superintendent of a number of Sabbath-schools in Edinburgh and Leith, was constantly on the look-out for likely young men as recruits for his teaching staff. He did not fail to observe the early promise of his own boy, and, in course of his religious training, kept specially in view his preparation for usefulness in the Sabbath-school.



But his introduction to this service when he had hardly entered upon his teens would probably not have been thought of but for an emergency in one of the schools under his father's care. The teacher of a mission class in the Horse Wynd called on Mr. Gall one Sunday morning to inform him that his scholars had mutinied and mobbed him, and that on no account would he go near them again. Mr. Gall said to his son, "James, do you think you could go?" He got a cheerful reply in the affirmative. The young teacher presented himself to the rebellious class in the evening, and asked them whether they would accept of him as their teacher. The lads, who were about his own age, were captivated by his frank and friendly manner, and —as Mr. Gall records in some reminiscences of his early life—before the evening was closed he had "got them all into fellowship, and there could not have been a better behaved class."

His success then and afterwards as a Sabbath-school teacher was owing not only to his tact and force of character, but to the fresh and interesting way in which he communicated instruction. His father had revolutionised the methods of religious teaching of the young, which in those days consisted in committing to memory and repeating psalms, paraphrases, and questions of the Shorter Catechism. In addition to this, Mr. Gall, sen., insisted on awakening the intelligence of Sabbath scholars, and followed up every reading or repetition of Scripture text or narrative with the inquiry, "What does that teach you?" His son bettered the instruction by the dramatic power which he threw into his lessons.

Notwithstanding his remarkable gifts as a religious teacher, it was not Mr. Gall's purpose as a youth to take up evangelism as his life-work. It was intended that he should join his father in the printing and publishing business. After leaving the High School, he attended the University and also the Trustees' Academy. At this institution he obtained the second prize for life-class modelling. At the same time he served his apprenticeship as a printer and wood-engraver, and was then taken into partnership with his father.

In the business of Gall and Son he found scope for his ingenuity and versatility. One of his first publication novelties was a new Psalm Tune Book, produced by a modification of the stereotype process, at a tithe of the cost of the then standard Psalm Tune Book, printed from copper-plate. He also brought out a cheap Hymn Tune Book for Sabbath schools and mission meetings, which sold in hundreds of thousands. The words and music of a number of the hymns were his own composition. Of other small publications we can only mention his "Easy Guide to the Constellations" and his tract "Instant Salvation," of which more than half a million have been sold, and which has been greatly blessed to many. Among his larger works are his "Interpreting Concordance of the New Testament," "The Stars and the Angels," "Primeval Man Unveiled," "The Evangelistic Baptism," and "The Synagogue, not the Temple, the Germ and Model of the Christian Church." This last work he issued through the press when he had passed his eightieth year.

Although the publishing business was in many respects congenial, it took up so much of Mr. Gall's time as to prevent him having leisure for other work which had more attraction for him, and so he returned, in 1850, to the less engrossing occupation of sculpture, his place in the firm being taken by his son-in-law, Mr Robert Inglis.

(From Photograph by Mr. Abel Lewis, Douglas.)

It was, however, in the sphere of Christian usefulness that Mr. Gall was most at home and most conspicuous as a pioneer. He took part in the Disruption controversy, both in the Press and on the platform, and led out the Free Church section of Greenside Church to Lady Glenorchy's. He was elected an elder of that congregation in 1843, and immediately set about the organising of the congregational mission, ready for a building afterwards erected by Mr. William Whyte. When he joined the Free New North Church, in 1873, he organised the missions there, and gave as the nucleus of a building fund a sum of money which had been presented to him in acknowledgment of his services. Mr. Gall also organised the Canongate Christian Institute, for which handsome buildings were erected and furnished by Mr. White Millar. His services in the promotion of Sabbath-school work were sought for in all parts of the country. He delivered lectures and organised schools in Scotland, England, and Ireland; and in Edinburgh, chiefly through his instrumentality, the Edinburgh Teachers' Union was established.

But the Carrubbers Close Mission is the monument by which Mr. Gall will be had in lasting remembrance. He was convener of a committee of the Edinburgh Sabbath-school Teachers' Union, which in 1856 presented the result of a census they had taken, and from which it appeared that 8000 children were growing up in Edinburgh without any religious instruction, representing a much larger adult population who were living lives of practical infidelity. Mr. Gall's reflection upon this state of things was that not even in Edinburgh could a paid agency overtake the spiritual destitution which existed, and much less could the world be evangelised by a paid agency. No church or society being prepared to undertake a mission of voluntary agents on the plan proposed by Mr. Gall, he undertook the enterprise himself. In working it out he kept in view a principle his father had early given him for his guidance —namely, that when he had a clear apprehension of some good to be accomplished he should take the most direct road, untrammelled by traditional or conventional usages. To this Mr. Gall added another principle which his own experience had taught him—to give a free hand to Christian workers to strike out in as many directions as circumstances and their own proclivities might suggest; the only check in the case of the Carrubbers Close Mission being that nothing should be taught contrary to the doctrine of the Shorter Catechism.

Operations were commenced in 1858. Whitefield Chapel, in Carrubbers Close, which up till that time had been the headquarters of an infidel club, was rented and occupied as a centre. From small beginnings the mission grew, till its influence was felt through the whole city, and throughout a large part of the country. Not a few ministers and Christian workers in all parts of the world date their serious impressions and their evangelistic baptism to the earnest nightly meetings of the Carrubbers Close Mission. After Whitefield Chapel was demolished, the meetings were held for three or four months in the Theatre Royal, when this building had been purchased by the Government, and before it was removed to provide a site for the new Post Office. The theatre was often crowded on the stage, as well as in the auditorium; and in the Green Room was commenced the Edinburgh Daily Prayer Meeting. The mission was born and nurtured in prayer. After the demolition of the theatre, the headquarters of the mission were removed to the Free Assembly Hall, and finally to the handsome building in the High-street, erected largely through the efforts of Mr. Moody.

The success of the mission was so remarkable that the Free Assembly of 1861, on the motion of Dr. Candlish, resolved to ordain Mr. Gall as pastor of the new mission congregation in the South Back of the Canongate. For ten years Mr. Gall was minister of this congregation, but he was never clear that this was his proper sphere. In 1871 he handed back to the Presbytery church and congregation fully equipped. With characteristic generosity he handed back also manse and stipend, reserving no allowance whatever for himself.

The sunset of his life was beautiful. For a few weeks before his death he was confined to bed, but retained his clearness of intellect to the last, and his interest in all that was taking place in the region of politics (he belonged to the advanced section), sociology, and above all in the progress of the Redeemer's Kingdom. While he was able, he wrote from his bed letters in the interests of truth and practical piety, and when this was no longer possible, he witnessed for his Master in the family circle.

CHRISTIANS AND THE SCHOOLS.

II.

In a former article I endeavoured to show the position of a Christian in regard to the enormous educational advance of the present day. While hailing these strides forward as doors to a richer, fuller, intellectual life, I tried to point out the danger inseparably bound up with them, that we might loosen our hold on spiritual things, and allow them to lag behind. I submitted that unhappily the statistics to hand bore out such an opinion, and that it behoved us as Christians seriously to consider whether by sending our children to schools absolutely secular in their teaching we were not doing them the gravest mischief.

I propose now to deal briefly with some of the ways in which an individual Christian may do his part to lessen this danger of many of our schools. I would put aside here the vexed questions of the form and kind of religious instruction in schools, questions which agitate us at every School Board election, and I would rather keep now to the deeper aspect, as to whether we as Christians do all we can individually in this matter to help the teachers and children around us.

It is not enough to support what seems to us the right side in an election, and when its policy is reversed to denounce the one carried, bewail the Godlessness of the system, and think our duty is done. It is not enough to leave the religious instruction in those schools where the work is done by voluntary teachers, to the few already overburdened with Christian work. It is not enough (who dare say it is?) in schools where there is actually direct religious instruction by the teachers, for Christian parents to send their children to such schools, and there leave the matter with the belief that they have done their whole duty. It is not enough to cry down the brilliant secular education now provided for the country, and talk of the over-education of the masses, while we do so little or nothing ourselves to balance this education by spiritual training.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

And what can we do? Very much I take it, by a two-fold action—first towards the children, second towards the teachers. All around are large schools supported by the ratepayers, and how often, I ask, do the ratepayers go into those schools and get to know the working of them? To listen to a lesson now and then, to become acquainted with the daily routine, to observe the teacher's methods, would be valuable to both parents and children. Now and then a case of friction arises, perhaps on the matter of corporal punishment, and harsh words are uttered against teachers and their discipline. Just or not, as the case may be, those who uttered them would have a clearer judgment of the difficulties and aggravations that confront a teacher, perhaps a young inexperienced assistant, if they had watched the course of a few school lessons.

Again, take temperance. What an amount of enthusiasm is expended at present on this subject by all conditions of reformers! The cry sounds from nearly every Christian platform. Those who have gone at all below the surface, and had any glimpse of the seamy side of our large cities, are ever being confronted by that most insoluble of problems, how to help men and women under the present conditions of the drink traffic. We are ready in our despair to listen to all manner of proposals and licensing schemes. At the same time we are bound to confess that our most sanguine hopes lie in the future, in our children, the men and women of the next generation. If we cannot save the present fathers and mothers, we have every chance of reaching their little ones. This being so, we should expect to find the most strenuous efforts made for temperance teaching in our elementary schools, where large masses of children are gathered together in their freshest and most pliable condition. Is this so, I ask? What are the facts?

The Band of Hope Union is practically the only body which systematically enters the schools for this purpose, and grand and good indeed is its work. But as a rule its temperance lessons are given once a year. Once a year! Here and there in a few stray towns, local temperance workers do a little in the hours set apart for religious instruction, but this is not general, and at best the children only get placed before them the terrible effects of strong drink three or four times a year. The Band of Hope Union give their instruction, necessarily, from the scientific point of view as a secular lesson, and in the Domestic Economy lessons, given by the ordinary teachers once a year, or once in two years, their instruction is supplemented by a lesson occurring in the course, on the nature and properties of alcohol. On the scientific side of temperance this is all the teaching that the children obtain. It is a most important side, and Christians might do much to strengthen the hands of the Band of Hope Union and other temperance organisations, so that their funds would provide a larger number of qualified teachers, who could obtain entrance into the schools more often than once in twelve months.

On the religious side of the question more also might be done. By a little trouble, by getting to know the teachers, we might gain from them the promise that in their moral lessons, or in their religious instruction, they would occasionally bring the subject before their pupils. They can wield an enormous influence for good in the schools if they choose, and, surely, it behoves us as Christians to gain their help and co-operation in this matter.

Leaving temperance, I would refer for a moment to this vast power with which the men and women who train our children are endowed. A teacher stands to a child for a great portion of the day in loco parentis. Apart from any direct religious instruction, a vast scope for his influence either for good or for evil lies before him. On every branch of learning he may bring to bear a Christian tone of thought, or the reverse. The Royal Commissioners in 1888 drew especial attention to the importance of moral training in primary schools, and every new code tends to enforce that principle by its larger number of humanising subjects (i.e., subjects which develop the whole being of the child), as compared with the less importance now attached to details of grammar, geography, and the like.

What does this mean to us as Christians? Here are hundreds of young men and women teachers engaged in what is avowedly the hardest work of all, that of imparting knowledge, giving out from the store of their minds so that others may take in. They have special difficulties, special trials, special needs of patience, forbearance, and kindness, and in the monotony and grind that their work must involve,

THEY WANT ALL THE SYMPATHY AND HELP

we can give them. This we surely often forget. How few of the mass of us get to know the teachers in the Board schools of our town, invite them to our houses, seek to make them really friends, and help them by our prayers and sympathy. I am persuaded that nothing short of a revolution would take place in the spiritual tone of hundreds of our schools if we were to do this, and that many a teacher who is groping in the dark might be brought to spiritual light and healing by this method. "It is that, more than anything else, that we yearn for," said a master to me not long ago, "for flesh-and-blood sympathy." Under large Boards, in great towns, the work of school organisation must of necessity become largely official, and the human element must tend to diminish. While this is so, there is a growing need for Christians to rouse themselves to take part with the teachers in their school life, and to get into intimate touch with their difficulties, sorrows, joys and aims. Others shall

> From thy hand, aid thy heart and thy brave cheer,
> And God's grace fructify through thee to all.

CONVERTED PRIESTS IN FRANCE.

The stirring of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of Roman Catholic priests and students still continues. The son of a well-to-do farmer in the South of France was found to be intelligent and serious; and therefore, by the advice and help of the lord of the manor, who was proprietor of the farm, was sent to college with a view to being ordained a priest. Like the other students, he had the range of the college library, and while looking through the books one day he found a very old Bible, written in old-fashioned obsolete French. He was interested, and set to work to read it, and soon found how contrary it was to the teaching of the Church of Rome. Innocently enough, he questioned the professors about this difference of teaching. They at once took away the dangerous book, telling him that he would become worse than a Protestant if he paid any attention to it; and at the same time they reported him to the bishop, as well as to his father and the lord of the manor, as a young man of heretical tendencies.

On his return home for the vacation last summer, the young man learnt that there was a Protestant pastor in a neighbouring town, fifteen miles off, and he made up his mind to go and see him. Lest he should be detected if he went there in priest's dress, he took some old clothes of his father's, and changed his attire on the way. The clothes were so very old, and probably ill-fitting, that when he got to the pastor's house the servant took him for a beggar, and said that, though her master was out, he had left a little money for the poor, out of which she could give him one sou. However, the inquirer found out where the pastor was, and after some conversation left him more than ever convinced that the Bible in old-fashioned French which he had found in the college library, was right after all, and that Rome was consequently wrong. His joy was damped by meeting in the town the priest of his own village, who recognised him in spite of his dress, and lost no time in communicating the fact to his father. Notwithstanding the irritation of the latter, the son calmly persisted in declaring that he could not go against the plain teaching of the Bible, and uphold doctrine which he now knew was false.

The director of the Œuvre des Prêtres (Professor L. J. Bertrand) was promptly on the scene with a generous offer to defray all expenses of an educational course in a Protestant college. Unfortunately the lad was a few months short of twenty-one, so that by French law he was absolutely under the orders of his father, and the interference of anyone else would be tantamount to "abduction of a minor," punishable with two years' imprisonment. The enraged father insisted that he should either go back to the Catholic seminary, or else be sent off to perform his two years' service in the army; and the lad still holds out that he will not become a priest, notwithstanding all the pressure that is being brought to bear upon him, but that he will sooner go through his military service, and then be free. M. Bertrand is now in England, interesting Christians in his work among French priests. Letters for him may be addressed: 3, The Manor-way, Blackheath.

A CALL.

I lay me still
For I, as clay, in God's great hand did lie,
That pierced hand; and as his gentle touch
Did press me round, my heart was filled with glad Deep joy. I long had prayed to know his will Concerning me, and that vast harvest field
The world; and now it seemed that in my heart
The Master whispered, Go! Oh, wondrous love!
That God should deign to use e'en worthless me.
Though I but clay, least precious of all things,
Yet still I am his clay; my weakness He Knows well, much more than I, He knoweth best
How He may use, and why He calleth me:
To Him I lowly bow.

And so I lie
Submissive in his hands, while He doth knead
And press me as He wills: knead, blessed Lord!
And make me what Thou wilt, so that I be
A vessel for thy use, and may bear forth
The living waters pure to thirsty souls,
In distant lands or near, just where Thou wilt,
And when, and how, so Thou be glorified.

THE CRIPPLES' NURSERY.

Having already described in these pages the Home for Crippled Girls, and the Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, I now—at the happy suggestion of Lady Elizabeth Knox—complete the series by adding some account of a visit to the delightful nursery in Park-place, Upper Baker-street, for helpless and afflicted children. Not that my first glimpse of them suggested the idea of pity, as, approaching from the Park-road end, I caught sight of the playground, and heard the merry sound of voices. These seemed full of fun and frolic, though the observer might mark the limp and halting gait, but of course they were the strongest and brightest of the inmates. Others, I found later on, upstairs, were happy enough, being lovingly cared for, but unable as many of them are to walk, they cannot, at present, join the mirthful romps. One lovely child, with —it is so sweet and winsome—is eight years old, and is so proud of her achievement when she walks a few steps, holding on by a form. Most of her time is spent on her back, as it is wholly with some others. But while many come in thus, it is really marvellous what care and skilled treatment does for them. Several of those I found playing outside were, not long ago, close prisoners, and apparently doomed to lifelong incapacity—an incapacity which is yielding to judicious treatment.

A FACE LIKE A FAIRY

So much for the first impressions; but now what is this Home? What does it exist for? and what is it really doing? Soon after the opening of the Girls' Home in Marylebone-road, the ladies interested began to realise that many little ones—too young for the Girls' or Boys' Homes—were in a pitiful condition and sorely needing loving care. This led to the opening of a small house near Oxford-street, which by-and-by gave place to a larger one in Old Quebec-street. Later on, the present house in Park-place, close to and looking out on Regent's Park, was taken, and has proved admirably adapted, by reason of its old-fashioned roomy interior, for its present purpose. Moreover, the fact that the children have but to cross the road to reach the fine park conduces largely to their health and happiness. Weather permitting, all who can spend some time daily in the park, to their intense delight. One dear little one—running about freely—was pointed out to me as—until her coming here—having

NEVER BEEN OUT-OF-DOORS IN HER LIFE.

The poor child's knowledge of the outer world was confined to what she saw from the window. Now, although unhappily crippled, she is full of fun and spirits, rosy-cheeked and apparently the picture of health. This is the result of good treatment and out-of-door exercise.

The children are received from two to eight years of age, and they are kept till they are twelve. Then many of them are drafted off to the Boys' or Girls' Home, already described, while others return to their friends. This is avowedly a nursery for the little ones, not a home for the elders. It is, as already hinted, both for boys and girls, who are brought up together as in a well-ordered family; occupying, of course, separate dormitories. The whole tone of the place seems that of a happy family. The matron, Mrs. Bayliss, who showed me over, has been seventeen years in the work, and is regarded by her charges simply as mother. The teacher, whose painstaking care was rewarded last year by 100 per cent. passes in the yearly examinations, devotes herself with rare assiduity to this arduous service, ready to be playmate and companion as well as teacher, and giving herself wholly to the work. Mr. Hassall, the inspector, says in his report:—"Every child did the arithmetic and dictation on paper, and the exercises sent in were most creditable. I have never seen better work done by children of the same age and condition. Much credit is due to the excellent teacher under whom the children are placed." Their handwriting and needlework, specimens of which I saw, is really most creditable alike to teacher and scholars. The committee are endeavouring to fit the boys for clerks or accountants, and the girls post-office or telegraph workers, as their condition entails a sedentary life. Some of their needlework was sent to the Chicago Exhibition, and the award has only lately been received. The work consisted of neatly-made print dresses, by both boys and girls, which was highly commended. They all learn also to knit their own stockings.

Their physical condition naturally demands careful attention: hence the honorary surgeon, Dr. H. F. Baker, and the honorary physician, Dr. W. H. White, are constant in attendance; while Drs. T. Gilbart Smith and J. Warington Howard are ready to come, freely, at any moment when summoned. These little ones on all hands. A gentleman, for example, who travels on the Atlas express omnibus (and so passes the Home daily) collected some money last year to give them a day's outing to Wembley Park, where they had dinner and tea, and spent a most enjoyable day. He wrote to them afterwards acknowledging their thanks:—"I am sure that if you and your little friends at the Nursery are good, we will all subscribe next year to give you another treat. I hope to see you on Monday morning at the window, when I pass on the omnibus at 9.25. I will wave my handkerchief, and you do the same, and then we shall know each other again."

GAIN PITY AND WIN SYMPATHY

Nor are their spiritual interests forgotten. Besides loving Christian instruction at home, the ladies of the committee and others come in regularly to teach and talk to the little ones of the Saviour's love and the truths of the Bible. Young as these are, many of them are believed to be sincere followers of Jesus. On Sunday all who are able attend Portman Chapel.

There is, in connection, a Seaside Home at Margate, 10, Sea View-terrace, for those needing the sea breezes. Together the two homes accommodate forty-eight; at present there are forty-six inmates. The children are sent by ladies or by friends, sometimes by the C.O.S., or by parochial Unions. For each case someone has to become responsible for £20 per annum to meet part of the cost of keep, clothing, schooling, etc.,

It is impossible here to detail all the pathetic cases in the Home, better far that friends should go and see for themselves. I was deeply interested and greatly touched by the little ones—spinal sufferers and so on—in the nursery and schoolroom, unable to move or just beginning to attempt it. One bright little fellow, only eight, had both legs cut off in a railway accident, but here he is well and happy, and scudding about the room on his hands and hips as quickly as any of his playmates. Toys, I am glad to observe, abound, well-worn truly and much used, but highly valued for all that.

This beautiful work greatly needs loving aid. The secretary, Mrs. Kirk, 15, Park-place, Upper Baker-street, Regent's Park, N.W., will be glad to hear from, or to welcome as visitors, any interested in the Cripples' Nursery.

JEWS IN PALESTINE.

Dear Sir,—Our superintendent at Abraham's Vineyard, Jerusalem, sends us very touching accounts of the earnest petitions received from poor Jews for employment. Out of the 45,000 Jews now at Jerusalem, the great majority are unable to get employment. It is therefore important to give work in every possible way to these poor people, who are most industrious. We are anxious to erect cottages on the Vineyard, and to construct more water-cisterns, which would enable us to provide drinking-water for more of the great numbers of poor Jews who have no water-supply in their wretched dwellings, and who suffer severely from lack of means to buy the necessaries of life.

The weekly reports furnished by our visitor to the destitute Jews are sad in the extreme. Food and clothing have been given to the most suffering persons. There is much illness and some small-pox among the Jewish poor. We ask for help that we may give work to those who can work, and at least a bit of bread and a cup of cold water to the feeble and helpless.

E. A. Finn,
Secretary Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews.

THE AMERICAN METHODIST MISSION in Singapore has recently bought twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of property for mission-houses and other purposes. Dr. West, a medical missionary for some year in Singapore, has been sent to Penang, to begin Methodist mission work among the Chinese in that island. There is already a large Anglo-Chinese school work there, as well as in Singapore. This mission has now a large staff of workers, both missionaries and schoolmasters, besides a number of ladies engaged in school and mission work.

GOOD FRIDAY WITH THEATRE EMPLOYEES.

Under the management of the United Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres and Music Halls (3, Bridewell-place, E.C.), the thirteenth annual gathering of theatre employees in London was held in the afternoon of Good Friday, at Shoreditch Town Hall. Several of the principal theatres were represented. Tea, fruit, etc., was provided by the generosity of Sir George and Lady Williams, now in the South of France; and to each of the audience, numbering over a thousand, a handsome volume was presented by the committee of the Religious Tract Society, and a text card by the Bible Flower Mission.

Mr. Alfred Thomas Williams, who presided, spoke of religion as the sunshine of the heart, which might be received by all; in the name of his honoured father, who was deeply interested in the gathering, and at whose request he presided, he gave a warm welcome to all present.

Rev. T. Trevelyan Snow, Vicar of St. Peter's, Islington, delivered an earnest Gospel address, setting forth the great need of salvation, and the finished sacrificial work of the Redeemer as the only ground of man's reconciliation with God.

Mr. J. H. Lydall (member of committee) spoke of the omniscience of God, "Thou God seest me," as a ground of alarm to those who had not accepted the Gospel, but of confidence to those who were walking in the light of God's countenance.

Rev. Owen Thomas urged the audience to come under the Good Master, Christ; and Mr. T. C. Chadwick, one of the preachers at the services, dwelt upon the value of a beautiful character, which can only be built on the solid foundation of a personal faith in Christ.

Mr. Goodenough, London City Missionary to Theatricals, urged the importance of immediate decision for Christ. Mrs. Chadwick sang a beautiful solo, "Come unto Me;" and the stringed band and choirs of the Shoreditch Town Hall and Pavilion services led the praises of the congregation.

TELL IT NOT.

A returned missionary was repeating over to himself one night the words of the stirring hymn:—

Tell it out among the people that the Saviour reigns,
Tell it out among the heathen, let them break their chains, when it occurred to him that in view of the dark financial outlook of the Foreign Board, some things might as well not be "told among the heathen." And he took his pen and wrote as follows:—

Tell it not among the heathen, that the ship is on a reef;
It was freighted with Salvation, our "Captain," Lord, and Chief—
But the tide at length receded, and left it high and dry,
The tide of gold and silver, the gifts of low and high.
The eagles and the dollars, the nickels and the dimes,
Flowed off in other channels, from the hardness of the times.

Tell it not among the heathen, that the train is off the track;
The oil all gone—a heated box—the signal came to slack;
The Foreign Board is side-tracked with its passengers and freight,
Its messengers of mercy, though so eager, all must wait.
The oil was once abundant, and the wheels went smoothly
But drop by drop it lessened, and now 'tis wholly gone. [on—

Tell it not among the heathen, that the stream has ceased to flow
Down from the lofty mountains in rain and dew and snow.
It flowed in floods and rivers, in rivulets and rills, [hills.
It gladdened plains and mountains, the distant lakes and
But now 'tis dry! The thirsty ones, they cannot drink as yet,
For the Foreign Board is threatened with a paralyzing debt!

Tell it not among the heathen, tell it not among the Jews!
Tell it not among the Moslems, this melancholy news;
Lest sons of Gath deride us, and tell it to our shame
That churches sworn to true and full allegiance to his Name
No longer do his bidding, no longer heed the cry
Of millions, who in sadness, must now be left to die!

Tell it not among the heathen, but tell it to your Lord.
Drop on your knees, ye Christians, and speak the truthful word; [ing heart,
"We thought we gave our all to Thee, but now with break-
We see that in our giving, we had kept back a part.
So with complete surrender, we give our all to Thee."
Then tell it to the heathen, that the Church of Christ is free,
That the tide of love is rising to float the ship again,
That the oil of grace is flowing to start the stranded train;
That the rivulets of mercy are rising to a flood,
For a blessing to the nations, and the Glory of our God!

A PASTOR'S RELATION TO MISSIONS.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

A true man, like Livingstone, hates encomium; his wish would be that any eulogy might be postponed till after his death, and then, as an Irishman might say, that the man who was to deliver his funeral oration might die before him!

The relation of a pastor to missions is not necessarily unique in its conditions. It depends not on anything peculiar or extraordinary, but is the outcome of all true loyalty to his Lord and high appreciation of his office as pastor.

Power in service hangs on two conditions: height and breadth of attainment in Divine things. A man is like a mountain. The higher he soars Godward the more uncloudedhis faith, and the surer he is of receiving and conveying blessing. The rain touches the hill-tops first, then descends. How can a congregation get a blessing that does not first fall on the pastor?

The broader the surface which a mountain presents to the rainfall, the greater the volume of water which finds its way down its slopes; and the farther and richer the blessing so borne to the parched plains about.

The study of useful and missionary-spirited pastorates will show that no man has ever, in the ministerial office, been a man of consecrated power, intense, far-reaching, pervasive, unless he has first of all lived close to God. The higher the level, the greater the measure; and the richer the quality of the life and the life-imparting power. Fellowship with God is not a means to an end simply; it is the end to which all means contribute; but when so sought and so found, it becomes the fountain of blessing to the Church and the world.

Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow, recorded, a little before his death, this blessed testimony, that from the time of his conversion sixty years before, not a day had passed when he lost access to the mercy-seat. No wonder that he felt the power of Christ rest upon him, as Paul's word (ἐπισκηνώσῃ) literally means, like the curtains of a tent canopying him.

A man who thus lives in daily fellowship with God must live a life of faith. At such level, clouds and mist are proportionately gone, and the soul abides in a clear atmosphere. Up there we learn that how many soever the promises of God, they are all in Christ, yea, and through Christ, Amen. That they are subject to no discount, but, like any sound financial paper, good for the full face value. Hence there comes, as the firstfruit of a really elevated life of godliness, a faith in God which most people know nothing about, because they live on too low a level. Such faith led Pastor Gossner, when sixty years old, to stop ringing earthly door-bells and ring at heaven's gate, and led Müller, of Bristol, to ask in serene confidence daily food for 2000 orphans.

He who lives near God, and keeps there, catches God's own spirit, which is simply Love; and love is unselfish and self-imparting life—a principle or law of life even more than an emotion or an affection. It gives—gives all it has, and gives to all that need. Foreign missions simply represent the farthest off and most needy, and a man who loves as God loves cannot limit his own love, and say, "I will love the souls near by, but not afar off," any more than the stream flowing down the mountain can determine only to go so far. If there be little water it will not flow far, but the more the stream the broader the channel, and the farther the reach. The sun might as well try to limit his own shining, and say to his rays, "Bless only the nearest planets, and let Uranus and Neptune remain in bonds of eternal night and ice!" Such a pastor will not (as Hudson Taylor well says) be so anxious to be successor of the Apostles, who went to buy food but brought not an inquiring soul back with them, as to be successors of the Samaritan woman who forgot her water-pot in her zeal to carry the water of life to thirsty men in Sychar, and brought a whole city to Jesus' feet!

Such a pastor will communicate to his people, unconsciously and consciously by the education of his preaching and teaching, the contagion of his own holy enthusiasm. He will not think of his church as the field, bounding his labours and claiming his whole attention, but rather as his working force to be scattered over the wider field of the world. He will seek to make every one of the believers about him a fountain of living waters to a world of lost souls.

And all this growth in missionary service will be so necessary and actual that great results will come without human planning—and, above all, without human boasting. Mrs. Stowe said of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that that greatest work of modern fiction was never begun or carried on by her with any thought of doing a great thing or of being famous. She was simply possessed of an idea which she had to work out in a natural way, and was a pen in the hand of God. And yet she produced a book which God used as a lever to upturn a monstrous fabric that it took hundreds of years to build, and which was buttressed even by morality and religion; a book which Palmerston read thrice for its statesmenship, and which has been translated into fifty tongues.

No man ever achieved such things for God, however, without getting a reputation for fanaticism, if not heresy. Aristotle long ago said that there is no great genius without some mixture of madness; nothing grand or superior was ever wrought save by an agitated soul. The streams that rush down the mountain side, and carry healing waters afar to dry and barren districts, leave scars on the mountain's breast. As Keith Falconer said, "We must not fear to be eccentric, for eccentricity is being out of centre as to the world, that we may be adjusted to another centre, of which the world knows nothing."

The whole raising of our church life depends on the higher standard of our ministerial life, for the ministry is the supreme flower and fruit of the church life. Its consummation as to growth, and its seed as to propagation and reproduction. A cultivated ministry is not what is needed alone—indeed, there is a culture which is fatal to holy fruitfulness, just as the ovaries of some flowers are by cultivation absorbed into stamen and petal, so that while the bloom is increased in beauty the seed vessel is not there.

STRATFORD CONFERENCE HALL.

The report for 1894 of the work done in connection with the Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A., Stratford, E., is in reality a review of ten years' toil. It is a story full of encouragement, originating in a desire to promote the glory of God and advance the wellbeing of East-end poor, and eventuating in blessing which only the Great Day will fully reveal. Ten years of prayer and preaching, of testimony for Christ and solicitude for souls—what does it not mean, first on the part of those who are at the helm of affairs, and then to those weak and distressed ones who daily need spiritual help and guidance!

As is well known, the work came into being as an outcome of the mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1884. Some of the best workers to-day in connection with the Hall were then converted; great sinners were transformed into devoted Christians, and at once, in proportion to their means, joined with others in response to the call, "Arise and build." In the following year the spacious Hall, seating 1900, was erected, and the agencies which are now so active were organised. The Evangelistic Choir has done excellent service, conducting the singing on Saturday evenings, as well as on Sundays, also visiting many parts of London and suburbs. Eighteen missions, extending from one to three weeks, have been held, and during those times, as well as at the ordinary meetings, a great number of people have professed to pass from death unto life. If proof were wanted of the blessing which the Hall has been to many a soul, it is furnished by the existence of the Mizpah Cottage, built in 1890 for the use of the caretaker, and to accommodate speakers who have to stay for a night or more. An inscription cut in one of the stones tells the story of this interesting house thus: "Built with our own hands, by members of the Mizpah Band, as a work of love, the materials being the gift of the Council."

The Y.M.C.A. has an earnest and united membership. The Bible Class on Sunday afternoons, for young men between the ages of sixteen and thirty, has an average attendance of 115. There are periodical gatherings of young women and mothers, also Bible readings and prayer meetings, likewise educational classes. In fact, there are meetings every day in the week, on some days several. The report says: "We believe it might be said with perfect truth, that there is not one room in the building in which souls have not been saved. The preaching of the Word has always been as simple as possible, so that all may understand, and it has been our joy to deal personally with great numbers of people who have been led to a knowledge of Christ as their Saviour, through the instrumentality of this work, and their lives since have testified to the renewing power and in-dwelling of the Holy Spirit."

The tenth anniversary of the work was celebrated on Tuesday last week. In the afternoon Pastor Archibald Brown conducted Divine service, and gave an address, which was much enjoyed, on Ezekiel i. In the evening Mr. John McCall, chairman of the Council, presided over a large gathering of friends of the work. Clergymen and ministers of various denominations were present to show their interest in the proceedings, Revs. James Knaggs, of Stratford, and J. H. Monti, of West Ham, being called upon to take an active part. Those who know the work cannot but recognise the great value of the services which have all along been rendered by the general secretary, Mr. E. Fox Butlin. That kind things should be said of him on this occasion was but natural; but Mr. A. Boake introduced the element of surprise by presenting to the Y.M.C.A. a handsome bookcase with four hundred volumes, inscribed as a record of the devoted service of Mr. Butlin. He further presented to Mr. and Mrs. Butlin a solid silver tea service and tray, duly inscribed, as a mark of love and esteem. These gifts, one to, and the other in honour of, Mr. Butlin, represented a large number of small subscriptions, which, with a few more substantial, amounted to a total of £122.

Mr. C. Boardman, as treasurer, was delighted to announce that at length the buildings were entirely free from debt. An heroic effort last year brought about this pleasing consummation; the main building and furniture cost £8718, while in all £10,134 was expended on the building account. This special demand affected the general income, and the year closed with a deficit of £53 on the current account. Since then the difference between income and expenditure has become a good deal greater, but relying on God and his people, our friends labour on.

An address was given by Mr. Robinson Souttar, president of the Oxford Y.M.C.A.; duets were sung by Mrs. Sims and Mr. Hutchins; and good service was rendered by the Evangelistic Choir. The meeting was warm-hearted throughout, and encouraging to those who direct the work in its various departments.

BLESSED ONES.

Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, It s more blessed to give than to receive.

Blessèd is he that giveth
The gold that his hand has won,
To replenish an empty cupboard,
To brighten a dark hearthstone;
To comfort the stricken household
With the needed daily bread,
Through the days when the strong bread-winner
Lies weak on the sufferer's bed.

Blessèd is he that giveth
The love that is brighter than gold,
To shine on a darkened brother,
To warm a heart that is cold;
To break, like a glorious sunburst,
On some mariner tempest-driven,
With the knowledge that all is not evil—
That there's love in earth and heaven.

Blessèd is He that giveth—
The Giver of blessings all,
Overflowing the highest heaven,
Surrounding creation's wall;
The Giver of all true gladness
That has ever thrilled the blood
Of man and of every creature
Since created "very good."

Blessèd is God, for He loveth
The sinner who loves Him not;
Blessèd, for He has given
His Son to cleanse the spot,
And to fill our souls with his Spirit,
That they, also running o'er,
May bless the earth with His blessing
Who is blessèd evermore.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY'S anniversary arrangements for May 1 are as follows:—The President (Lord Harrowby) hopes to be able to take the chair. The following speakers are expected:—The Dean of Norwich, Revs. Dr. Muirhead, of Shanghai; R. B. De Wolf, who has recently returned from visiting the auxiliaries in Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand; and W. E. Cousins, of Madagascar.

The Evangelist.

A SAVIOUR WHO UNDERSTANDS.

"We, even we, pardon all that we comprehend," says an old French proverb. And we comprehend so little! A woman in sorrow was asked why she did not seek the sympathy of friends, instead of praying so much; she was told it fostered a spirit of morbidness.

"Oh," she said, "how little you know! I go to Christ because He understands, right from the beginning. I have always found that in seeking human sympathy I have to explain so much."

That is true. Christ not only understands, He comprehends and compassionates. When the woman was taken in the act of sin (John viii.) the Scribes and Pharisees hustled her into the Master's presence, and began to quote the law to Him, asking what his verdict was, under the circumstances—"tempting Him, that they might have to accuse Him."

But He appeared to be deaf to their questioning, until they "continued asking Him," and then He gave them the answer which revolutionised, both then and for ever, however we may affect to be untouched by it, the whole code of ethics. It was as if a bomb had been thrown into the midst of the letter-bound, spirit-lacking assembly of accusers—"Master, the law says . . . . What sayest Thou?" "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." "And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last; and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst." Ah, if to-day, we would only be with Jesus "alone"! He, and He alone, understands. There together, the sinner and the sin-Bearer; any third presence would prove a hindrance. This was seen by the Scribes and Pharisees, who, the moment they heard the Master's invitation and reply, perceived that He understood, that his comprehension and compassion were so infinitely beyond theirs, that they were immediately silenced and shamed.

And the woman—the sinner? She saw in a flash that He to whom she had been brought for condemnation, her court of final appeal as it were, looked beyond her, and her accusers, and her sin, to the temptation, the possible struggle of soul and body to overcome it, and she saw that He understood!

There is no need to sentimentalise about this woman and her sin, the point is—the compassionate understanding of Christ. He, knowing all, forgave all.

Some of us have, perhaps, almost envied this sinner whose sin, in the assembly of her accusers, was understood. They saw only the fall; Christ saw the fight. They were filled with the commands and demands of the law; Christ was filled with his own spirit of love.

He understood, and He did not condemn. We, where we do not condemn, nearly always condone. There was no condonation in Christ's forgiveness—"Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more."

Oh, the rapture of that moment to the poor, sinful soul! Her Judge was her Saviour, and her Saviour was her Judge. He did not condemn, for He understood.

"Oh, give me a chance, my lord—one chance to regain my character! I had a sick husband, my lord!" cried a poor creature in one of our courts of justice the other day. "Six months," said the judge, as the poor, struggling prisoner was led out of his sight to the cells.

What a different picture from that where the "Judge of all the Earth" presided! "Go, and sin no more." Who could sin after such a forgiveness as that?

Not as yet had the Saviour suffered upon the cross as an atonement for sin. Yet the light entered that woman's soul that He was "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"; and she detected the accents of dying love in the tones of his forgiving voice. Even so to-day his promise holds: "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." M. B. Gerds.

NEWCASTLE.—At the annual meeting of this branch of the B.W.T.A., held in Newcastle on Friday week, Mrs. Scholefield presided, and there was a good attendance.

YOUNG EMIGRANTS FROM MANCHESTER.

A band of seventy boys from the Manchester Refuge left Liverpool on April 4 for Canada. The youngest is four, and the eldest about twenty. The older lads go to Grenfell, in the North-West Territory, where good places are waiting for all of them; and the younger ones to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace's Home, Belleville, Ontario. They set sail in fine spirits and health, with good prospects on the other side.

The Refuge Committee are very much encouraged by the result of their emigration work so far. Good accounts are constantly received from boys sent out in former years, who have now been in the new country long enough to test their prospects there. One writes the other day that he is engaged to marry one of Mr. Quarrier's Scotch lassies, and they look forward to a happy life on their own farm. Another sends a contribution to the special fund just now being raised to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Manchester Refuge and Homes.

Better than all else is the knowledge that here and there in Canada, Manchester boys are holding up the banner of the Cross. One writes from Ontario that in his farm work he keeps ever before him the aim of becoming a preacher of the Gospel, how or where he does not mind. Another and another is doing unobtrusive work in country church and school-house and Christian Endeavour meetings. In Newfoundland, Rev. Edwin Moore and another are being used of God in the conversion of souls, and far in the north of British Columbia, Rev. Thomas Neville, another old Refuge boy, is working as a missionary among the Indians, in many perils from the heathen, as well as from flood and frost. Then in the United States are several Christian workers, one at Princeton College preparing for work as a medical missionary—all sent out with hope and prayer from the old home in Manchester.

"EXPLAINING THE WAY OF SALVATION."

Dear Sir,—This is never fully done unless the resurrection of our Lord is declared. As it is written—"who was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification. Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God, etc." That is, through faith in our Lord's resurrection, as well as his death. Unless this fact is kept well to the front, we are found preaching a dead Christ, which an anxious soul seeking for life cannot be satisfied with; but when the Holy One who died is seen to have been raised again, the mind's eye can see that God was satisfied with the sacrifice made for sin.

The preaching by the Apostles, as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, of the resurrection of our Lord, produced the greatest effect. J. D. M.

PROPHECY: FULFILMENT IN 1896.

Sir,—Two statements I notice in your issue of April 4. (1) Dr. Anderson's interpretation of Daniel's sixty-nine weeks to be 483 days of years. Put this "year-day" measurement of prophecy alongside Revelation xi.:—"The court without the temple...and the Holy City shall be trodden down forty-two months...and my two witnesses shall prophecy 1260 days."

(2) Taking this period to mean 1260 years, we have Rev. E. White's statement confirming the fact of its history! He says of the temple courts and the Holy City, "That sacred area has been defiled by the Mosque of Omar for nearly thirteen centuries." Here is a marvellous confirmation of the year-day plan of fulfilment. The Mosque of Omar was built 1256 years ago. Gibbon's "Decline and Fall" tells us that Jerusalem was besieged from 636 to 637 A.D., so if you add the 1260 prophetic days to that, it makes the defilement of the Sacred City to end in 1896.

The present movement of Europe against the usurping Mohammedans in Asia Minor looks also like terminating their power very soon in Palestine. —Yours faithfully, D. W. Young.

THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL has refused to permit a pastrycook, occupying premises owned by the Council, to take out a licence to sell wine.

THE CONDITION OF SPAIN.

Rev. Dr. A. Robertson, of Venice, has recently published some facts in regard to the reform work going on in Spain, which came under his observation when, in November and December, 1892, he travelled in that country. He says:—

"I found in Spain that a great proportion of the people have only a nominal connection with the Church of Rome. They look upon it as the enemy of their country, of their families, of their souls. In Madrid 75 per cent. of the population can neither read nor write. A medical man said to me that vice of every kind abounded. The general consensus of opinion laid the blame at the door of the Church of Rome. Honest, patriotic, progressive minds hate the system. At the same time the people distinguish between Popery and Catholicism. Their design is not to build churches and get foreign ministers, but to overthrow the Papacy as a national institution, and fall back on a pure primitive Catholic Church. Whilst there I found other work attracting some of the people, but none engaged in it had any hope of making it more than very local or provincial. The other reform movement has a national aim, and national sentiment and opinion is pronouncing more and more in favour of it.

"At Villaescusa I found a congregation of 800 people, that is to say, over two-thirds of the inhabitants of the village. The Mayor entertained us. This result was brought about by one villager getting hold of a Bible, reading and studying it, and coming to the conclusion that if the Bible is right the Church of Rome is wrong. At Monistrol de Monserrat I found a band of noble men who had found the truth, and were eager to give it to others. These men were bold enough to stand by the wayside and give tracts and testaments to the poor pilgrims that came at certain seasons in their thousands to go on pilgrimage to the Madonna of Monserrat at the top of the mountain.

"Of Madrid I need say nothing. There is there a large congregation, and several schools and some students preparing for the ministry. In the Ultramontane opposition which was raised against opening the new Reform Church, the newspapers of the people took the part of the reformers. The Municipality that debarred the opening of the Protestant Church in Madrid was overthrown because, it was said, of corrupt practices, and before we left the country a more liberal Municipality ordered the removal of all obstacles to the carrying on of the Reform worship. Ultramontane opposition is strong, but its opposition is bringing the people to a decision for Reform."

REV. J. F. T. HALLOWES maintains that we have not only to educate the people, but also to educate the churches. If the churches were thoroughly right on the drink evil, it would be easy to educate the people.

SPITALFIELDS has a warm-hearted rector, whose diligence is in every way exemplary. In a booklet entitled "Broken Threads from the Weaver's Shuttle," some account is given of the varied work in which Rev. J. H. Scott and his earnest helpers are engaged. The Gospel is faithfully preached and enacted; there is relief for the poor, nursing for the sick, care for the neglected. The young are looked after, being not only educated, but influenced for their highest good; and special exertions are made on behalf of working men and women. Spitalfields is a centre of Jewish population, and the cause of Israel has a place in Mr. Scott's heart. In some words of urgent appeal for support in his work, Mr. Scott says (and others have said it): "If Christ has not fruit in us, He has it nowhere in the world." The Rectory, Spitalfields, E., is an adequate postal address for any communications to Mr. Scott.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MISSIONARY UNION bands together Christian members of the two Services, for the promotion of interest in the work of world-wide evangelisation. It aims at helping existing organisations, and encouraging volunteer service on the part of its members in any part of the world. The third annual report shows that there is a deepened interest in the subject in the Army and Navy, and that already the Union has several members in the field—including Mr. G. D. Agnew, late Lieut. 3rd Buffs, now working in connection with the C.M.S. in the Kangra Valley; Colonel Freeman, now labouring in connection with the same Society in Bombay; Mr. Polhill-Turner, late Lieut. 2nd Dragoon Guards, of the Tibet Mission; and Mr. G. E. Betts, of the C.I.M., the "own missionary" of Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Homes. Communications may be addressed to the secretary of the Union, Commander Sulivan, R.N., Fleet, Hants.

IRISH NOTES.

The Belfast Midnight Mission and Rescue Home is doing an excellent work. It dealt during the past year with 483 cases.

Rev. T. J. Charlton, rector of Clonduff, has concluded a successful three weeks' series of Gospel temperance meetings in County Carlow and other parts of the South of Ireland.

The Sabbath School Society of Ireland, the thirty-third annual meeting of which has just been held, has had a prosperous year. During the past twelve months it has sold a large number of books and periodicals.

On Tuesday week Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, gave an illustration of catholicity which might well be copied in other places, by presiding at the annual meeting of the London Missionary Society in Dublin.

All the Protestant denominations in Athlone have cordially united in presenting Rev. R. Watson, B.D., Presbyterian minister, who for several years has acted as local secretary of the Y.M.C.A. in that town, with an illuminated address and other tangible expressions of their regard.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mr. MacKeith, of Glasgow, reports the gift of another fresh-air home for poor children.

Auchtermuchty, Fifeshire, is said to be the most over-licensed place in all Scotland. Many of the young men are giving way to drunkenness.

Rev. John Freeland, of the Free Church, Innerwick, has attained his ministerial jubilee. He was the first minister licensed by the Free Presbytery of Glasgow.

General Booth has been addressing meetings in Glasgow and other towns in Scotland. The attendances of the general public were not so large as formerly.

Pollokshields Free Church, Glasgow, of which Dr. Wells is pastor, has a membership of over 1100, with over 1200 young people attending its Sabbath schools and Bible-classes.

A fellow presbyter of Dr. Denney, of Broughty Ferry, who was also a fellow student at college, recently said the now famed expositor was a marked man when a student, for his piety and his orthodoxy.

The high public esteem in which Dr. J. Hood Wilson, of the Barclay Free Church, Edinburgh (Moderator Elect), is held was seen in a number of presentations made to him last week, including 200 guineas, a court dress, and a Moderator's gown.

At the annual meeting of the Dundee United Evangelistic Association Rev. John Macpherson referred with regret and misgiving to the excessive love of pleasure seen among young people in the present day. Another speaker, Rev. A. S. Inch, said that disunion among Christians and the spirit of criticism were serious hindrances to aggressive work.

At the annual meeting of the Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, a very encouraging report of congregational work was given. There is a membership of about 1270. The church has been open for services of some sort, without a break, every night for the past eleven and a-half years. Mr. Matthew Burnett has been holding a Gospel temperance mission with good results.

Speaking at the opening of a bazaar on behalf of a domestic servants' home in Edinburgh, Dr. Alex. Whyte said he had no patience with the idea that domestics were not so good as they used to be. There was no section of his congregation that he visited with more confidence and delight. "Annie Swan" (Mrs. Burnett Smith) urged that servants should be treated with human sympathy and interest, and not as mere machines.

The annual meeting of Saline Free Church was held in the church on Wednesday last, Rev. J. Calder in the chair. There was a crowded attendance. A most interesting feature was the presentation of a number of handsome books from the Scottish Reformation Society to the Bible class for proficiency in the study of Protestant truth. All the reports showed that the spiritual life and material prosperity of the congregation are in an encouraging state. Praise and prayer wound up a most encouraging meeting.

RESCUE AND EVANGELISATION MISSION AT SHEFFIELD.—The annual report of the work superintended by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Corbridge tells of devoted effort for the reclamation of the fallen. In the course of three years over two hundred young women and over twenty children have received help through the Mission, and eighty per cent. of the cases have turned out well. Poor girls ask to be received into the Home. During the recent severe weather, thousands of distressed and needy people were glad of the relief administered by the Mission. Mr. Corbridge's address is: 250, Duke-street, Sheffield.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Kilrush.—A successful series of Gospel meetings has been held in Kilrush by Rev. John Good, Methodist evangelist.

Mr. H. Collins has concluded a successful mission at Rayne, Braintree. The services have been largely attended and greatly blessed.

Mr. William Forbes began a ten days' mission on Good Friday at Croydon. Afternoon Bible readings are held in addition to the evening meetings.

Liverpool.—Last week, Rev. W. F. Holt, of Nechells, conducted a series of special evangelistic services in St. Peter's, Silvester-street, Liverpool.

Lambeth.—A highly successful ten days' mission has been conducted at Lambeth by Rev. David Smith, of Edenbridge, whose heart is in the work of evangelism, and who has been largely blessed in it.

Henry Smith, having completed a most successful mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Tanfield Lea, where many professed to accept Christ, is now labouring at Brudenell-road Mission, Leeds. The Lord is confirming his Word with signs following.

Chesham, Bucks.—A ten days' mission has been concluded here with very gratifying results. Large congregations assembled night after night to listen to the loving messages and stirring appeals of Revs. J. T. Mateer, W. B. Taylor, W. Dorey, J. W. Colley, and the pastor, H. Trueman.

Mr. George Clarke has completed a series of united mission services in the Morningside, West End, and Newington districts of Edinburgh. Large numbers have professed a saving knowledge of the truth, while the Lord's people have received much spiritual help and stimulus. He was assisted by the ministers of the various districts. D.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey, passing through Fort Worth, Texas, en route to Mexico, held a series of remarkable services in Fort Worth, arousing the whole city and bringing overwhelming crowds to the Auditorium. They have promised to return there and hold a longer mission at the end of April, after the completion of their Mexican missions.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with St. Saviour's Church, Saltley, Birmingham. The work from beginning to end was of a progressive character, in reference both to numbers and blessing, many professing decision for Christ. At the last services the hall was crowded as never before. Mr. Notman has commenced meetings at the Great Assembly Hall.

Garway and Norton.—Successful evangelistic services have been held in the Baptist chapel for five weeks, conducted by Mr. J. Simmonds, of the Evangelisation Society, who also exhibited a beautiful model of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness, and preached from it, taking part by part. The interest was sustained throughout, and the attendance very good. The Word was blessed greatly to Christians of many sects, and to the unsaved.

The Metropolitan Music-Hall Services in connection with the Hyde Park Hall Mission, were brought to a close on Easter Sunday. For twenty years these services, held during the winter months, have been well attended—somewhat interfered with by the exceptionally severe weather of the past winter—with manifest tokens of God's blessing. The faithful Gospel preaching of Mr. Charles Cook and the singing of an excellent choir attracts, impresses, and leads many to decision for Christ. Mr. Cook is leaving London for a much needed rest, his throat giving him considerable trouble.

PERSONALIA.

Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, Bart., treasurer of the C.M.S., has been appointed Governor of South Australia, in the room of the Earl of Kintore, G.C.M.G., whose term of office has expired.

Mr. Henry Harben, of Hampstead, who has taken the greatest interest in the North-West London Convalescent Homes Fund for working men, has decided to erect at his own expense a building at Littlehampton to cost 20,000*l*. The work will be put in hand forthwith.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone hopes to visit the West Indies in the latter part of this year, in order to inquire into the prospects of a steady supply in the future of earnest and devoted Christian men for missionary work. The Bishop will seek to address as many gatherings as possible, in order to explain the situation in Western Africa.

A DRAWING-ROOM MEETING on behalf of the North London Ladies' Settlement in Upper Holloway was held on Tuesday week at 1, Cranley-place, South Kensington. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who presided, dwelt upon the increased demand for women's work all over the world, and the great help that Christian women could give if they would make work for Christ and his Church their life-work.

OBITUARY.

REV. JOSEPH SIMPSON, BOSCOMBE.

On the 6th there passed away, aged 69, at Bournemouth this well-known Wesleyan Methodist minister, who entered the ministry in 1849, and laboured for forty-six years in Wimborne, Aylesbury, Bodmin, St. Mawes, Callington, St. Ives, Wainfleet, Chorley, Biggleswade, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Heywood, Bishop Auckland, Rawtenstall, Newton Abbot, and Leeds. He became a supernumerary in 1889, and then went to Boscombe, near Bournemouth, to reside, where he continued to do active work almost up to the time of his home call.

TROUBLE WITH THE PRIESTS.

Writing from Mostaganem, Provence d'Oran, Algeria, Mr. A. V. Liley says:—Since my last letter the work among the Spaniards which was so flourishing and encouraging has been sadly impeded by orders from the local authorities. All the Spaniards were Roman Catholics, and all the children ought to be attending the classes held by the priest preparatory to their taking the first communion. The Spaniards became so interested in the Gospel that they never went to the mass, and the children were very irregular in going to the priest.

This the priest could not tolerate, and so set the local press against us. Articles untrue and defamatory have been published some time. We thank God they have been unable to find anything against us except "concerning our God," and that we are English. These articles have made the authorities so exacting with regard to our meetings, that we have been utterly unable to comply with their demands and the meetings have been stopped. This has caused much disappointment among the people; the priests seem in a measure to have gained their ends, but have not won increased esteem by such procedure. The Word of God is not bound, and we are cheered by the fact that three Spanish women, after having heard the Gospel, are voluntarily reading the Scriptures to their less instructed neighbours.

You are doing a much-needed work in The Christian by exposing the insinuations of Rome, and in seeking to awaken the Christian Church in England to its duty. We who are living in Roman Catholic countries learn by bitter experience that the Church of Rome has not changed. She formerly wore the gauntlet, but now she wears a glove of silk; the hand, however, is as ever ready to relight the fires to burn the children of God.

LOYALTY TO CHRIST.—Dr. Barbour, writing about Tan Soan Leng, native pastor of a large congregation in Chin-chew, gives a striking instance of the pastor's loyalty to the Gospel. When his wife died last year, he refused to have music at her funeral, believing that the funeral music was not free from idolatrous associations. It was a terrible innovation: even at Christian funerals music had hitherto been universal. Even the Church session urged compliance with the unbroken custom of the land. A funeral in silence, they declared, would be a humiliation to the Church. But Tan remained firm; and the silent solemnity of the procession to the grave profoundly impressed the whole city.

SOUTH AFRICAN AUXILIARY BIBLE SOCIETY.—The forty-eighth report states that during last year 32,120 Bibles and Testaments were issued from the depot in Capetown, and circulated in various parts of the Cape Colony, the Free State, Transvaal, Bechuanaland, and more distant regions. The sum of £870 was received in the form of free contributions, and £2069 for the sale of Bibles, while free grants were made to meet the cases of Christian workers, and reduced charges to meet the necessities of the poor. The society has 160 branches, agencies, and colporteurs, and works in connection with the Bristol and Foreign Bible Society. The secretary of the Auxiliary is Rev. L. Nuttall, Capetown.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For guidance and blessing upon the work of Northcote Willy and James Neech at the Lincoln April Fair, April 20 to 28.—For Mrs. Birt's band of rescued children sailing in s.s. Sardinian on Thursday, 18th inst. for Canada.—For a home and re-engagement in a real Christian family for a Christian German governess.—For blessing on a ten days' mission at the Y.M.C.A., Bury, Lancashire, conducted by Northcote Willy.—That Mr. Matthew Burnett's third week's Evangelistic meetings at Cowcaddens Free Church may result in great blessing. PRAISE.—For much blessing vouchsafed during fortnight's Gospel Temperance Mission at Free Church, Cowcaddens, Glasgow.—For good work at Biarritz, where God is manifest in not a few who are seeing more of Him. Pray that they may be not merely children but servants of God. Pray also for Pau, where Gospel meetings are being held.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY (says the Record) closes, so far as is at present known, another year free from debt. It may be remembered that the fund raised to clear off the deficit of March 31, 1894, left a surplus of £4066. By the aid of that, and by using the contingency fund, the Society can meet its liabilities for the year ending March 31, 1895, with a balance of £230 in hand. The associations are £4000 better this year; benefactions are some £3000 better; legacies nearly identical with 1894. The Society's expenditure seems to have remained at the same level, despite the extension of the work. The Society's friends must now proceed with equal faith and courage to meet the difficulties which another year may bring.

CONSUMPTION, AND
ALL CHEST DISEASES.
INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-SEVENTH INTERVIEW,

With Mrs. BRAME, Darrow Wood Farm, Diss, Norfolk.

A RECORD OF VARIOUS CASES.—A FAMILY MEDICINE.

A reference to one of these cases appeared in the weekly journals of January 22nd, 1891.

Mrs. Brame, with whom I had the pleasure of a short chat recently, is a hale, hearty old lady, over 71 years of age, but looking at least ten years younger. I had been told that Mrs. Brame could give me information about Mr. Congreve's remedies, and this proved to be correct, for in reply to my initial question, the lady told me:—

"My first experience of Mr. Congreve's treatment was in the case of my husband, now deceased. Many years ago, after inflammation of the lungs, we thought it quite impossible he could live, but he took the Elixir, which cured his cough, and he lived to the age of seventy-one, when he died of heart disease. My family is asthmatical, and when I suffer from cough, Mr. Congreve's medicine is the only thing that does me good. Besides this, I have seen its good effects with various members of my family. One son had influenza—the Balsam quite cured the cough, &c., which followed. My daughter had the same complaint while staying with me here last autumn. I advised her to take the medicine; she did so, and recovered. She knows of several remarkable cases of cure in the neighbourhood in which she lives—Enfield."

"I understand, Mrs. Brame, that a girl living near here was recommended by you to write to Mr. Congreve. What was the result?"

"When she first applied I thought there was not the slightest chance for her—all her family suffer from chest disease. However, she got very much better, and if she will only persevere with the medicine I feel sure it will quite restore her."

"Do you happen to know of any other cases, Mrs. Brame?"

"Yes; my youngest son had an attack of pleurisy, and derived great benefit from the medicine; and the 'young widow' referred to in Mr. Congreve's book was still in good health when last I heard from her. (Case 13 of book.)

I thanked Mrs. Brame and took my leave, having first received her permission to make public what she had told me.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

RESCUE HOME
(Late Asylum), Harrow-road, W.

Founded by Rev. Thomas Scott, the Commentator, in 1787.

Thousands of fallen and friendless women have been sheltered and placed out in service. FUNDS ARE URGENTLY REQUIRED, ESPECIALLY ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Treasurers—Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall-mall East, and J. F. W. Deacon, Esq., 20, Birchin-lane, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, or the Secretary will be thankful to receive contributions. c4702

THE "LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND.

Substitutes for lost dividends are being paid half-yearly to some hundreds of destitute victims, 70 years of age and upwards, and will be continued to be sent to them as long as they live.

There are, however, MANY SAD CASES of destitute and invalid victims, between 60 and 70 years of age, for whom we cannot provide, unless we receive further funds IMMEDIATELY.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, and crossed City Bank.

Rev. J. Stockwell Watts (Hon. Sec.), 16, Farringdon-street, E.C. c4195

STARVING AND DESTITUTE, verging on crime and suicide, still young and helpable, could obtain fresh start in life through the Labour Homes of the Church Army if funds permitted. Nearly 1,000,000 meals served yearly, irrespective of creed, with labour test, and Christian sympathy. Donors of 5s. and upwards supplied free with tickets for giving to beggars. £4000 pressingly required for food, clothing, blankets, and maintenance. Staff nearly all unpaid.—Remit, Rev. W. Carlile, Hon. Chief Secretary, Headquarters, 130, Edgware-road, London, W. c4624

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSION TO SOUTH AMERICA.

All who desire to see the Gospel preached to the millions of Indians in South America, and are interested in the spiritual well-being of our fellow-countrymen scattered throughout that vast continent, and who also desire to see its Spanish and Portuguese speaking people brought to a knowledge of the truth, are invited to GIVE THEIR SUPPORT TO THIS SOCIETY, which sends out its Bishop and Clergy and Lay Missionaries to effect these blessed and important objects. Its work at the great ports AMONGST THE SAILORS is deeply valued.

THE MISSION TO THE INDIANS OF ARAUCANIA,

Commenced as a fitting memorial of the Jubilee Year, is intended to gather into the Church of Christ this, the finest of the aboriginal races in South America. The Araucanians were long inaccessible to the missionaries of the Gospel, but are now EVERYWHERE OPEN to welcome them. For this new mission the help of new friends and the increased support of old ones are earnestly sought. The project was dear to the hearts of Captain Allen Gardiner, and his son and grandson, and has been warmly advocated by the Bishop of the FALKLAND ISLANDS. Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "Messrs. Barclay and Co.," and made payable to Captain E. Poulden, R.N., Lay Sec., at the Society's Offices, 1, Clifford Inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C. c4825

Notes and Comments.

We give our readers a final reminder of the Thanksgiving Meetings to be held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, on Wednesday next, at 11, 3, and 7. Particulars will be found in other parts of this issue. If the meetings are to be successful in the highest sense, they must be preceded by much private prayer.

We have it on undoubted and first-hand authority that the worst published accounts of the recent Armenian atrocities do not equal the horrifying facts.

It is with deep regret that we learn from a telegraphic despatch of an accident at one of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Fort Worth, Texas. The roof of the building is said to have collapsed, one person being killed and forty-six others more or less injured. None will be more pained at such an occurrence than the evangelists. Considering the vast number of large and crowded gatherings they have addressed, it is a matter for supreme thankfulness that accidents have been so rare in their meetings.

As the time of the "May Meetings" is here, we should like to suggest a few things which, if observed, will tend to promote their efficiency: 1. Do not put a dull, dead man into the chair simply because he has a long purse. 2. Do not crush the meeting with too many speakers: in choosing them, the usefulness of the meeting, and not pleasing the speakers themselves, should be considered. 3. Have a time-table, on which the time allotted to each speaker shall be marked; otherwise someone is almost sure to take more than his due share of the time; and probably the meeting will end in abortive feebleness. 4. Let there be prayer in the midst of a meeting, as well as at the beginning and the Benediction at the end; many a meeting would thereby be instantly raised in tone and power.

The treaty between Japan and China, which has been ratified, has many interpretations put upon it, and is seen, by different eyes, to possess different possibilities; but still a few things are admitted by all. It is clear that East and West will be brought closer together; the dividing line is fading away. Things done in the "far East" move our Cabinets as mightily as if they had been done in Europe. "God hath made of one blood all nations"—that fact comes out plainer every year. Another thing is that China stands wider open than ever to the influences of the whole world; therefore the Church of Christ should be ready to go in and occupy the land. Merchants are calculating its wealth, and politicians are guessing its fate; Christians must have a determining hand in its future history.

Canon Fremantle, the Dean-designate of Ripon, says that all his life long he has been struggling against the clericalism which goes its own way without regard to the thought and feeling of the people generally, and that he has not found it easy. No; it is never easy to go against an order of men who are entrenched either behind privilege or tradition. But the breath of free speech is good for us all, if so be it is used in kindness, with a sense of fallibility, and with a desire to do the will of God.

The Pope has been showing his great affection for the English people by writing them a letter, which very few of them will read, and which will make many of those who do read it smile at the old-world look of the thing. The fact is, the Pope has been moved by those busy Englishmen who visit him, who would like to see their country again under his heel, and think they see signs of readiness for submission. We doubt if the Pope sees them. We do not deny, indeed we are always pointing out, that there are many proofs of the spread of Papist beliefs and practices among us, but the time for "reunion" is not ripe. This letter, we believe, will delay the ripening. The Pope has been ill-advised to make such a deliverance as the following to a people so enlightened as the English nation:—

> We are pleased of our own will and authority to add still another to the sacred indulgences which have been granted from time to time by our predecessors. We grant, that is, to all those who piously recite the prayer appended to this letter, to whatever nation they may belong, an indulgence of 300 days; moreover, a plenary indulgence once a month on the observance of the usual conditions to those who have recited it daily.

"Indulgences" is a word to excite suspicion mixed with contempt; besides, "reunion" evidently means unqualified submission. The English people have sat too long in the school of experience to relinquish their dearly-bought liberties for the sake of any superficial and artificial uniformity.

The Westminster Gazette is doing good service by showing "Monte Carlo as it is." The exposure of the system by which, in the long run, the bank is sure to win, ought to produce some effect on anyone who is verging in the gambler's direction. The immoral aspect and influence of the place are painted in terrible words:—

> Though he has not been able to efface hereabouts the splendour of creation, man has managed to plant in its bosom the most fatal, the wickedest, and the worst institution which Europe contains, and my brief experience of it—although by no means that of a misanthrope or a Puritan—made me wonder, when I was on the point of leaving Monte Carlo, why the recent earthquake in this region did not blot the whole affair out of existence, and even at the cost of reducing to ruin and chaos the lovely land.

Many European alliances have been formed for the purpose of averting or removing some common danger; could not this "gambling hell—and never was hell more graceful, ornamental, or attractive," a common danger to Europe and the world—be for ever closed?

"A Primer of Evolution" gives us a definition of sin very characteristic of the materialistic school:—

> What man calls sin is shown to be more often due to his imperfect sense of the true proportion of things, and to lack of imagination, than to his wilfulness...The lack of imagination, which is itself largely due to defective training of the intellect, prevents a man from putting himself in the place of others, and deprives him of that sympathy which is essential to the unselfish life.

Had Byron a defective imagination, or Poe? Certainly we need a moral imagination, but that comes from a pure and loving heart, which at once sees and appreciates another's need and danger. A contemporary says that nowhere is the humanising power of science shown more clearly than in its effects upon the old conception of sin; but if sin be only a little defect in imaginative power, we shall soon see those who accept the theory losing what little imagination they possess. We need a new heart and a right spirit, and then the imagination will be full of images of grace and tenderness.

Shall we ever depose the Pagan classics? Their language may be beautiful, but why should our youth be compelled to drink in their heathen ideas and influences? Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge, has raised the question, and we shall be glad if some useful discussion can be started upon it. If the Greeks sharpened their wits without learning a foreign tongue, might not Englishmen do the same? We know a head master of a large public school who thinks they might. If Greeks discussed moral and philosophical questions in the dim light of reason and conscience, why should not Englishmen always discuss them in the clearer light of the Gospel? It is certain we shall have Pagan habits and practices so long as we have Pagan teaching. Dr. Forsyth says:—

> Invaluable as are the ancient classics to a liberal education, it has been to a large extent a misfortune that the classical element has been allowed to preponderate so much in the education of young ministers, in proportion to the New Testament and other great Christian classical fountains. Many ministers of Christianity know a great deal more about the literature of the classics than they do about the New Testament. Our boys in the public schools are taught on the Pagan ideas of heroism—they become young Stoics, and not young Christians.

Mr. Stephen Massey, of Manchester, in a powerful plea for simplicity of living which he has addressed to The Independent, quotes from a missionary friend, who urges that increase of income as life advances should not involve increase in style of living:—

> There must be many people in our churches who though not living as the world would say extravagantly, are yet living in a way that makes it impossible for them to give all that God looks for from them, and the habit of spending grows and becomes a great tyranny; whereas, if a principle of strict simplicity were adopted as a matter of conscience, their lives would be more faithful, and their characters would be much stronger.

Mr. Massey contrasts the experiences of two of his friends, one of whom invested £4000 in a scheme which turned out a fraud, and who is now learning to have done with his childish putting of money into bags with holes; the other "who long ago learned the secret of possessing money instead of being possessed by it, who lives in the simple style of his youth, and who has given sums which would be generally thought immense, to further the Kingdom of Christ in a land where the rulers might at any time seize all the property." Even so, he holds it to be a good investment.

No more useful licensing reform has been suggested for a long time than that proposed last week by the Wandsworth Licensing Justices.

The chairman, Mr. T. H. Thornton, said the bench had fully considered the question of alterations to licensed premises, and had come to the conclusion that they were extending to the victualler a great privilege in sanctioning them. In future the magistrates would require the fronts of all public-houses to be of clear glass for windows and doors above 4ft. 6in. from the ground, similar to restaurants and pastrycooks' shops where refreshments were dispensed. It was only subject to these conditions that they would sanction any alterations.

A little wholesome daylight and publicity would do much to lesson secret tippling. We believe the plan has worked beneficially in many parts of the United States, and we hope it may be widely adopted over here.

The Thanksgiving Meetings.

We give a further selection from the communications that have reached us, expressing a sympathetic interest in the meetings to be held, morning, afternoon, and evening, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, on Wednesday next, May 1:—

Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair:—"All good wishes for so useful and delightful a meeting."

Dr. Barnardo:—"I quite hope to be at the meeting at the Great Assembly Hall."

Pastor Thos. Richardson (Rotherhithe):—"I purpose chartering a special train from here, and will bring over 300 or 400 people."

Rev. J. B. Barraclough (St. Thomas's, Lambeth):—"I hope to be present at one or more of the meetings, and shall encourage my curates and other helpers to come."

Rev. R. Balgarnie:—"I hope to attend the Thanksgiving Meetings."

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin (Hon. Sec. National Council Y.P.S.C.E.):—"I hope to be able to attend the meetings."

Rev. J. W. Ewing (Wandsworth):—"I wish great success to the proposed meetings, and shall be pleased to make them known to my people."

Rev. G. J. Hill (Seamen's Christian Friend Society):—"Having found much joy and help in attending last year's Thanksgiving Meetings, I am anticipating the pleasure of attending the meetings, and hope to be accompanied by many of our missionaries and workers."

Rev. John Wilson (Woolwich):—"I shall be pleased to attend and also to make the meetings known in our district. Hope we may have a gracious season according to our earnest expectation."

From friends in the country also come intimations of interest in the gatherings. For instance, Mr. Duncan Davidson, of Banchory, Aberdeenshire, writes:—"We hope to keep that day in unity with you all."

Mr. George Hatton (late superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission):—"What joy it would give me (if it were possible) to attend the Thanksgiving Meetings on the 1st May."

Captain Hawes (Weybridge):—"I am rejoiced to see that another meeting for 'praise, prayer, and testimony' is about to take place. Wherever those who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity are gathered together, owning 'the unity of the Spirit' (without which we cannot expect any real blessing), we may look for a special work of the Holy Spirit, and such a work as will put man, sects, and gifts in the background. With many conferences, missions, and organisations, man and gifts have become more and more prominent, almost to a partial exclusion of the Holy Spirit's power."

Mr. W. W. Ashley (Tunbridge Wells):—"I write to express an earnest hope that the meetings to be held on May 1 may not pass without some permanent result in inducing some of God's people to give themselves to constant persevering prayer. I would like to suggest that those attending the meetings be asked specifically to give at least an hour each week, at such time as may best suit them, to shut themselves up alone with God to plead for revival, and for the fulfilment of his promises. Our Lord says, 'If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible unto you.' No one has ever fathomed the depth of God's promises? but can we not try to understand something of them. At all events, we can tell our Lord that He knows what and how much they mean, and ask Him to fulfil them."

The Revival in 1859.—III.

While the characteristics of the Revival, both in town and country, were generally the same, the beginnings of the movement in congregations and localities were frequently marked by features of special interest. Out of many a few typical instances may be noted.

The pastor of a church at M——, a thinly-peopled inland parish in this county, became unusually concerned about the welfare of his flock. Other places were sharing in the gracious visitation; was his people to be passed by? This question he pondered with many searchings of heart. His anxiety deepened into distress. The burden of souls became so oppressive that for a whole week he could not pursue his usual studies and occupations; he could only pray. On Saturday he spent five hours on his knees, confessing his own sins and the sins of his people. On entering the pulpit next day he became conscious of an unwonted solemnity. The preaching was in demonstration of the Holy Ghost and in power. At the close of the service several of those reserved, stolid country people came forward, unbidden, to inquire. A remarkable work of grace in the congregation followed, spreading over the parish and district.

In the town of C——, a minister who had visited Ireland was one Lord's day narrating to his congregation some incidents in the revival which he had witnessed in the sister island, when a loud voice was heard. It was the cry of a young man suddenly awakened to a sense of his sin and danger. The congregation, already solemnised, were startled and alarmed. It proved to be the signal of the Holy Spirit in the beginning of a great revival in that town. For many weeks the entire community was moved. On the streets, in the shops, in every house, in the fishing-boats, nothing was talked of but conversion, salvation, and all that is vital in religion. The fruits of this work were abundant and permanent; the tone of the place was changed and raised; and some of the young converts, consecrating themselves to the work of the ministry, went forth to occupy the high places of the field, both at home and abroad.

Deeply interested in the true prosperity of their congregation, several elders and members of a church in the town of D—— spent a night in prayer, imploring a special token of grace on the coming Lord's day. The token was granted. While the congregation were listening in perfect stillness to an unimpassioned discourse on the blessedness of a people near to God, a piercing cry was heard. It was the voice of a woman, who, believing herself to be a lost soul, appealed for mercy and help. A great awakening followed, and continued for years, the beneficent effects of which, too numerous and wide-spread to be detailed here, are manifest to this day.

In the history of Christianity in Scotland no more remarkable work of grace has been witnessed than the movement in the Wynds of Glasgow. Here, in those revival days, amidst the ungodliness and vice, the indescribable squalor and misery of the slums, a congregation was gathered through the labours of the late Mr. McColl. And this was only the beginning of a marvellous work of evangelisation carried on by a succession of singularly gifted ministers who each in turn built up a church from the rubbish of the slums and then removed to a new sphere to repeat the experiment there. This extraordinary work, born of revival, has been carried on in the power of the Holy Spirit up till the present time. Here, if anywhere, is found the solution of the slum question, as the results clearly demonstrate. The outcome of the revival was seen, and is still to be seen, not only in new churches gathered and new evangelistic agencies brought into successful operation in town and country, but also in the moral and material elevation of entire communities. Witness many of the fishing villages on the north-east coast. "Was there any reality in the revival here?" said a stranger on a visit to a northern village. "Do you see those rows of cottages?" was the reply of a resident, who pointed to streets of snug little villas and houses. "That is the revival in stone and lime."

The movement reached sinners of all sorts. It sobered the drunkard. It changed the thief into an honest man, and raised the fallen woman to honour and virtue. The profane became reverent, and the sceptic turned preacher. From all ranks it called forth witnesses to the power of the Gospel; such as Brownlow North, the first swallow of that bright summer, and Robert Cunningham, the prize-fighter, who used to point with his finger to his blind eye, saying, "Ah! freens, the devil is a hard master; I lost an e'e in his service."

Some of the more marked and permanent results of the revival may be noted:—

1. A fuller, freer, more vigorous, more joyful spiritual life.
2. It showed men that the only source of life and progress in the Church of Christ is the Holy Spirit.
3. It clearly proved that the winter of religious apathy may suddenly pass into the spring of a new and fruitful life.
4. It illustrated and attested the truth that the grace of God can save the worst of sinners.
5. It initiated an era of increased prayer in connection with Christian work in all its departments.
6. It created a closer, warmer union among Christians of different denominations.
7. It introduced and established the useful practice of presenting requests for public prayer.
8. It gave a powerful impetus to evangelistic work of every kind, rousing the Church to more aggressive effort, especially in the open-air.
9. It taught the churches the wisdom and duty of looking for results in the work of winning souls and called into existence the meeting for inquirers.
10. It summoned the lay-evangelist into the field, crowning his labours with remarkable success.
11. It led to the united, systematic, prayerful study of the Scriptures, drawing thousands of Christians from the insufficient rills of religious literature to the fountain-head itself.
12. It deepened the interest of many in the conversion of the heathen and paved the way for the recent revival in the work of Foreign Missions.

But although the fruits of the Revival in 1859 remain, it is evident on all hands that there is urgent, infinite need of another and a greater spiritual awakening. In these days, when some are preaching the poverty-stricken Gospel "Be good," and some are teaching that hell is only a roundabout way to heaven; when some see in the Cross nothing but a worm-eaten monument crumbling in its rottenness on the distant hilltop of an antiquated theology, and many who partake of the Lord's Supper regard the doctrine of regeneration as a barbarism, and every allusion to the blood of Christ as a vulgarity; when, on the one hand, the higher critics, like men who cannot tell stars from street lamps, seem unable to distinguish between the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures and their own insight, while on the other hand, the sacerdotalists are striving, only too successfully to bring back the mass and the confessional; when the world within the Church is, vampire-like, sucking its life-blood, and the world without, in its mad pursuit of pleasure and pelf, is reeling intoxicated to open destruction, is it not high time for the Church of the living God to awake and arise and raise a cry loud enough to shake the clouded heavens and bring down the needed showers of blessing?

THE UNVEILING.—16.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—THE FIRST WOE.

IV.

Our brother and fellow-servant John has been made to see for our sakes the working of these scorpion-like locust-lusts of the heart, that unfathomable abyss within, whose native thoughts and imaginations are only evil, and that continually. It is now given him to observe more particularly their shapes.

The composite forms of the cherubim combine in one obedient and beneficent ideal the majesty and force of the lion, the patient industry of the ox, the intelligence and ruling power of the man, the soaring flight and far-seeing vision of the eagle—a living creature filled with the Spirit, and accomplishing the purposes of God. In them all the forms of animated life created on the earth, and seen by the Creator to be very good, are united in one harmonious whole, and constitute a living being filled, governed, impelled, empowered, by the Spirit of God.

These ideal scorpion locusts, on the other hand, have no such vital homogeneity or harmony. Their shapes are described with Divine accuracy, and each symbol used in delineating them is full of unexpressed suggestion and significance.

The remarkable appropriateness of the locust to be used as a symbol of the manifold lusts of men may be seen by the following quotation:—

"If you carefully consider the head of the locust, says Theodoret, a Bishop of Syria, "you will find it exceedingly like that of a horse." Whence the Arabs of old, and to this day, say, "In the locust, slight as it is, is the nature of ten of the larger animals—the face of a horse, the eyes of an elephant, the neck of a bull, the horns of a deer, the chest of a lion, the belly of a scorpion, the wings of an eagle, the thighs of a camel, the feet of an ostrich, the tail of a serpent."

These locust-lusts are not creatures of God. They are the product of fallen human nature deceived and depraved by the liar and murderer from the beginning; and they are filled, governed, impelled, empowered, by the spirit which worketh in the children of disobedience.

[The reader is particularly requested to compare what follows with the explanations of the symbols given in No. 14 of these papers.]

They are like horses prepared for battle. St. Augustine, describing the days of his ungodliness, uses, consciously or unconsciously, this very figure, and says, "I threw the reins upon the neck of lust." He had thrown himself upon the back of a fiery and impetuous steed, as of a war-horse which smelled the battle from afar, and he gave himself up completely to its will. So of wilful and disobedient Israel, Jeremiah (vii. 9) said, "Every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth to the battle."

They wear a royal golden crown of absolute authority. They do not confine themselves to the energy of self-will to which men yield, as in the experience of St. Augustine, but when conscience protests and pleads against sin, they say, "You must." And the poor slave obeys.

But they are not content with mere despotic rule over an unwilling victim. With the face of man to man (and the face is used to express the whole of man), it talks and argues with you, and persuades you, and convinces you, that the gratification of desire is wise and necessary and right. It makes self-pleasing, not God-pleasing, the standard, and gives counsel and advice to which the treacherous, pleasure-loving, and worldly heart is only too willing to consent. "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." Jonadab's counsel to Amnon (2 Sam. xiii.) is an apt illustration of the way in which the lusts of the heart talk to men, as distinctly as if they were another personality within themselves.

They have hair as the hair of women. What Bathsheba was to David, Delilah to Samson, Jezebel to Ahab, the mystic Jezebel to the Church at Pergamos, the women of Moab to Israel at Bethpeor, the daughters of men to the sons of God, such are the attractive and fascinating desires of the flesh or of the mind to those who fulfil them. Milton and Isaac Watts both speak of the ensnaring tangles of Neæra or Amyra's hair. Even when writhing under the pain of the scorpion sting, men gloat over the remembrance of the pleasures of sin which they enjoyed for a season, and when memory becomes agony, and the tormented spirit agonises to forget, and to blot the terrible past out of remembrance, they cannot die to it; it refuses to be forgotten.

> Forget the dead, the past! oh yet
> There are ghosts that will take revenge for it:
> Regrets that glide through the spirit's gloom,
> Memories that make the heart a tomb,
> And with ghastly whispers tell
> That joy once lost is pain.

"Their abominations were even as they loved" (Hos. ix. 10), and in the intervals of remorse they apostrophise their lost but unforgotten love, and say, as in the words of an American poet, which might have been written expressly for them:—

> Oh, you tangled my life in your hair, Janet;
> 'Twas a silken and golden snare, my pet;
> But so gentle the bondage, my soul did implore
> The right to continue your slave evermore,
> With my fingers enmeshed in your hair, Janet.

The bon vivant, tortured with gout, remembers how he held up his wine to the light and rejoiced in its delicate bee's-wing; and lives his hours of palate pleasure over again in the intervals of his paroxysms of pain. And so of every other palled desire of the flesh or of the mind.

So truly human are these locust lusts. Yet are they also utterly, intensely, savagely, inhuman. They have the teeth of lions beneath the friendly face of the man and the fascinating tresses of the woman. How fitly does the Apostle call them "deceitful lusts."

Listening to the companionable and persuasive talk of the lust warring against his soul, and with his fingers enmeshed in its siren hair, Samson was denuded of his own Nazarite hair, and sold to the Philistines, who put out his eyes, and made him grind in the prison house. The lion's teeth were manifest when David slew Uriah with the sword of Amnon. In Amnon when he tore his sister's reputation, and wrecked her life. In Jezebel when she treacherously and inhumanly murdered Naboth, that Ahab might take the vineyard for which he lusted. In Balaam, when through the daughters of Moab he enticed Israel to sin against God to their destruction.

But the lions' teeth of these savage locust lusts not only cause men to tear others, but themselves. It was the turbulent passion of Samson's own heart that put out his eyes and brought him to his shame and death. Balaam's lust of the wages of unrighteousness led him to death by the sword of judgment. The pitiless lions' teeth tore David's heart when Amnon had no pity on Tamar; nor Absalom on Amnon; nor Joab on Absalom. The sword never departed from David's house, and how his soul was torn the penitential Psalms make known. When dogs licked the blood of Ahab in Samaria and ate the flesh of Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, we see the cruel working—the lions' teeth—of their own desires, ambitions, and self-will.

They have iron breastplates. The revealing angel must go outside of all animated nature to find symbols to express the character and quality of these inhuman, unnatural, devilish lusts, which come forth from the furnace raging in the bottomless pit of the desperately wicked human heart.

The breastplate of the high priest was the first and chief of the holy garments. With the names of Israel upon his shoulders for security and upon his heart for complacency, and with Holiness to the Lord upon his forehead, he appeared in the presence of God for Israel, that they may be accepted before the Lord (Ex. xxviii.). In his first vision John had seen our Great High Priest as with the tender breasts of a woman, and even the seven angels who pour out the seven last plagues (xv.) have human breasts. But these hell-born lusts have no human pity or Divine compassion. Impervious, impenetrable, impenitent, they are mail proof against law and grace. They are in absolute contrast to the breastplate of faith and love and righteousness.

The sound of their wings is as the sound of chariots of many horses rushing to war. At first they were like horses prepared for battle. But they multiply in number, and intensify in tumultuous energy and passion. With emulation and jealousy, like horses in war chariots, they strive to outrun each other; united only in one deadly purpose and endeavour, they war against the soul.

They have tails like scorpions and stings and in their tails is their power to hurt men five months. The repetitions of Scripture are for the sake of emphasis. Three times the tormenting scorpion is mentioned, and twice the period of five months. Evidently the sting is inflicted when the lust has run its course, for the power to hurt is in the scorpion's tail. Therefore the five months of torment begin, not with the indulgence of the lust, but with the sting which follows; not with the illusion, but with the disillusion. And as the five senses are the medium of self-gratification, so the five months' torment from the scorpion sting indicates that the result is according to the cause. As the pleasures of sin were enjoyed for a season, so God, who appointed the moon for seasons, measures out the reaping of these months of torment in accordance with the seed that was sown. For whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.

This mighty and terrible army is generalled by super-human experience and skill. Their Wellington is Abaddon; their Napoleon is Apollyon. No matter how numerous an army may be, how well equipped, how thoroughly disciplined and drilled, its success depends upon the mind that leads it. Moltke, not the Prussian soldiers, conquered France. It is the angel of the bottomless pit who marshals and directs the terrible hosts of fleshly lusts which war against the soul. Malignant hate against the God of love is the ruling passion of his breast. His name, whether in Hebrew or in Greek, is Destroyer. The whole world is included in these two divisions. Jew and Gentile comprise all mankind. This angel, fallen out of heaven upon the earth, is the destroyer of the human race. He is a liar and a murderer from the beginning. He gives no quarter. With consummate subtlety he lays his plans. Ambushments cunningly devised, assaults at unawares, midnight attacks, pit-falls, mines, are more his method than open warfare, though from this latter he does not shrink when needful to his designs.

This generation does not like to hear of a real personal Destroyer. Many have been offended by the Revised Version teaching us to pray, "Deliver us from the evil one." But it is a fact that the very same old Serpent and Dragon, the Devil and Satan, who compassed the fall of our first parents in the garden, who stood before the woman to devour the Man-Child Jesus as soon as He was born, goeth about seeking whom he may devour, and deceives men by their lusts, that they may be tormented by the sting thereof.

It is a general complaint of evangelical preachers now, that men have no adequate sense of sin, and that the preaching is devoid of convicting power. Conviction of sin is almost a lost experience. If preachers would study in themselves and others the old man which waxeth corrupt according to the lusts of deceit, and consider the heterogeneous features of these lusts, so accurately pictured in the vision before us, they might find the Spirit using them to convict the world of sin as they never were before. Celibacy in the Romish Church.

"A Catholic Priest" gives some instructive reading in a letter which appeared in The Daily Chronicle of the 17th inst. Contradicting rumours of a proposed relaxation of "the discipline of celibacy" in the Roman Church, The Catholic Times said:—

The whole affair is a fabrication woven by some Protestants who would fain have all the advantages of reunion without sacrificing a jot of their errors on the one hand, or their peculiar practices on the other. That celibacy is the point where the shoe pinches we know well enough, but before the Anglican Church is ready for reunion she must consider whether her clergy are willing to tread the narrow way in which Catholic priests must walk. Celibacy is an observance which has been maintained so many centuries that it is hardly likely to be relaxed to suit the Anglican parson's love of good things, the best of which the Catholic priest renounces for the love of Christ.

The reports above mentioned may, indeed, be merely a fabrication woven by Protestants, but they may have been woven by Catholics, in which latter case the wish was probably father to the thought. If there were any evidence that a particle of truth lay under them, 50,000 priests in Europe would jump for joy. There are men, we know, who are naturally celibates, and when such as these are Catholics, and good religious men, they have no difficulty. But the celibacy of the clergy has always been to some extent a sham, and its profession a hypocrisy. . . . It has caused almost all the defections and apostasies that have ever taken place from among the clergy, and has deprived the Church of some of her most brilliant and devoted ministers. . . .

To say that the Catholic priest renounces "the best" of good things "for the love of Christ" is mere fiction. Two out of every three of us, to put the matter mildly, do so in order to get a living: and it is safe to say that the majority of those who have made the renunciation have been inveigled into doing so. The modus operandi is this: A certain number of boys of ten or twelve years of age, mostly of artisan parentage, are picked up by the clergy and sent to a preparatory school, called in France a petit séminaire. There, and afterwards at a higher school, called a grand séminaire, they receive, if they show capacity, perseverance, and the requisite docility, a fairly liberal education, together with a religious and theological training...They are taught to look upon every act or word, or even momentary thought which may lead in the direction of marriage, as a mortal sin. So continuously is this doctrine dinned into their ears that probably ninety per cent. at the time of their ordination actually believe it, and the other ten per cent. imagine they do. They "make a compact with their eyes," etc.; but in two or three years there comes a rude awakening. But what can the poor men do? Their education unfits them for any other walk in life...

A priest may do many things and be forgiven; but let him honestly marry, and the Church does her best to execrate him. She will not, under any circumstances, give him leave to withdraw into lay communion and marry. Stay he must, and be saved if he can; if he ceases to live as a priest, he shall not be saved if the Church can help it. So a good many go in despair—more than Catholics dream of; and a good many stay in despair, and make the best of a very bad job.

Here is a writer "who has known what clerical celibacy is, in various types of men, for nearly half a century." He addresses himself particularly to "those good Anglicans who desire reunion with Rome," and pertinently concludes:—

In the Catholic Church there is no such thing as public opinion. No Catholic paper would dare to publish this letter, and if the writer of it were known to his bishop it would be woe betide the writer.

And woe betide "the good Anglicans" who become ensnared in the meshes of this apostate system.

The Opium Commission Report.

The Times of Monday devoted a column and a-half to a summary of this Report, and another column and a-half to the Report on the inquiry into the use of hemp drugs. There was also a leading article on the reports, accepting their conclusions, and commending them to the British public. The Reports being in favour of things as they are, The Times is highly satisfied with them. "The Royal Commissioners have agreed, almost unanimously, on a report rejecting the demands of the anti-opium fanatics. The only dissentient is Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P. for the Holmfirth division of Yorkshire." His views, The Times says, "will carry very little weight in opposition to the unanimous judgment of eight persons, chosen for their competence and impartiality, who have adopted the general conclusions adverse to the proposals of the prohibition party." All this, of course, is what we expected; it is the usual thing in regard to every reform. One important omission, however, has been made. It is not stated that besides Mr. Wilson's "Minute of Dissent" there is in the Report a "Memorandum" from Mr. Haridas, one of the Indian Members, which agrees in several important points with Mr. Wilson's "Minute." Mr. Wilson is, therefore, not quite the only dissentient.

The Commission think it has "not been shown to be necessary or to be demanded by the people that the growth of the poppy and manufacture and sale of opium in British India should be prohibited except for medical purposes." Mr. Wilson does not attach to the evidence on which this conclusion rests a very great deal of value. He declares that the "pro-opiumist" witnesses "represented the great majority of the official classes, both European and native, including military medical officers, together with many titled personages, landowners, and persons who considered that their financial interests were at stake." The public will, sooner or later, come to think that a Report which represents so much vested interest can have no more weight than a report on alcohol would have which was largely based on the evidence of brewers, publicans, and shareholders in breweries. On this question of the foundation of the Report, and the nature of the evidence on which it is based, The Star has the following serious remarks:—

The Government of India selected and revised beforehand the evidence which was given, tutored witnesses, "shadowed" independent investigators, and, in spite of these tactics, had the effrontery to state that its intention was to enable the Royal Commission "to fully ascertain the actual facts." Now, of two things, one. Either the Government of India ought to have admitted frankly at the outset that it was on its trial and would defend itself; or it ought to have taken up, and maintained consistently, an attitude of rigorous impartiality. As it is, it professed to be impartial, and so got Lord Brassey and most of his colleagues—though not, we are glad to find, that unsurpassably conscientious and painstaking inquirer, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P.—under its thumb, while it was throughout defending itself in a thoroughly partisan fashion.

A reading of The Times' summary, which is pro-Government, justifies the last clause of that extract, and as for the first sentence, the country will be determined to know the truthfulness of its assertions; if they are proved, a great many more things than the opium traffic will be involved.

The same doubt is cast upon the report when we read in The Times that "the Europeans in India are also, on the whole, strenuously opposed to prohibition, as also the leading mercantile bodies, and the community of planters." This is just like the language held by similar bodies of men on every reform, and is only empty wind.

One of the most striking things in both Reports—that on opium, and that on hemp drugs—is the strong language used about alcohol; it is not quite so strong as the phrase, "distilled damnation," but it will please teetotallers. When The Times takes to writing of "the fierce stimulant of alcohol, which has proved the ruin of every tropical population that has taken to it," we almost hope it may throw its enormous influence on the side of the Local Veto Bill. But second thoughts say, "No; it only curses alcohol in the East in order to bless opium, ganja, and bhang."

One thing is certain: this Report has not disposed of the prohibitionists, because it is not an impartial document. The Commission, as constituted, was not of their seeking, but "was a compromise by Mr. Gladstone, to avert a defeat in the lobbies," and was opposed by them. Their opposition was justified by what the Commission has done.

CHINESE MISSIONS.

The four-days' Convention (Liverpool, April 15-19) for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was more crowded than in any previous year, especially the two missionary meetings. The audiences were almost electrified by the description of Rev. Wm. Murray's new invention of putting the Chinese language on paper in Roman numerals and dots, whereby any Chinese can learn to read his Bible in six or eight weeks. Mr. Murray, just in from Pekin, was present, and Mr. Marcus Wood, of the C.I.M., gave it as his opinion that the invention would probably be a wonderful assistance to the missionaries as well as others, for teaching the people to read.

Mr. Murray is returning with new printing presses to produce the books quicker in Pekin.

CHINESE MISSIONARIES AND THE WAR.

Writing from Pekin, Rev. Evan Bryant, of the L.M.S., says:—"Thus far we have been kept in safety and in peace, and some of us, at any rate, believe that this is due to the gracious protective influence of our Heavenly Father. In this city our daily preaching, thus far, has in no wise been interfered with, and the people, as yet, have shown no signs of ill will, since the first few days after the war broke out. Further, there were certainly indications of unfriendliness; but clear and straightforward proclamations, indicating the friendly attitude of the Government towards all foreigners, except the Japanese, acted like magic on the people, and great outward quietness among them was the immediate result."

CONFERENCE OF EVANGELISTS.—Communications from preachers of the Gospel from all parts of the country seem to indicate that the proposed conference on Thursday, May 2, will be of general interest. The sessions of the conference will be at 10 a.m., 2.30 p.m., and 6.30 p.m. It is particularly requested that friends will make the meetings known to those of their acquaintance who are preachers of the Gospel. Tickets may be obtained of Mr. James B. Wookey, care of Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

"From that Day Forward."

(1 Sam. xvi. 13.)

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

From whatever side we view the life of David, it is remarkable. It may be that Abraham excelled him in faith; and Moses in the power of concentrated fellowship with God; and Elijah in the fiery force of his enthusiasm. But none of these was so many-sided as the richly-gifted son of Jesse. We have only to compare the ninetieth Psalm with the eighteenth or twenty-third, and we instantly detect the contrast between Moses the man of God and David the darling of Israel, the man after God's own heart.

Few have had so varied a career as he: shepherd and monarch; poet and soldier; champion of his people, and outlaw in the caves of Judæa; beloved of Jonathan, and persecuted by Saul; vanquishing the Philistines one day, and accompanying them into battle on another. But in all he seemed possessed of a special power with God and man which could not be accounted for by the fascination of his manner, the beauty of his features, the rare gifts with which his nature was dowered, or the spiritual power which was so remarkable an attribute of his heart. We touch these many chords, but the secret still eludes us until we read the momentous words that sum up the result of a memorable day that lay as a jewel in the obscure years of opening youth. "The Spirit of the Lord came mightily on David from that day forward."

I. It Began like any Ordinary Day.—No angel-trumpet heralded it; no faces looked out of heaven; the sun arose that morning according to his wont over the purple walls of the hills of Moab, making the cloud-curtains saffron and gold. With the first glimmer of light the boy was on his way to lead his flock to pasture-lands heavy with dew. As the morning hours sped onwards many duties would engross his watchful soul, strengthening the weak, healing that which was sick, binding up that which was broken, and seeking that which was lost; or the music of his song may have thrilled the listening air. "A cunning player on the harp was he."

A breathless messenger suddenly broke upon this pastoral scene, with the tidings of Samuel's arrival at the little town, and that the prophet had refused to eat of the hastily-prepared banquet until the shepherd boy had joined the bidden guests. His father had therefore sent to summon him with all speed. How the young eyes must have flashed with pleasure! Never before had he been wanted and sent for thus. Till now he had been only "the lad that kept the sheep." The family life had been complete without him. His father and brothers had followed their pursuits and pleasures in almost total disregard of the young son and brother who was destined to make their names immortal. He had borne it all in patience. His heart was not haughty, neither his eyes lofty, neither did he exercise himself in great matters, or in things too high for him; but quieted himself as a child that is weaned from its mother. Still, it was a genuine pleasure to feel that the family circle in great Samuel's eyes was not complete till he had come. He therefore left his sheep with the messenger, and started at full speed for home.

Samuel on his coming had sanctified Jesse and his sons, passing them through a series of ceremonial ablutions to fit them for the festival in which the social and sacred elements combined. But David needed none of these. His pure and guiltless soul was right with God, and clad in the spotless robe of purity. No soil needed punctilious removal. Let us so live as to be prepared for whatever the next hour may bring forth. The spirit in fellowship with God, the robe stainlessly pure, the loins girt, the lamp trimmed. The faithful fulfilment of the common-places of daily life is the best preparation for any great demand that may suddenly break in upon our lives.

II. It Was the Consummation of Previous Training.—We must not suppose that now, for the first time, the Spirit of God wrought in David's heart. To think this would indicate complete misconception of the special teaching of this incident, for Scripture always distinguishes between the regenerating and the anointing grace of the Holy Spirit. From his earliest days, David had probably been the subject of his quickening and renewing work, but he had probably never experienced, before the day of which we treat, that special unction of the Holy One symbolised in the anointing oil, and indispensable for all successful spiritual work.

Our Lord was born of the Spirit, but his anointing for service did not take place till at the age of thirty, and on the threshold of his public work, He emerged from the waters of baptism. It was to this He referred in the opening words of his earliest sermon, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, and He hath anointed Me." The Apostles were certainly regenerate before the day of Pentecost, but they had to wait within closed doors until they were endued with power for the conversion of men. Full often have we met with those who were unmistakably the children of God, but who had no special power in witness-bearing, nor freedom in speech, nor ability to grapple with the hearts and consciences of men. They needed what would be to them as electricity to the wire or the spark to gunpowder. In other words, the Spirit of God has been in but not on them. We have seen such awake and claim the Divine anointing, and suddenly they have begun to speak with new tongues, and men have not been able to resist their reasonings of sin, righteousness, and judgment to come.

This blessed anointing for service cannot be ours except there has been a previous gracious work on the heart. There must be the new life—the life of God. There must be docility, humility, fidelity to duty, cleansing from known sin, and a close walk with God. The descending flame must fall upon the whole burnt-offering of a consecrated life. And it was because all these had been wrought in David by the previous work of the Holy Spirit, that he was prepared for this special unction. It may be, reader, that in the obscurity of your life, shut away from the presence of great interests, you are being prepared for a similar experience. Be careful to obey God's least prompting, whether to do or suffer, that you be prepared for the golden moment when your meek head shall be suddenly bathed in the descending chrism.

III. It was Ministered Through Samuel.—The old prophet had conferred many benefits on his native land, but none could compare in importance with his eager care for its youth. The creation of the schools of the prophets was due to him. Saul, in the earlier years of his manhood, felt the charm and spell of the old man's character. The stalwart sons of Jesse's house were, therefore, probably well known to him when he received the Divine command to anoint one of them as Saul's successor.

Driving a heifer before him, he entered the one long street of Bethlehem, and summoned the elders to a feast, so as not to arouse the suspicions of the jealous, moody king, who would not have scrupled to take his life if he had suspected the real object of his visit.

When David reached the village a strange scene met his eye. There was his father Jesse, and his seven brothers, probably waiting for him in the ancestral home, preparatory to their all going together to the public banquet to which the leading men of the village had been invited. An unusual restraint lay upon the rough tongues and harsh behaviour with which Eliab and the rest were wont to treat him. At other times they would not have hesitated to express their impatience and contempt, but now the very air seemed heavy with a sacred spell that held them. No sooner had he entered flushed with exertion, health glowing on his face, genius flashing from his eye, royalty in his mien, than the Lord said to Samuel, "Arise, anoint him; for this is he!" Then Samuel took the horn of oil which he had brought with him from Nob, and poured its contents on the head of the astonished lad.

It is likely that the bystanders did not realise the significance of that act; or on the eve of the fight with Goliath Jesse would hardly have treated him so unceremoniously, and Eliab would have addressed him with more courtesy. But David probably understood. Josephus indeed tells us that the prophet whispered in his ear the meaning of the sacred symbol. Did the aged lips approach the young head, and as the trembling hand pushed back the clustering locks, did they whisper in the lad's ear the thrilling words, "Thou shalt be king!" If so, in after days how they would return to him, and how vast an inspiration they would be, a formative influence, a preparation for the great destiny that awaited him. But God never presents a great ideal to the soul without being prepared to supply the grace through which it is to be achieved in the life.

The descent of the oil was symbolical; in other words it had no spiritual efficacy, but was the outward and visible sign that the Spirit of God had come mightily on the shepherd-lad. For Jesus, there was no oil; but instead, the appearance of a dove flitting gently to its nest. For the disciples, on the day of Pentecost, there was no oil; but a flame of lambent fire alighting on each bowed head. During the apostolic age, the symbol of the special enduement of the Spirit was the imposition of hands (Acts viii. 17; xix. 6). In the process of the age these outward symbols have become mechanical and have passed from general use. We must believe that we have received when we have fulfilled the conditions. We must dare to reckon on the faithfulness of God to bestow the special power which He has taught us to yearn for, and has led us to claim by a definite act of faith. Let us gladly, however, recognise the power of a good man to make an epoch in our lives, by definitely seeking for, and with us, the anointing of the Spirit of God. A day spent with Samuel may date a new epoch for David. Thus we minister to each other (Gal. iii. 5).

From that memorable day David returned to his sheep; and as the months went slowly by, must sometimes have greatly wondered when the hour of achievement would arrive. When would he have an opportunity of displaying and using his new-found force? He had to learn that we are sometimes strengthened with all might to patience and long-suffering as the prelude to heroic deeds; we have to wrestle with the lion and the bear on the hills of Bethlehem that we may be prepared to meet Goliath in the valley of Elah.

IV.—It was a Day of Rejection.—Seven of Jesse's sons were passed over. Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, were called; but God chose then, as ever, the weak, the base, the things that were despised. Seven is the perfect number; the seven sons of Jesse stand for the perfection of the flesh. This must be cut down to the ground lest it should glory in God's presence. The lesson is hard to learn, but its acquisition is imperative. You cannot bear it? Well, be it so; then, like Eliab, you may become one of the princes of Judah, but you shall never be God's beloved (1 Chron. xxvii. 18).

In this secret anointing of David, the first of three, we have a type of the setting apart of our Lord in the Divine counsels. Rejected of men, despised of his brethren, without form or comeliness, He has been set apart as the King of the Ages. As yet many a barrier lies between Him and the acknowledgment which the Father has promised, but to Him every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that He is Lord.

FACTORY GIRLS' COUNTRY HOLIDAY FUND has issued its report. It was started in 1888 by Miss Canney in order to send into the country thirty-eight girls of her own Girls' Club in Saffron Hill, and has grown year by year, extending its benefits to many other clubs and centres. "By its means we are enabled to give a week's or fortnight's holiday in the country to many girls and women who would not otherwise have change. The number of girls and women sent into the country this year is more than half as many again as in the year before. We have this year benefited 704 girls and women, covering 1145 weeks; as against 463 girls and women, covering 758 weeks last year." THE COMING OF THE LORD.

A POWERFUL INCENTIVE TO HOLINESS.

By PASTOR W. FULLER GOOCH.

The coming of the Lord is a many-sided theme, and may be viewed from many aspects. To not a few, we fear, it is a theme for speculation and controversy rather than for believing acceptance and practical application. Not until it is seen to be an integral part of revelation, as much a doctrine of Holy Writ as any other part of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," can it rightly influence and direct our heart and life. Not as a subject to be curiously turned over and criticised, or toyed with as an intellectual pastime, but as one of the verities of our holy religion, one of the things most surely believed among us, must it be regarded and pursued, ere we shall be spiritually the better for its apprehension.

As the late lamented Dr. Gordon has said: "The second coming of Christ is the crowning event of redemption; and the belief of it constitutes the crowning article of an Evangelical creed. For we hold that the excellence of faith is according to the proportion of the Lord's redemptive work which that faith embraces . . . . Blessed are they who, believing all that has gone before—life, death, and resurrection—can joyfully add this confession also: 'We have a great High Priest who is passed through the heavens,' and thrice blessed they who can join to this confession still another: 'From whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ.' For it is the essential part of our Redeemer's priesthood that, having entered in, to make intercession for his people, He shall again come forth to bless them."

Nowhere in Scripture is the subject of our Lord's return in glory dealt with other than on practical lines, no one of the sacred writers treats it argumentatively, but always by way of positive assertion for application to the conscience, or stimulus to life purpose and devotion. The Old Testament writers so used it in application to the people of God and to the world of their own day, while in the New Testament it is the main point of all exhortation and injunction to

A GODLY WALK AND CONVERSATION.

So constantly is this the case that it has been said that "a careful computation has shown that one verse in every twenty-five, or about three hundred verses of the New Testament, speak of this future event." Or to quote another writer, "The solemn maranatha resounds throughout the Scriptures, and forms the keynote in all their exhortations, consolations, warnings."

The largest portion of our Lord's recorded utterances bear upon his Second Coming, both in parable and precept. The "Acts of the Apostles" shows how prominently they kept it to the front in their preaching and teaching. The Epistles interweave it with all their doctrinal and practical teachings. The Book of Revelation has it for its one grand and solemn purport, its final word, and that of the whole canon of the New Testament, being, "He which testifieth of these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." In these last words of inspired utterance we have the fact of the Second Advent dogmatically affirmed in the most solemn and emphatic manner possible, and its true purpose and spiritual effect clearly shown, in that our Lord expects all who hear his announcement to endorse it with confidence and joy, and to be able to hail and hasten it with holy anticipation and desire.

We cannot better define holiness than as readiness to meet the Lord at his coming, all that constitutes such readiness going to make up what is known in Scripture as "true holiness." If then we see what elements are set forth as essential to being ready, we shall understand what holiness is, and shall see also how closely the coming of the Lord as an expectation bears upon our attainment of it. So regarded we shall find that true holiness is not the flabby, emasculated, far-away sentimentalism many seem to imagine it to be, but a firm, whole-hearted, and clear-headed devotion to Christ, entering into every department of life, and regulating the whole of man, "spirit, soul, and body," coming under its wholesome and invigorating influence.

We cannot do better than refer to Luke xii. 31-38 for an illustration of holiness as connected with the coming of the Lord. We have there the attitude Christ Himself delineates as the true one to be taken. Christians are described as "men that wait for their Lord." True holiness crowns Jesus as Lord, acknowledges his sovereign right to be absolute Master (despotês) of the whole life. It serves Christ in the sense of obedience, purity, discipleship, stewardship. It waits for Him, patiently endures, and quietly rests on his promise, trusting in his love, and it watches for Him, eager to discern the first sign of his approach. Of such holy ones as these our Lord says, "Blessed is that servant whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Of a truth I say unto you that, he will make him ruler over all that he hath."

But thus to wait and watch we must be assured of the fact that He is at hand, his Advent must of our out-look and being. How does Scripture bring this expectation to bear upon us as a stimulus and motive power to holiness?

1. By awakening a strong desire for it in the heart. It shows that all our warmest wishes and deepest aspirations depend for their fulfilment upon its realisation. It presents his advent not as a hope, but as the hope of our calling, as one indeed of the sevenfold unities of the Holy Spirit's gracious operations in the body of Christ. Thus regarded, we come to love his appearing; we enter into the experience of the bride in Solomon's song, and say, "Make haste, my Beloved, and be Thou like to a roe, or to a young hart, upon the mountain of spices." We shall sing with deepest fervour and sincerity of desire—

> My heart is with Him on his throne,
> And ill can brook delay;
> Each moment listening for the voice,
> "Rise up, and come away."

But such an experience is incompatible with all that is unholy, or out of touch with the will of God as it bears upon our walk before Him. In the light of such a longing, evil desires fade from the heart and mind, all sin becomes hateful, and a closer walk with God becomes the strongest impulse of which the soul is conscious. The preoccupation of the heart with other things is the great hindrance to growth in grace. In the Parable of the Sower we are told "that that which fell among thorns are they, which when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection." There is no cure for this like an eye fixed upon Him as the Coming One. No need for anxious care and toilsome strife if we are soon to enter "the rest that remaineth for the people of God." The consciousness that the sabbatismos, the bright and glorious septenary age of God is at hand, makes all that carnal self would desire seem very small and trivial.

A HEART OCCUPIED WITH CHRIST,

As to riches, which, alas! turn (either in their fond possession, or the eager desire for them) so many professed disciples of Christ into money-grubbers, and covetous of earthly gain, what are they to the heart that is set on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God? While as to the "pleasures of this life," the soul that is pleased with the prospect of the kingdom and the King has found another well-spring of delight, and drinks with joy of the river that proceedeth from the throne of God and of the Lamb. The treasures and pleasures, as well as the threatenings and the fears, of Egypt appealed in vain to Moses, while "he had respect to the recompense of reward." 'Tis even so with all who truly, intelligently, and spiritually look for the Saviour. "Every one that hath this hope set on Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

2. Another way by which this expectation incites to holiness is by awakening a sense of responsibility. The Master's word is "Occupy till I come," and He has again and again reminded us that one of the very first purposes of his return is to reckon with his servants." To each one He will say, "Give an account of thy stewardship." It is written, "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ." Our work will be tested, its real nature will be manifested, its true value appraised. "The fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is." As certainly as some shall receive a reward, others shall suffer loss, and be saved so as by fire; to use the apostle Peter's solemn words, be "scarcely saved."

This teaching is by many evaded, toned down, and made to mean almost nothing. An idea that it is antagonistic to the freedom of Divine grace, trenching on the completeness and all-sufficiency of the work of Christ in atonement, leads many to almost ignore it. But it is in the Word nevertheless, and that not in an isolated passage here and there, or hidden in remote and disputed eschatological texts, to be left until eternal life reveals their significance, but in oft-repeated and unmistakable declarations of truth. By parable and by precept, by our Lord Himself, and by his apostles, in Gospels, Epistles, and Revelation is the truth taught and enforced as of vital importance to

THE PRACTICAL ASPECTS OF THE BELIEVER'S LIFE.

No fear can be entertained by the Bible-taught mind as to its colliding with the teaching as to our salvation depending absolutely and solely upon the finished work of Christ. Not until we are completely and for ever justified by grace through the blood and righteousness of Christ can we start upon the race of which it is said, "So run, that ye may obtain."

The question of acceptance with God, freedom from the condemnation and guilt of our old state by nature, is settled before we enter the lists; we cannot run if we are the slaves of sin; the Lord's freemen alone are eligible for the contest. All the more, therefore, are we responsible as to the course. Equipped, privileged, and sanctified, we occupy a vantage ground of wondrous value and indebtedness to God. We are not on trial for eternal life; no, thank God! that is ours as his "free gift through Jesus Christ our Lord"; but we are on trial for "praise, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Tim. vi. 17-19). Rightly understood, this momentous fact becomes a powerful factor in the life of faith, prompting us to "give all diligence to make our calling and election sure." And that not from selfish, mercenary desire of reward, but from yearning desire for the glory of Him "whose we are, and whom we serve." Our loss through neglect, unholy walk, or unfaithful service, robs Him of glory He would otherwise have had in us and by us; for remember, it will not be the crowned believer, or the rewarded servant, who in that day will be the object of éclat; it is the Master who will then be "glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe." I long for a crown, not that it may deck my brow, but that I may have it to cast at his feet. Only let these truths be to us what Phil. iii. shows they were to Paul in his life of faith below, and we shall soon realise what a power for holiness is the waiting for our coming Lord.

3. Once more. By showing the value and importance of present opportunities in view of the imminence of his approach does this hope help holiness. To every generation of the Christian Church the return of the Lord has been revealed as imminent, not because God has not known and determined the limits of the Gospel age, but because his saints have but one lifetime in which to prepare for the goal to which we tend, and because for every such lifetime it is intended this should be the motive force, even as at the end it will be of our spiritual destiny. Uncertainty has, therefore, been the prevailing element of this hope in every decade or portion of our era. For all who have been taught to cherish this expectation the words have had a deep and true significance: "The night is far spent, the day is at hand," or again, "A little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." A little while, truly, in comparison with its eternal result, even if the whole dispensation be regarded; little, indeed, if the personal opportunities dependent on and determined by it are considered.

What an inspiration to Noah, as a preacher of righteousness, must the certain premonition of the approaching flood have been, and what an incentive to communion and intercessory prayer was Abraham's knowledge of the impending doom of the cities of the plain. Similarly will earnest waiting for the Son of God from heaven affect those whose happy experience it is so to do. In view of the glory and blessedness then to be entered on, every opportunity for advancement in preparedness will be eagerly embraced, and diligently used. So also in view of judgment then to be poured upon a guilty world, every available opportunity of warning souls, and every means to win them for Christ, will be earnestly seized on. Would God that eternity and eternal things were more deeply impressed upon our hearts. Nothing is more calculated to bring this about than to realise the certainity of our Lord's speedy return. To do this is to value hours and minutes as precious beyond all price, and to live not as for the fleeting present, but as for the enduring future.

Dr. Westcott has said, "Our responsibility as Christians corresponds with the grandeur of the Truth which is placed within our reach." If so, measured by the grandeur of the prospect opened up by the revelation we have received concerning the coming of the Lord, our responsibility to use every possibility to make ready for its fulfilment is vast indeed. Blessed be God, those possibilities are great as our needs. The Holy Ghost is ours, dwelling within us to guide, impel, and sanctify, the infinite grace stored up in Christ is ours, that out of his fulness we may receive, and grace upon grace. Exceeding great and precious promises are ours that by these we may be partakers of the Divine nature. Yea, all things are ours, and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's. We need not fear, or doubt or shrink from duty's call, we have but to trust our Lord, and so to gird up our loins "and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." He will not fail us, and soon, if faithful we shall behold Him, and be like Him, because we see Him as He is.

"Unto you is given
To watch for the coming of his feet
Who is the glory of our blessed heaven;
The work and watching will be very sweet
Even in an earthly home,
And in such an hour as you think not
He will come."

STUDENT VOLUNTEERS IN FRANCE.

HITHERTO no foreign missionary movement has affected the universities of the Continent. The societies have been compelled almost entirely to educate their missionaries themselves, and have been unable to draw on the general body of students. For some time past attempts have been made to extend the student volunteer missionary movement to the colleges of the Continent, but without very much success. Mr. Wilder visited Scandinavia and Denmark, and created no small impression there. In Denmark there was a ready and warm response, but in Scandinavia the natural conservatism of the students made them hold aloof from any new movement until they had time to test it.

These countries seem now to be ripe for the entrance of the volunteer movement. In Scandinavia a large summer conference of Christian students is being held annually. The ground basis is being prepared, and now the volunteer movement should enter. In Germany, this year has seen a new Christian movement in the universities, and one man, Mr. Mochert, is giving his whole time to its extension. For the last three years a quiet solid Christian work has been going on among the 15,000 students of Paris. A society has been formed for Protestant students which Pastor Monnier superintends and conducts. It has a clubhouse, with reading, magazine, and conversation rooms. Around this, about two hundred men have gathered, forming one of the strongest and most distinct social groups in the whole university. Not a few of the men have been quickened, and not a few converted through the good quiet work that goes on there.

It was to establish a closer bond of union between this work and the British movement that Mr. Donald Fraser was sent across last week. Several opportunities were afforded of speaking to the students about the Volunteer movement in Britain and America. Mr. Bœgner, the Director of the House of Missions, was most eager that the students of France should fall into line, especially as an appeal has just been issued by the Evangelical churches for more men. At the close of the last meeting, then, a declaration, which reads thus: "Je suis décidé, si Dieu le permet, à devenir missionnaire en pays étranger," was submitted for signatures. That night nine men put down their names. Most of these, however, had already been preparing for the foreign field. Yet the nucleus has been formed. The volunteers have begun to work, and there are strong hopes that the next few week will see some considerable increase in Paris, and an extension into other colleges in France and Switzerland. The importance of this beginning cannot be over-estimated. If believing prayer attends it, there may be seen, starting out of it, the first distinctly college missionary movement that France or the Continent has yet shared in.

HEADWAY IN JAPAN.—2.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

THE question of the hour among the Christians of Japan is whether the present tide of the spirit of national independence should be seized to set the native churches entirely on their own feet or not. If the object of mission work is to plant and not to maintain native churches, it is of importance that this should be brought about. But the foreign teachers have brought with them foreign habits and foreign expenditure, and though the native pastors are ready enough to assume control, they are unwilling to forego the foreign, chiefly American, contributions. The difficulty is a real one. Though the Gospel, pure and simple, needs no expensive paraphernalia, yet Christians from other lands would not unnaturally bear to the newly-opened country the institutions which had arisen in their own lands as a result of their own acceptance of the Gospel. And those who provide the funds, naturally should control the administration. Much indignation finds expression against mission boards, while personal relations with individual missionaries remain what they should be, and the deeper spiritual teaching of the foreigner is appreciated by the churches. But these boards are bound to act as they do, as trustees of money for a certain purpose only.

In the presence of a growing spirit of Unitarianism and Rationalism among the native pastors, it becomes a serious question how far men who are inclined to Universalism should be supported. It is the responsibility of questions such as this which makes the life of the missionary in Japan a hard one in the absence of more serious opposition or hardship. It would seem as though the only solution would be for the native churches to henceforth entirely support their pastors, and meet their own expenses, leaving the foreigners to maintain theological and other institutions till the native churches are able to provide for them, the missionaries devoting their whole energy to evangelistic and training work.

Among the works more or less entirely under native direction I would like to call the attention of those interested to Mr. Ishii's Orphanage at Okayama, where real spiritual work goes on. Another especially encouraging field is that of Mr. Batchelor among the aboriginal Ainus of the north. I heard also of the work of Mr. Barclay Buxton on the other side of the island, which has been greatly blessed of God, though the people think he must have been a fearful sinner to have now to work so hard.

SECTARIANISM.

A good deal has been said about the evils of sectarianism in Japan, but though the temptation to preach the denomination instead of Christ has produced its ill effects, they are much less marked than is often the case, and the Japanese inquirer does not usually trouble much about the differences of opinion of the foreigners. Sectarianism is not therefore there the curse and barrier it is in some parts, the questions which rend the churches being the same as in other lands, viz., conflicting doctrines of inspiration, and punishment, divinity, and universalism. A score of years ago an effort was made to form a United Church of Japan, but after two years the attempt had to be abandoned. Nevertheless, there is much more intercourse among the native pastors of the various sects than among the Europeans, and interchange of pulpits is not infrequent. An instance of the little hold the most fundamental sectarian teachings have on the natives arose recently in the case of the Friends, who have been all and in some of the other churches trouble has been caused by the pastors advocating the war with China from the pulpit. The Christians had been continually taunted as being unpatriotic, and this was a sore temptation to disprove the calumny by advocating war and by enlisting. But those who held true to peace have found ample scope for energy in supporting the Red Cross Society.

SPLIT UP ON THE QUESTION OF WAR,

"IF MEN HAD ONLY PREACHED CHRIST."

In the minds of some of those who have been longest in the field there is a growing question whether, after all, it has not been a mistaken policy for the missionary societies to have undertaken so much. In the words of one veteran, "If men had only preached Christ, as doors and houses were opened to them, without funds, without churches, without institutions, Japan would be much better evangelised by this time, and much anxiety would have been avoided. It takes a lot of piety to bring a young man safely through a theological school, and we had better have no colleges than unfit men for meeting doubts without going to Europe to settle the questions there. Englishmen, and Scotchmen, and Americans, go to college with an ingrained foundation of faith inherited from their fathers, and shared by their neighbours. It is far different here, where we have to deal with the first generation." Another, one of the very first to arrive, said to me, "What do you think of a young man returning from a course of study in America who first opens his mouth to discuss no less a point than the very existence of a God? The fact is that many are so bred up in Buddhistic and Shinto theories that they try to import them into Christianity."

"Christianity has come here to stay, and will go on spreading if all the missionaries and the foreign aid are withdrawn at once. The native church will stand; there can be no question about that." These last were the words of a Japanese pastor in Tokyo, and they fairly sum up what I have gathered on every hand during my stay in this country. With all the faults that can be found—and I have not been allowed to remain blind to them—the native churches are most encouraging. Doubtless many people travel through the country ignorant how many Christians they see, but they do not look for them, though they are to be met with everywhere, in every grade. On two occasions when I was attracted to shops on account of their proprietor and the reasonableness of their fixed prices, I discovered by accident that they were earnest Christians. Another time it was a Government official whom I found to be a brother, and such discoveries were repeated.

SLOW PROGRESS.

But the Gospel is not making the progress to-day that it was ten years ago. Many were then ready eagerly to embrace the teachings of Christianity as to historical facts, but too many went no further, and the difficulty all along has been to secure a real spiritual Christianity. Among the causes which are retarding its spread to-day is the increased connection with so-called "Christian" countries, to which large numbers of students have gone, only to return prejudiced against Christ, certain indeed that their old heathendom is played out, but almost certain that the Gospel is played out too. In the opinion of more than one of the veteran workers here the churches at home have not done what they should have done for the foreign students in their midst, who as a rule spend years in Europe or America without coming into contact with active Christianity. This is especially the case at our Universities, the men attending which are usually of influence at home, but who as a rule come back worse than they go.

The foreign settlers and employés are here, too as elsewhere, the great stumbling-block. "Some, I believe," said a man who had worked here a score of years, "have a sort of religion at home, but we hear nothing of it here." The education of the country is largely in the hands of such men now, in place of the Christian instructors brought out through the medium of the missionaries in the early days of the renaissance."

Besides this, the young men of the native churches are concerning themselves more with idle disputations founded on the latest contentions of European scholars. The English reviews and magazines are all read here and discussed by men who know nothing at first hand of the subjects at issue. The last book out is duly epitomised in local magazines as the best, and men unfamiliar with the original languages are busy discussing the authorship of this paragraph and that. From many pulpits one may hear more often of Napoleon and Wellington, of Washington and Alexander, of Socrates and Aristotle, than of Christ. There is, in short, a wide-reaching and if ever there was a land in which a deeper spiritual teaching was needed by the teachers, that land is Japan. There is here a great field for men, especially young men filled with the Holy Spirit and power. These need not speak any language but English, which is understood by almost every native pastor. Let this urgent need be brought before every convention at home, that if it be God's will a number of men from different denominations may be set apart for a time to meet it. Natives and Europeans together would welcome them, and now that general passports are obtainable the whole land may be stirred from end to end.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 28.—PHIL. I.

The Good Work Perfected (1-11).—The apostle was always on the outlook for reasons of praise and thanksgiving. It is well when we can make supplication with joy. Our joy is well-founded when it arises from our confidence in God. When God begins a work in any soul, He will most certainly finish it, but too many fancy He has begun without good warrant. A godly fear of grieving Him is an infallible sign of the genuineness of the work of grace. Devotion to the interests of his kingdom, like that which was so conspicuous in these Philippians, is another sign. (9) This is an excellent prayer for daily use. We need a love which is quick to discern between good and evil (R.V. marg.); then to have a clean, holy heart; and lastly, to bear fruit unto God.

The Progress of the Gospel (12-30).—It seemed a matter of indifference what happened to himself, so long as the Gospel progressed. Because the extension of the Gospel meant the growing glory of the Redeemer. He was content to be in bonds, if his chains gave him wider opportunities of proclaiming Jesus. He could view with equanimity the envy and strife of some, if only Jesus were named to those who might not have heard of Him. He was prepared to live or die that Jesus might be magnified. He was willing to remain for a little longer outside heaven, if that would better serve the cause he loved. His main plea for consistency of life on the part of his converts was that the faith of the Gospel might be commended. It seemed good even to suffer, if it were on the behalf of Christ. Spirit of God, breathe into us a similar absorption in our Saviour's interests.

MONDAY, APRIL 29.—PHIL. II.

The High Exaltation of Jesus (1-11).—How wonderful that the apostle should find our model for the little forbearances and self-denials of life in so marvellous an act as the condescension and death of our blessed Lord. As the law of gravitation guides planets and dust grains, so the great principle of love determines the death of the cross, and the daily self-denial of the believer. Let us look at what is best in each other, and seek to promote the well-being of each other, not only for those we like, but for all our fellow-members in the body of Christ. (6) Jesus did not grasp at equality with God, He was already God's Fellow. (8) Note these successive stages of descent, lower and ever lower. (9) But the measure of his descent was that of his ascent: and just in proportion as we are willing to share the one, we shall participate in the other. Drink of his cup, and you shall sit on his throne. What better reward could God give to his beloved Son, than that He should be put into the position of extending the benefits of his death to the widest area possible?

Working Out What is Wrought In (12-18).—Whatever holy impulse we feel within is due to the inworking of the Divine Spirit, and it is our duty to turn it into life and act. Be careful of each holy desire; God has originated it. Be fearful of losing anything He has placed within thy reach. (15) There is only one Light; we are lights. Live to reflect Jesus in this dark world. Be as lighthouses round the coast, warning of the reef, pointing to the harbour mouth.

Fellow-workers and Fellow-soldiers (19-30).—How nobly the apostle honoured the younger men who wrought with him. He spoke of them as comrades in the great fight. And how close were the bonds that knit the teachers and their converts in those dark times when all the world was against the infant church. How tenderly Paul speaks of Epaphroditus and his sickness; how gratefully of that Divine hand which will not allow more sorrow to fall to our lot than we are able to bear. Not sorrow upon sorrow!

TUESDAY, APRIL 30.—PHIL. III.

All Things Counted Loss (1-11).—The true circumcision is deliverance from the self-life in every form. The true Israelite is delineated under three traits of character: he is a spiritual worshipper; his only glory is in Christ; he is delivered from the energy of the flesh. (5) Everything that the naturally religious man can boast of was Paul's, in birth, in zeal, and in ceremonial righteousness. But weighed against Christ these were as nought. Oh to be so taken up with Christ that we may apprise the jewels of this world as so much loss! To be found in Christ, and to gain Him, we must be content to be stripped of everything that savours of self. (10) Daily let us ask, not so much to know about Him, as to know Him as a living, personal Friend; the hourly uplifting of his Risen Life; the daily conformity to his death. (11) The resurrection to which we attain is certainly that of the Spirit.

Pressing On (12-21).—The nearer we reach the perfect life, the further we feel from it. When we reach the mountains we find how lofty their summits are. Jesus Christ apprehended each of us for something. Let us ever seek to apprehend and realise his ideal. We can do this best by forgetting past failure and attainment, and ever reaching forwards. Our prize is our sense of blessedness. This is the bloom of the soul. (15) Instead of judging one another, let us walk together along the path of obedience. Those that leave the narrow track whilst professing godliness are greater enemies to the Cross than avowed antagonists. We are citizens of the skies. Our bodies are here, but our true home is yonder. Thence Jesus will come to complete the work of salvation, by giving us a body like his own.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1.—PHIL. IV.

Paul's Fellow-workers (1-3).—What a strong, true heart was this. Poor and despised, he was rich and crowned. He lived in the world which was peopled by saints in heaven and upon earth; his companions and joy. (2) Two Christian women misunderstood each other not for the last time, but must have found it difficult to refuse this tender exhortation. Oh, roll of God's elect, kept by the Lamb, the inventory of life, may our names be inscribed upon thy page!

Joy and Peace (4-9).—This is the salutation of the Greek, as Peace of the Hebrew. In a deeper sense than this world uses them, Christianity utters each. (5) It is not difficult to restrain one's eager interest in the things of time when one realises the near presence of the unseen. (6) Don't be anxious, would have been a futile exhortation, unless followed by the advice of telling all things to God. Faith hands over causes of anxiety and leaves them in the Father's infinite care; and as she thanks for the mercy of the past, she dares count on their renewal. Whilst we pray, peace like an angel comes down to act as sentry over heart and thought. (9) It is not enough to have the peace of God, we may have the God of Peace—the one condition being the earnest prosecution of all things that are true, just, pure, lovely.

All Things Through Christ's Strength (13-23).—Paul was glad to receive their benevolence because it was an evidence of their earnest religious life. It was fruit that increased to their account. He realised that what they gave him with pure motive was accepted by God as a well-pleasing sacrifice. He had learned the secret of being full and hungry; not of food only, but of human love, and all else that makes life rich; and the secret lay in the all-sufficient grace of Jesus, which equalised every lot. (19) And out of his own experience of what God could do, he promised that every need of theirs would be filled to the brim. God's measure is his riches in glory; his channel is Jesus Christ.

THURSDAY, MAY 2.—COL. I.

Unceasing Prayer (1-12).—Paul constantly fell back on the granite of God's will. The saints, by their relation to God, are called to be faithful brethren to each other. (3) The apostle's prayer-book was filled with intercession. Mark how he entwines the three graces of Christian living. What triumph filled the prisoner's heart as he thought of the harvest-field of the world, where truth was ever propagating itself. (9) The subject matter of his prayer is most suggestive. We must know God's will before we can walk worthily of Him. The walk that pleases God has four branches: it bears fruit; it increases; it is strong in his power to bear and suffer; it gives thanks.

The Son of His Love (13-23).—The Lord Jesus is pre-eminent in the love of the Father, in the transcendent glory of his image, in being the organ of creation, providence, and redemption, in being the Head of the Church, in being the first to rise from the dead, in being destined to reconcile all things to the Father by his blood. These are the crowns on the brow of Immanuel. Note that the key-word of this wonderful paragraph is all things. The death of Calvary is to affect the whole of the entire universe, but it cannot achieve its destined end in us until we identify ourselves with it by stedfast faith.

A Glorious Mystery (24-29).—Here is another of God's secrets. Hidden from earlier days, but now revealed, the Son of God is willing to indwell Gentile hearts, filling them with riches and glory. The pastor of the flock has an individual interest which leads him to admonish, teach, and endeavour to perfect every man.

FRIDAY, MAY 3.—COL. II.

Christ the Storehouse of all Treasure (1-7).—To know Christ is to be able to lay your hand on any treasure that you may need for daily living. The great end of this chapter is to put us on our guard against those who would divert us from Christ. Its keynote is in the recurring words, let no one. The first act of Christian living is to receive Christ; that act must become the attitude of life's walk. We must become rooted in Him in secret, and built up in our outward walk and conversation.

Take Heed (8-19).—First, beware of philosophy and tradition. Why seek the help of angels when you have the Lord of all angels? Why go back to Jewish ordinances, such as circumcision, when you possess their essence in Christ? (13) Next, beware of subjection to legal exactions which were nailed to the cross, as in the old time a creditor used to run a nail through a bill that was paid. (16) Beware, lastly, of mere ceremonialism, such as the observance of certain days and months. (18) Beware of the intrusion of angels between the soul and Christ. In one form and another, these dangers perpetually recur, and the excessive devotion to outward rites which characterises the present day witnesses to the perpetual peril of the human heart, and the need of reiterating the supremacy of the spirit over the letter.

Dead with Christ (20-23).—Once dead in sin, in Christ we died unto sin. Through union with Him we no longer live in the world which rejected Him, but on the resurrection side of the cross. Sin, therefore, has no right to dominion over us, and we combat it not by ceremonialism, but by the powers of the Pentecostal age.

SATURDAY, MAY 4.—COL. III.

Raised with Christ (1-4).—The Apostle refers back to ii. 12, to the act in which his converts avowed their oneness with Christ in death and resurrection. They were one in the purpose of God, they professed to be one in that solemn act. If, says he, that was a true avowal, live as those who belong to the unseen and heavenly sphere where Christ is King. (2) There is always an above, and a beneath. Let us set our mind and thought always on the former. Our life's motives and movements may thus largely be a mystery to men around us, but some day they will be revealed, even as Christ.

Putting Off and Putting On (5-17).—Ye have died, reckon death. Whenever your members are tempted in any direction, reckon that you are dead to all sinful excess and evil indulgence. (8) We have not simply to put from us sin which has largely to do with bodily appetite, but that which consists in the temper of the soul, such as anger, etc. (9) We did put off the old man by one emphatic avowal, perhaps in some high moment of consecration; let us daily, therefore, put away his doings. We have put on Christ by the choice of some radiant hour, let us daily put on the temper and manner of God's elect. (12) This is the dress of the holy soul. Each morning we should attire ourselves in the humility, meekness, forgivingness of Christ. Not ours, but his. And over all our vesture there should be the girdle of love. (15) The peace of God ruling in our hearts, bringing every thought under its sway. (16) The word of Christ welling up through our lives. (17) The work of Christ occupying us in everything to which we put our hands.

Domestic Duties (18-25).—The love of Christ is supremely tested in the home-life. It must come there, and perhaps nowhere is it needed more than to enable us to fulfil the duties of our lot. How careful the Apostle is to emphasise that all is to be in the Lord, and unto Him. Our natural virtues are not strong enough to bear the strain to which they are constantly being put by the friction of the home, apart from the daily grace of Christ. Behind every human relationship and duty, behold the Christ stands.

THE ARTS AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, opened last week in Belfast, is to be without drinking bars. The executive committee had decided otherwise, but prayer and special meetings were held, and finally the Somerset House authorities forbade the issue of any licences.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MAY 5.

THE AGONY IN GETHSEMANE.—Mark xiv. 32-42.

GOLDEN TEXT.—John xviii. 11.

GETHSEMANE was an enclosed olive orchard, situated just across the brook Kedron, near the beginning of the ascent of the western slope of Mount Olivet. It was probably not far from the modern Gethsemane. Its name means olive-press—a most significant title for the place in which our Lord was crushed beneath the weight of human woes. It was a familiar place to Jesus (John xviii. 2); and was probably hallowed by many recollections of intimate communion with his Father.

Three only of his apostles were permitted to accompany Him into the Garden (33). They were the same three who were with Him when the daughter of Jairus was raised, and on the Mount of Transfiguration. The other eight were left outside (32). Such preparations indicate how solemn and sacred was his Gethsemane experience. It was evidence of our Lord's very real humanity that He desired the presence of his most trusted friends in the hour of his agony. That they slept while He wrestled (37) proved how far they were from entering into real sympathy with Him. "He trod the wine-press alone."

The sufferings of Jesus in the Garden were of the severest nature. The terms used to describe them (33) suggest "amazement, arising almost to stupefaction," and heaviness to the point of deepest depression. The fact that He mentioned his sorrow to his disciples is most significant (34). How opposite is this to his usual custom! The scene in the Garden makes the anguish appear greater still. His attitude in prayer (35); his three-fold repetition of the same request; the inward wrestling producing the bloody sweat while He prayed (Luke xxii. 44)—these give us glimpses of the awful severity of his anguish.

What can have caused it? Not the mere prospect of the physical suffering awaiting Him; nor the mental suffering arising from his being forsaken by his disciples, and rejected by his nation; nor even the fact that death was before Him. As true man He could not fail to be impressed by the prospect of such experiences; but He would have seemed inferior to his own servants if this prospect had caused Him such anguish. There was an element in his sufferings which is entirely absent from that of the martyrs. They suffer for righteousness, He for sins; they suffer while supported by all the consolations of the Divine favour, He had to meet the hell of feeling God-forsaken. Remember that as the Sin-bearer, He was made a curse, that God put Him to grief, that Jehovah's sword awoke against Him, and it will not seem strange that the prospect filled Him with such agony. See Isa. liii. 10; Zech. xiii. 7; Gal. iii. 13.

Prayer was our Lord's only relief in his anguish. Imitate Him in this. "Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal"; but the sorrow needs to be taken to God in prayer. His prayer laid hold upon God as "Father" (36), for who can sympathise with a suffering child if not a father? It was earnest. The need was too pressing for mere formalities. The blood drops told how deeply He meant his prayer. It was importunate, presented again and again (2 Cor. xii. 8). Yet it was submissive. The wish that the bitter cup might be removed was mentioned, but was surrendered; and God's will was accepted instead.

Was the prayer answered? Not if it meant the removal of the bitter cup, for that remained. But the angel from heaven was one part of the answer (Luke xxii. 43); the golden text is another proof that the conflict is over, and that without any further struggle the bitter cup is accepted; and his words to the disciples after his third prayer (41) suggests that He no longer needs to look for their sympathy. From that hour He can go forward to the cross, with spirit unruffled, and with the calmness of assured triumph.

The incident teaches: (1) What an awful thing sin is! In looking at the agony do not think of other people's sins but your own. It was sin—yours and mine—that killed the Saviour. (2) What love was that of Jesus! No illustrations drawn from the lives of men can set it forth. It has no parallel. And this love is for you and me. (3) What do we owe to Him! "Love so amazing, so Divine, Demands my soul, my life, my all." Is that the return we are making?

FOX COURT RAGGED SCHOOL MISSION.—The annual report, issued by the secretary, Mr. T. Fagg, 136, Pentonville-road, N., states that want of funds have hampered the operations. These include large Sunday-schools, an infants' day school, youths' institute, recreation and other classes; also Bible classes and mission services. God has greatly blessed this quiet steady mission work.

THE WAKE-UP TREE.

WHEN I was a school-girl I had a difficult Scripture examination, and I remember one of the questions given was to name the different trees mentioned in the Bible. It took me a long time to do it. I wonder if you know their number, and could repeat them. But I am not going to ask you that now, though perhaps on some other occasion you may take your Bibles and see how many you can find; for the present I want to fix your attention on one particular tree.

Can you guess which tree it is that I mean? At this beautiful season of the year all boys and girls must notice that every branch and twig in the gardens, in the parks, in the fields, is bristling with brown buds swelling and bursting into fresh, tender leaves. All the earth is putting on its new spring dress of living green. In a little while there will appear the delicate pink and white blossoms, for the rule is, first the leaf and then the flower. But the tree I have in my mind is an exception to the rule, and it is covered with bloom before ever a scrap of green appears; it has its best attire all ready almost before its companions have begun to think of theirs. You have all seen this tree; what is its name?

In case there may be any who do not know, I will tell you. It is the almond tree; but I like to call it the "wake-up" tree, because it is the first to awake after the long sleep of winter.

The almond tree is several times spoken of in Scripture, and teaches us many beautiful lessons. Let us see if we can find out what some of them are. When I was at school I used particularly to like the object lessons. It seems so much more interesting when we can see the thing about which we are learning. If you will turn to Jeremiah, chapter i. 2, you will see the account of a very wonderful object lesson, where God Himself was the Teacher, the prophet Jeremiah was the scholar, and the subject was this lovely tree. How beautiful it must have been to have such a Teacher! Yes, but what the Lord taught his servant hundreds of years ago He is teaching you and me to-day. The first question that God asked was, "Jeremiah, what seest thou?" The prophet answered, "I see a rod of an almond tree." Then God replied, commending the answer. "Thou hast well seen, for I will hasten my word to perform it." The meaning of the Hebrew name given to the almond tree is "hasten," this tree being in such a hurry to blossom. So God wished Jeremiah, and wishes us, to be reminded by this hastening tree that He is not slow to perform his promise, but that the word He has spoken He will surely fulfil. Is not that a sweet lesson?

Then, again, this tree teaches the necessity of wakefulness and readiness. We read in Rom. xiii. 2, "Now it is high time to awake out of sleep." The sleep the apostle refers to here is the slumber which is upon every one of us until we hear God's voice saying to us, "Awake, thou that sleepest" (Eph. v. 14). Has that word reached your heart yet, or are you still wrapped in the drowsiness of ignorance and indifference? Every one of us is by nature plunged in this sleep; unless we awake to know ourselves as poor sinners in need of a Saviour, it will end in a lost eternity. Oh, listen to the message of the wake-up tree—"Awake, thou that sleepest!"

Then, when we see the pink and white flowers hiding the branches which for so many months have been bare and apparently dead, we think of another sleep into which we must all enter, and from which we hope to have a glorious awaking. I mean the sleep of death. What a beautiful picture of the resurrection morning the spring presents to us; how it reminds us of that land where > everlasting spring abides

> And never-withering flowers.

Perhaps some of my young readers have lost a little brother or sister, or even a dear father or mother. You sorrow for your loved ones as lying in the dust of the churchyard, with the grass growing above them, and a grave-stone to mark the spot where they rest. Ah, no, do not think of them in that way; let the almond tree teach you that God has taken them out of death into life, and that they are waiting for you in the Father's home, where there are many mansions. He who can, out of a seemingly dead tree, bring life and beauty, can, from the very tomb change our body, that it may be fashioned like unto the glorious body of our Lord Jesus.

These are three lessons to be learnt from the almond-tree, and I will mention two more. First, it wastes no time in watching what its neighbours are doing, but does its duty irrespective of others. We should also try to do our best without depending on those around us. Second, the pretty flowers appear even though the weather be cold and gloomy, and in spite of March winds and April showers; so let us always strive to be amiable and cheerful, even when things are not just as we like them to be. By observing these two rules we shall brighten the corner of the world in which we live, and please our Father in heaven, who has placed us there.

I have given you five points to remember, one for each finger and one for the thumb. The next time that you see an almond-tree, try if you can repeat them; and, better still, be sure that you let them influence your daily life. NORA C. USHER.

CHILDREN'S SPRING-TIDE.

Birds are singing, flowers are flinging
Fragrance on the grateful fields;
Godly living, I'd be giving
Jesus all my springtide yields.

Breezes blowing, blossoms growing,
Music mingling in the air;
Blessing, praying, child's love paying,
I'd make music everywhere.

Larks are soaring, rapture pouring
As they twinkle in the sky;
So upspringing, I'd be singing
To my Jesus, throned on high.

Lambs are leaping, mothers keeping
Happy watch beside their young;
All creation blends ovation,
Praise by children, too, be sung!

A HINDU FESTIVAL.

IN January it was our privilege to preach for six days at a large Hindu mela (or festival), held twenty miles from here (Teor Hills Mission, near Banka, Bengal), at which it was estimated some 200,000 people assembled. Upon arriving we were rejoiced to find a party of workers from Bhagalpur, thirty miles distant from there, viz., two Zenana ladies, two Bible women, and three Indian brethren. We were, in all, a happy band of ten, and divided our energies accordingly among the men and women.

Our Indian brethren gave earnest and powerful testimonies to the saving power of the Gospel, backing up the truths preached by their personal experience, and appealing to the hearts and consciences of their hearers; yet none were found inquiring, "What shall I do to be saved?" "Lord! how long!" was often our cry, as in united supplication we laid these souls before Him. Brethren, pray for us, and for the seed thus scattered far and wide.

With one of our evangelists I had some blessed times moving in camp, during November and December, among the farther villages, preaching to over 2,000 people in about 150 villages (this for the jungles being very encouraging), and on all hands getting a friendly ear to the Gospel. Having arranged for the carrying on of the work in our absence, I am purposing taking a much-needed rest and change, hoping to arrive in England in April. I shall be thankful for any open doors to speak of what the Lord has enabled me to accomplish in this field, and to receive any communications from any who might arrange, or be desirous of meetings for same. My address will be, West End House, Blagdon, R.S.O., Somerset. G. M. PANES.

World-wide Evangelisation.

The following words by the greatly respected Bishop of Liverpool are some of the most forcible I have ever seen on the subject. I have for years been trying to press them on the hearts of my fellow Christians, and I earnestly entreat they may be read with much prayer by your many readers, especially by those interested in foreign missions and the evangelisation of Christendom :—

If a member of an Ephesian, or Philippian, or Thessalonian church were to rise from the dead, and see how little work most lay Churchmen do for the English Church, he would not believe his eyes. The difference between the primitive type of a lay Churchman and the English type is the difference between light and darkness, black and white. The one used to be awake and alive, and always about his Master's business. The other is too often asleep practically, and torpid, and idle, and content to leave the religion of the parish in the hands of the parson.....

The Epistle to the Philippians was addressed to the Saints with the bishops and deacons. Oh! that we had something of the same sort in the organisation of the Church of England! ..... I cannot reconcile the positions of the English lay Episcopalian with that of his brother in any apostolic church eighteen centuries ago. ..... In short, in the normal action of the Church of England lay Churchmen have been left on a siding. Like soldiers not wanted, they have fallen out of the ranks, retired to the rear, and sunk out of sight.....The clergy have too much to do, and the laity too little, and the whole result is that the masses are not reached.....I know not whether the present state of things can now be remedied.....

I should like every parochial incumbent to make a point of teaching every communicant that he is an integral part of the Church of England, and is bound to do all that he can for its welfare; to visit, to teach, to warn, to exhort, to edify, to help, to advise, to comfort, to support, to evangelise, to awaken the sleeping, to lead on the inquiring, to build up the saints, to promote repentance, faith, and holiness everywhere, according to his gifts, time, and opportunity. He should educate his people to see that they must give up the lazy modern plan of leaving everything to the parson, and must be active agents instead of sleeping partners. On this point I believe John Wesley was the first man who understood the wants of this country in the last century. The old Methodists beat Churchmen hollow. With them every new member was a new home missionary in their cause, and the first question asked, as soon as he was enrolled, was: "What are you going to do?" The blind stupidity with which John Wesley was treated was a disaster to our Church. We ought to have taken a leaf out of his book. Never will things go well with the Church of England until every individual member realises that he has a duty to do to Christ and his Church, and keeps that duty continually in view.

These weighty words of this aged Christian bishop may well be an excuse for my not adding another word of my own, excepting to entreat the prayers of your readers that this veteran's advice may be circulated throughout Christendom, and especially amongst missionaries all over the world.

In regard to the most important meeting for prayer, to be held in the Great Assembly Hall on May 1, might I humbly and earnestly suggest that this subject, so deeply impressed on my own heart, might at least be one taken up at that gathering, and in many a secret closet before and afterwards? Do let us embrace in arms of love every fellow labourer and fellow Christian throughout the whole world at that prayer meeting, and in our secret prayers.

Reginald Radcliffe.

KING'S OWN MISSION.—This mission, which was opened in January last, under the superintendency of Mr. O. L. Heatley, is being blessed and owned of God, especially the work among the young. Mr. Heatley is getting round him a good band of workers, who are termed Associates. Those helpers are members of different churches, but having spare time have taken up this definite work. Mr. Heatley will be glad to hear from any friends specially interested in children's services; his address is St. James' Hall, Royal road, Kennington, S.E.

A BET AND ITS RESULTS.

The evils of betting and gambling are widely recognised, and much is done to try to check the evil. It is noteworthy that the only wager recorded in Scripture was attended with awful consequences, which all arose from the bet being laid and taken.

The scene was Samson's wedding feast (Judg. xiv. 12). The bridegroom propounded his riddle to the thirty Philistine guests, offering at the same time the wager that if the problem were not solved in seven days he should receive from each a suit of clothing, he agreeing to pay to each the same penalty should they be successful.

Here the tenth commandment was broken, for did not covetousness lie at the root of the anxiety that each had to profit himself at the expense of his neighbour?

His wife was taken into their confidence. Cajolery, trickery, and threats of the direst vengeance were all employed on their behalf, and at last the foolish weak woman, having wormed the secret out of her still weaker husband, triumphantly went to them on the seventh day with the solution of the riddle.

Here was the spirit of the ninth commandment violated, which forbids false witness or deceit, and this was deceit of the basest kind.

Samson, poor though he was, must pay his bet, it was a debt of honour; and no matter who suffered, or by what means the wager had been won, the scheming Philistines must receive their gain. He went down to Askelon and slew thirty men, thus breaking the sixth commandment; he next pillaged the dead bodies of their apparel, violating in this way the eighth also, and then laden with his hateful spoil he returned to Timnath, to settle with his greedy creditors.

One need not wonder that after this exhibition of his wicked wife's faithlessness he refused to live with her, but Samson had only himself to blame in making the wager, and thus opening the door to every vile and hateful passion. Another man was found, however, who took the deserted wife, and as she willingly consorted with him, the seventh commandment was now broken, and God's law once more violated.

Samson now lived with his parents for a while, but as the recollection of his wife's treachery grew fainter, he determined to go back to Timnath and make up the quarrel. On reaching there, however, with his present of a kid, he found another breach of God's law—the seventh commandment—had been committed by her, and refusing to fall in with her father's advice he left them in great wrath. Revenge was in his heart, and as it was wheat harvest he conceived the villainous scheme of burning up the property of his foes. He caught three hundred foxes (which to one of his supernatural strength would be an easy feat in that country), and turning them tail to tail he let them run with a torch between each pair. The foxes ran hither and thither, through the standing corn, shocks, vineyards, and olive-grounds, and in a short time the whole country round was a black, smoking, desolate wilderness. Here was arson in its worst aspect. Immense loss and damage was caused to the Philistines, but not one farthing's worth of benefit to himself.

The Philistines were not slow in discovering the author of the mischief, but instead of punishing Samson they wreaked their cruel vengeance on the wretched woman and her faithless father. How must she, while suffering her agonising death by burning, have reflected on her folly in betraying her husband (who could have protected her against a thousand foes), to escape this very fate which had now so justly overtaken her. Did Samson, when he heard of her miserable end, consider that it was his bet which was the beginning of all this series of crime?

Had it now ended? Alas! no. Next he must punish the perpetrators of this cruel act, and he smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter. Some hundreds may here have fallen by his avenging arm, but the complete climax to this terrible chapter was at Lehi, when he slew a thousand men with an ass's jaw-bone, thus heading up, by almost unparalleled bloodshed, the longest series of covetousness, deceit, treachery, murder, pillage, adultery, arson, and vengeance that is chronicled in Holy Writ.

It seems almost superfluous to write further as to the duty of Christians to be entirely separate from anything which in any way resembles this awful sin. And yet, alas! how little is the vice of betting reproved; or, rather, how often is it condoned? The writer well remembers, though many years ago, when he was quite a young believer, the temptation he had to resist. He was driving with a worldly neighbour on a country road, and meeting an old woman, the friend said, "There is Mrs. Brown" (rather a noted character in the place). "No," said the writer; "you are mistaken. That is not Mrs. Brown." He was at once roused. "I will bet you £5 to sixpence it is," he said. The temptation was great. Sixpence, even if lost, could easily be spared; but a £5 note was a treasure never yet possessed. He steadfastly refused to bet, however, and the subject dropped. A mile further on, the real Mrs. Brown was met, and the would-be gambler then admitted his mistake.

The writer, when hearing afterwards of this gentleman's ruin through turf losses, could only rejoice that he had never given him any help or encouragement on the downward road. May we ever keep our skirts clean of our brother's blood!

ADVANCE OF ROMANISM.

I heard an Archdeacon the other day urge Nonconformists to unite earnestly with Protestant Churchmen to rouse the people, and resist with combined energy the steady, though stealthy, advance of Popery among us. Not always stealthy, as a true relation of what I saw a fortnight ago in a northern Episcopal church will prove. On the so-called "altar" were two sets of seven candles, and two tall ones. At the back and above the "altar" a representation of Christ on the Cross, nearly life-size, in colours, apparently mosaic. Beneath, a small figure of the Virgin and Child. Above the choir seats a gilt crucifix, about eighteen inches elevated. On the top of the pulpit a similar one. Hanging from the roof, a few feet in front of the table, are suspended seven coloured lamps, lighted; I was told that these are burning day and night. On the south side of the chancel is the "Ladye Chapel," with a crucifix at the entrance, and another over the table. Behind a curtain at the side is an entrance to the vestry, where there is a prayer-desk and a crucifix over it. On the north side of the chancel is a similar chapel, with a prayer-desk and another crucifix. Near the entrance to the chancel and above it are two large marble figures, one on each side.

I saw a notice stating that on a certain day two large stone figures, of the Blessed Virgin and of St. Stephen, would be dedicated. On the board outside it is notified in painted letters that the "Holy Eucharist" is celebrated every morning at 7.30, and that there is "Confession" immediately after, on Fridays three times; and at any day and hour by previous notice. I was assured that on the eve of the funeral, the body of the vicar's deceased wife was deposited in the church, lights burning round it, and prayers being said during the night; also that cards were sent to members of the congregation, "Pray for the soul of," etc. No wonder Cardinal Vaughan could say that many of the cultured people of England held doctrines and practised ceremonies almost identical with the Roman Church, but that, as they had not the authority of St. Peter, their priesthood was a delusion and their ceremonial invalid! Protestant.

WORK AMONG THE BLIND.—The thirty-ninth anniversary of the day of special prayer and thanksgiving on behalf of the blind will be observed by those who take an interest in Dr. Moon's system of embossed reading (now in 476 languages and dialects), and in the establishing of home-teaching societies and free lending libraries for the blind at home and abroad, on the first Sunday in May. All interested in the blind are invited to unite in prayer. Further particulars may be had on application to Miss Moon, hon. treasurer, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton, Sussex.

COLPORTAGE IN MANITOBA.—Rev. A. Tansey, writing from Somerset, Manitoba, says:—"I am hoping with the opening up of summer to take on work as a colporteur in addition to my ministerial work. My mission district is a large one, consisting of about 500 square miles. I have a number of Indians, as well as Roman Catholics, who never get to any religious service. I have a horse, but I need a gig, in order to carry books, etc., of various kinds. I am asking aid so as to be enabled to push forward this most desirable work. About £25 will enable me to start free of debt."

The Right Hon. Lord Overtoun.

The subject of this sketch, John Campbell White (recently raised to the peerage as Lord Overtoun), was born near Glasgow in 1843. After passing through the schools and University of his native city, he took the degree of M.A. in 1863. His father was a highly-esteemed and philanthropic citizen of Glasgow, a partner of a firm carrying on an extensive and lucrative business. In addition to many other public services, he was the chief administrator of the great fund for the relief of the sufferers on the failure of the City of Glasgow Bank, and also an active promoter of the Livingstonia Mission. Lord Overtoun's mother, a daughter of Mr. A. Campbell, Sheriff of Renfrewshire, was a lady of singularly sweet and winning nature; no mother ever exercised a more beneficent Christian influence on her home; to that influence doubtless were due not only the first serious impressions of her son, but the quiet charm which has marked the whole of his evangelistic career. The preaching of the late Rev. D. E. Macnab, of Saltcoats, and Rev. J. Tait, of Dumbarton, developed the work so gently begun, so that Lord Overtoun's path has been like the shining light, and his childhood, youth, and manhood have all been devoted to Christ. Both his father and his mother have been dead some years.

Beginning as a Sabbath-school teacher before he left school, he still conducts a Bible-class in connection with the Free High Church, Dumbarton, in which he has long held the office of elder. This class has grown to the size of a large congregation, the membership having risen from sixty-seven to 650. It is an interesting feature of his work that however far his interest has radiated over the globe, his own neighbourhood has always commanded his special energies. As an elder his work has always been laborious, diligent, and successful. At the village of Dumbuck, he reared and equipped a coffee-house, begun by one of his sisters, as a counter attraction to the public-house, and it is still carried on with efficiency. Here he often conducts evening service both on Sundays and weekdays; on the second Sunday after his elevation to the peerage he held the usual service. As a preacher he does not limit himself to occasional services, for a London newspaper lately announced that for four weeks he had filled the place of a minister at Bowling, in order to enable him to enjoy a holiday tour.

Inheriting ample means from his father, and being still a member of his father's firm, he has shown himself one of the most liberal of givers. To the schemes of the Free Church he is constantly contributing very handsomely, and whenever an extra effort is needed in a cause that commends itself to him, a generous contribution, occasionally in four figures, is sure to be the result. Sharing his father's interest in Livingstonia, he is now chairman of the Livingstonia committee of the Free Church, and his gifts towards the mission correspond to his interest in it So princely a giver cannot be hid; but outside of all that the public hear of, we have good cause to know that streams of unseen goodness are constantly flowing in every direction, and that hearts without number in various classes are cheered by his thoughtful and generous sympathy.

Lord Overtoun was deeply impressed by the first visit to this country of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, more than twenty years ago. He zealously co-operated with them in their evangelistic work, and in more ways than one, their influence has told powerfully upon him. For many years he has been president of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, an undenominational society, which owed its origin to Mr. Moody, and which in its various organisations has done a great amount of valuable work. More recently, when Mr. Moody was pleading for the establishment of an Institute for training evangelists, he took up the cause, gave a site costing many thousand pounds, became chairman of the directors, and continues in every way deeply interested in the movement.

It was in connection with the same work, too, that he was led to adopt the practice of total abstinence. At one of those meetings he was dealing with a drunkard, and like many another in similar circumstances, he felt that he could not urge on him a course which he was not prepared to follow himself. He is now president of the Free Church Total Abstinence Society, and is always zealous and fearless in urging the claims of the abstinence cause.

As a speaker, Lord Overtoun, without being an orator, is remarkably efficient. As he proceeds his earnestness, clearness, good sense, and simple-hearted kindliness, always carry his audience. The present writer recalls with special interest two speeches tha made a deep impression: one delivered in the General Assembly of the Free Church at Inverness, in connection with the Report of the College Committee, in which, while expressing his high esteem for the Gospel ministry, he urged with great solemnity and persuasiveness the need of the highest style of piety and consecration, on the part of all exercising that office, or aspiring to it; the other at a recent annual meeting of the Free Church Temperance Society, where, in view of all the havoc that intemperance was making, both inside and outside the Christian Church, he besought Christian people to come to the rescue, and take up the most effective attitude for enabling them to resist and extirpate the evil.

But probably Lord Overtoun's usefulness as an evangelist is even greater in private than in public. An intimate friend has told us that in private dealings, chiefly with persons of the working class, he has "a perfectly extraordinary power of getting at once into the heart of the question of their salvation, and bringing them to decision." Young men in his class, waiters in hotels, coachmen on the box, servants in his own and in other houses —all are dealt with by him, and in many cases with success. When on holiday, he makes a practice not only of interesting waiters and servants in hotels, but of having meetings and addresses, to which guests are invited.

In 1867, Lord Overtoun married a daughter of a well-known and estimable Glasgow citizen, Mr. James H. McClure, who has proved a helpmeet in every sense, and, like her husband, an enthusiastic worker for the good of others.

The peerage recently conferred on him through the favour of Mr. Gladstone could not have been bestowed on one of nobler nature, or one more ready to think less of the mere distinction, and more of the opportunity it gives of increased public usefulness. We know of no one more likely to be on the watch against the tendency of rank to make the possessor think more highly of himself than he ought to think, or more sure to have a true regard to those qualities of head and heart in other men which constitute greatness in the true sense. Humble, simple-hearted and unselfish, and full of the spirit of his Master, he will, it is firmly believed, hold on in the course he has already marked out; and sure we are it is the earnest desire of his Christian friends that he may live long to adorn his station and to serve and honour his Master.

THE TRAMPS' MISSION.

Miss Barnett's new report states that it has become quite evident that the simple and kind way in which the Gospel is pressed upon the attention of the tramps is greatly appreciated. During 1894, forty-two fresh unions were supplied with Bibles, Gospels, wall cards, etc., books for the use of casuals, and nine unions received additions to their libraries; 354 workhouses have now been furnished with libraries, and 293 remain unsupplied; in 163 unions special Gospel services are held for the casuals. The visitation in towns of lodging-houses to which tramps resort has been actively carried on by workers in the Tramps' Mission. The following extract of a letter from Rev. T. Hodgson, chaplain of the Shoreditch Workhouse, forms a striking testimony to the value of the Tramps' Mission:—

"My experience as chaplain of a large Metropolitan Union, having casual wards attached, enables me to speak with knowledge of the subject, and of work done by the Tramps' Mission; of the class intended to be reached and benefited.

"My first word is, the importance of the Mission as a social, moral, and religious agency. Those whom it is intended to deal with have either been born to the vagrant life, and never felt the responsibility, duty, and nobility of life, or they have been reduced to the condition of tramps by misfortune, wrong, or incapacity to compete successfully in the struggle of life, but in either case, when the tramp stage has been adopted, they constitute a social and moral sore, and a danger to the community. The Tramps' Mission aims at removing this danger and curing the social disease. The good it has done in a quiet, inexpensive, and unostentatious way is incalculable, and its success is an evidence that the blessing of the Almighty Father rests upon the work.

"The Tramps' Mission is an act of obedience to the command to go out into the highways and hedges and bring back to the embrace of the all-loving Father the erring and wandering sheep; it has realised its object in a vast number of cases. It rescues and saves the lost, it arrests the downward course of others, and brings light and love, hope and restoration to the fallen. The work, then, of the Tramps' Mission has a threefold result. It leads the wanderers to God; it delivers Society from a menace and a danger; and also aids our national economy."

Many interesting details, on which we cannot here enter, are given in the report just issued, and to be had of the secretary, Miss Barnett, 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

The Evangelist.

THE RETURN OF SPRING.

This glad season of the year is God's revival for the earth. Going forth now, we see God working silently, slowly, yet surely. "Thou renewest the face of the earth." All around and about us renewed. Nature seems to have experienced a new birth, and to be making a fresh start. At the word of God the frost-bound earth has been freed, the desolations of winter vanish, and all creation makes a joyful noise. Among the branches of trees full of awful, mysterious life, in orchards soon to be draped in robes of whiteness, on the banks of loosened streams we hear the humming insect, the full-voiced bird, the rustling foliage, singing "unconscious revival hymns" of praise. "For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come" (S. of S. ii. 11, 12).

The causes of the change of seasons are well known. Light and heat, so necessary to vegetation, come from the sun; therefore, the more power he exercises over any given place, the more light and heat that place receives. Observing the course of the sun in the heavens, we notice that from December 23 he gradually rises higher and higher every day, until he has reached his greatest height, and begins to descend again. As he advances upward the length of the day increases, so that it becomes longer than the night, and the sun's rays falling less and less obliquely, heat is accumulated and retained. When on or about March 20 the sun has reached the equator in its northward course, and is therefore an equal time above and below our horizon, his rays fall more directly, heat and light increase, vegetation becomes active, and we call it spring.

Now there is one God in nature and in grace. And springtime in the soul is due to the coming and influence of the Sun of Righteousness. Long ago men discovered how impossible it is to stand before God's cold, and the Bible—endorsed by experience—declares that his cold cannot stand before his heat. Sooner or later frost and snow are conquered by the mighty sun. "The Lord God is a sun" (Psa. lxxxiv. 11); and "unto you that fear my Name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise, with healing in his wings" (Mal. iv. 2). When He appears, cold, frozen souls are thawed, and burst forth, like the earth in spring, into life and activity. At his approach the trees of the Lord become full of sap, the bare branches put forth their leaves, and blossom ripens into fruit.

But let us not suppose that all will be well if we wait passively, as the trees do, for the manifestation of renewing grace. If we do, it will never come. For repentance and confession of sin must precede and prepare the way for blessing. How solemn is the word of the Lord to Hosea, "I will go, and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek Me early." And how suitable is the prayer of the sweet singer of Israel, "Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved."

The spring speaks of the boundless resources of the infinite God. Every winter that has ever chilled the earth has been a heaven-sent prophecy of a coming spring. And every prediction has been completely fulfilled. Spring has followed winter, life has been born out of death, and myriads of many-coloured flowers have again and again declared to the children of men that the ages will never exhaust the inexhaustible wealth and fulness of God. His grace and power, his wisdom and love, are now as always the same.

Spring, moreover, in the fact of its return, reminds us of the faithfulness of God. Have the seasons ever failed? "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." This word, spoken to Noah, has never been broken; it is still sure, still steadfast. And the writer of the Hebrews voiced the thought of hosts of men, women and children when he said, "He is faithful that promised." How gladly and right heartily we echo and re-echo "God is faithful."

Then the miracles of spring are an illustration of what God is able to do for his people. During the long winter months the trees looked dry and dead, but we did not cut them down, for we knew that there was life and vitality hidden away beneath rough exterior which the gentle sunshine would awake and develop. And now as you look upon them you see "a million budding, bursting leaves, an earnest of greater glory yet to come." What poor ideas we have of the Great God. With Him all things are possible. He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that the most importunate intercessor asks, or the mightiest intellect imagines. A thought, a word, and his purposes are accomplished, the soul is restored, and the work of grace renewed within.

Is your soul in a deep winter sleep? Despair not. All nature is an encouragement to hope. Arouse yourself, arise from among the dead, and Christ will give you light. The eternal God Himself bids you cast off the works of darkness, unveil your soul, and draw near to the Sun of Righteousness. Obey, and not less surely than the rising of to-morrow's sun, will the rays of spiritual light impart fresh life and strength and beauty. Waiting in silence and solitude, your emptiness of soul shall be met by the fulness of God, and you shall have all in Him. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

INDIAN NATIVE STUDENTS.

The city of Aligarh, N.W.P., India, contains 46,000 Hindoos and Mohammedans—these two classes being about equal in numbers. Here is situated the great Mohammedan College of India, and, in fact, it is the only college the Mohammedans have anywhere for higher English education. This college is intended chiefly for the sons of Mohammedan gentlemen, and here are gathered together some four hundred of the best Mohammedan young gentlemen from all over India. Many of the better classes in and around Aligarh have had the best advantages here. The Hindoos, too, are not behind by any means, and so it happens that Aligarh boasts of many educated, broad-minded Hindoo and Mohammedan gentlemen. All of these educated classes are peculiarly open to the influences of the truth.

How often we have desired to reach these classes, but have not been able to do much as yet, owing chiefly to the fact that we have no suitable building where we might meet them. In the midst of this great native city we have only two little mud chapels for some of our low-caste converts, but other castes cannot be persuaded to meet here, nor is there accommodation for others besides these humble converts. We so much need a permanent church in the city, a building that would accommodate about 200 at least. Connected with this would be a library, reading-room, and bookshop for the sale and distribution of religious literature. Here we would have our day-school for Christians and others throughout the week. On Sunday and sometimes in the week there would be services, also lectures would be given from time to time. In fact, the building would be generally useful in presenting the Gospel in all these various ways to the people.

We have collected about enough for the purchase of the land. Now we need about £400 for the building. It is useless to put up poor buildings. Nothing but solid brick walls and iron girders with arched roof can stand the attacks of our armies of white ants and the floods that visit us during our heavy rainy seasons; hence the building we propose to put up is one to endure for many years to come.

NOW IS CHRIST RISEN!

WRITTEN ON EASTER DAY, 1895.

(Mal. iv. 2; Matt. xxviii. 6.)

All hail, Thou Sun of Righteousness!
With healing in thy wing.
I claim Thee as my risen Lord,
I claim Thee as my King.

I claim Thee risen from the dead,
Victorious o'er the grave;
The Conqueror of death and sin,
The Mighty One to save.

I claim Thee as my Captain, Lord,
To fight the fight for me;
The foe is strong—I have no strength
To gain the victory.

I claim Thee as my Master, Lord,
Thee only would I serve;
From thy commandments and thy will,
Oh, let me never swerve.

I claim Thee as my Shepherd, Lord,
To guide me day by day;
To call me back with gentle voice
If I should ever stray.

I claim Thee as my Friend, dear Lord,
To sympathise and love;
In saddest hour to cheer my soul
With thoughts of rest above.

I claim Thee as my Advocate
Pleading before the throne;
And Thou wilt never cease to plead
For those who are thine own.

I claim Thee as my Saviour, Lord—
Oh, this is best of all;
For Thou wilt ne'er forsake even one
Of those who on Thee call.

Then, hail, thou glorious Prince of Life!
All hail, thou risen King!
Great Sun of Righteousness, arise,
With healing in thy wing!

RESIGNATION.

Submit yourselves therefore to God.—James iv. 7.

A spirit of holy submission and resignation to the will of God under all circumstances should permeate and characterise every devoted follower of Him who in the Garden of Gethsemane, when his soul was "exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," gave to the world an unparalleled example of resignation to the will of God as expressed in these wonderful words, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me: nevertheless not as I will, but as Thou wilt" (Matt. xxvi. 38, 39). It is the will of our Father in heaven that all his children should unhesitatingly and unreservedly submit themselves unto Him. God does nothing in a haphazard fashion, but has his eternal reasons for every event He prepares for those who love Him. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. xxxvii. 23). "The way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps" (Jer. x. 23). Nothing happens to us by chance. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. viii. 28).

The ills we see,
The mysteries of sorrow deep and long,
The dark enigma of permitted wrong,
Have all one key.
This strange, sad world is but our Father's school,
All chance and change his love shall gently overrule.
How sweet to know
The trials which we cannot comprehend
Have each their own divinely-purposed end;
He traineth so
For higher learning, ever onward reaching,
For fuller knowledge yet, and his own deeper teaching.
What though to-day
Thou canst not trace at all the hidden reason
For his strange dealings; through the trial season
Trust and obey:
In after life and lightall shall be plain and clear.

CROYDON.—A ten days mission has been conducted by Mr. William Forbes in the Temperance Hall, Croydon. The meetings have been interesting and arousing. Pledges have been taken, and it is hoped the seed sown will bring forth good fruit.

H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF TECK will open, on Tuesday, July 9th, the new building of the London Homœopathic Hospital in Great Ormond-street, Bloomsbury, which contains 100 beds and has been erected at a cost of £42,000, of which £35,000 has been already contributed.

HOXTON HALL MISSION.

The good work carried on in this needy part of the metropolis has passed through various vicissitudes since it was begun by Mr. William Noble some seventeen years ago. All along, however, the place has been a centre of earnest effort for the best welfare of the surrounding masses, and much fruit has been reaped. The late Mr. W. I. Palmer, of Reading, had been the chief mainstay of the Mission, in a financial sense, from the beginning, and his lamented death was, of course, a great blow to the workers. The loss of his support necessitated a new arrangement. Pending this, Mr. William Noble himself stepped into the breach, and for nineteen months past he has borne the responsibilities of the work, with the hearty co-operation of the existing workers.

A fresh start in the constitution of the Mission has now been made. Hoxton Hall has become affiliated to the Bedford Association, one of the fruitful London agencies of the Society of Friends. All the established branches of Christian Endeavour will go on, and to them will be added the work of adult schools, which the Friends have specially made their own. A very interesting gathering, to celebrate the fresh departure, was held in the Hall on Monday evening. Many old friends rallied, and some new friends were attracted; while Mr. Wm. Noble and Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Rae constituted connecting links between past and future. The proceedings were highly encouraging. No better chairman could have been found than Mr. Fyfe Stewart.

Hoxton Hall is a fine example of Christian democracy; the workers are mostly volunteers, and the machinery is moved by the people and for the people. It was distinctly a people's night on Monday. In Quaker fashion, the chairman invited free prayer after the opening hymn. The only one who responded to the moving of the Spirit was a humble woman, but her prayer was one of the most real and spontaneous we have ever heard in any public assembly. It was a rich means of grace to hear her. Addressing God in a way that showed she is often at the mercy seat, this lowly sister said: "We are delighted to put our hand to the plough and do thy work. Yes, Jesus is a precious Master; He does lead and guide. We who have to toil for our daily bread, with our mind stayed upon God, can truly say, "He is the fairest among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely."

Equally thrilling were the one-minute testimonies given in ready succession from the body of the hall, by women as well as men. Here is a specimen:—"Seventeen years ago I walked into this hall, a poor, broken-down, hopeless drunkard. I signed the pledge, and gave my heart to God. Here I am to-day, and my wife and children are happy now, whereas they were miserable before." Several of the testifiers rather amused the meeting when thanking God that they had found at Hoxton Hall a wife as well as a Saviour, but the speakers were evidently very serious indeed.

Mr. Noble's report of the interregnum was couched in very modest terms, but its facts were eloquent. Hoxton Hall fulfils Mr. Stead's ideal, for it is a centre of activity every night in the week. One of the most interesting departments is the Girls' Guild of Good Life, conducted by Mrs. Rae, whose work was lately reported on in our columns. After paying all outgoings, Mr. Noble was able to hand over a small balance to the new committee. The hall is about to be "done up"; and it certainly needs a spring cleaning badly. Gifts of books for the young people's library would be very welcome.

Among the other speakers were the chairman; Mr. J. T. Rae, who had some excellent things to say about the Girls' Guild; Mr. Braithwaite, who represented the adult school movement; Mr. J. F. Shorey, who was touchingly pathetic in describing the needs of the neighbourhood and the power of the Gospel to meet the hardest cases; Mr. Benson, of the Belle Isle Mission, Islington, and others. The speeches were sandwiched with bright song from the Hoxton Hall Choir, led by the very musical Read family, each of whom played skilfully on some instrument. Hoxton Hall has started on a new voyage, and the impulse of Monday evening's meeting ought to send it over the bar into the region of smooth seas and fair winds. Mr. Noble has consented to serve as one of the two honorary secretaries; the feeling of the meeting seemed to be that he should undertake the full captaincy of the ship.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE MISSION.

The drawing-room at the Mansion House was filled on Monday afternoon by the friends of Miss Steer's work in the Ratcliff-highway Refuges. Some disappointment was felt at the absence, through indisposition, of Lady Henry Somerset. Apart from this, however, the gathering was most successful.

Archdeacon Sinclair, D.D., who presided, dwelt on the remarkable change observable in St. George's, East, and the notorious Ratcliff-highway. This improvement has been wrought by various agencies, but not least by such operations as those carried on so quietly and efficiently by Miss Steer and her helpers, who attack the evil at the very root, and have been the means not only of rescuing many young women, but also in sweeping away whole colonies of iniquity and vice. Much as has been done, there is abundant room for such effort, and Miss Steer has a right to expect the warmest and most liberal support.

Miss Blanche Leppington maintained that the work of sheltering and guarding little children, of preventing girls from falling into vicious habits, of rescuing those who have gone astray, is a great Christian duty, and is of the first importance to the well-being of the State. After recalling the small way in which this work began, the speaker indicated to what extent it has now grown, and what God has already achieved by it, not only in rescue work, but also, and still more important, in preventive work. Some description followed of the Cottage Homes at Chingford, and of the children therein, snatched from the saddest lives, lovingly sheltered and trained, and won to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Edward White felt that in work of this kind we have the grandest evidence of the truth of Christianity. There is something in the Bridge of Hope and similar institutions which cannot be discovered in any Pagan land. The work is not one of law, but of grace; it is a work of mercy, bringing hope to those who otherwise must have gone hopeless to a Christless grave. God has blessed the work greatly, and therefore we ought to feel it an honour to assist this valuable undertaking.

Mr. J. Compton Rickett spoke of the gulf separating the fallen from the rest of the world—a bridgeless gulf, across which rescue workers, such as Miss Steer, are throwing a bridge, and making escape possible to those who avail themselves of it. After dwelling at some length on various aspects of the work, Mr. Rickett closed with an earnest plea for liberal help.

Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., supported the claims of this Institution. As one of the trustees, he could speak with some knowledge of the internal working of the Homes. The root spring of its success he found to be personal faith and devotion of the lady workers, and the fact that they live on the spot and come into personal touch with those who seek their aid. Having himself examined the accounts over and over again, he could testify to the strict economy with which the whole work is conducted.

A paper laid before the meeting stated that "Each year between 400 and 500 young women and children are helped in our homes, besides those who are assisted only by the night shelter. Preventive work has always been carried on side by side with rescue work (though quite distinct from it), at the Bridge of Hope. At the present time we have seven preventive homes. In the children's cottage homes we have room for 130 children. The names and localities of the cottages are as follow:—The Haven, Ticehurst; The Bairns, Crouch End; The Nest, Chingford; The Cot, Chingford; Regent's Park Cottage, Chingford; Hampstead Cottage, Chingford; The Lodge, for the elder girls and young servants at Clapton.

"For some time we had a small house near the Refuge, which we used as a night shelter; but it was not satisfactory. No part of all the mission requires more systematic management than this, and the most experienced workers find more than sufficient scope for any abilities God has given them.

"It was in the year 1888 we began night shelter work, if not more earnestly, yet in a way calculated to do greater good to a larger number. Many who come to us without a helping hand have no resource but the workhouse or a life of sin. Sickness or loss of work brings to destitution a large number of women who, at the best of times, live but from hand to mouth. The largest number by far who come to our night shelter belong to this category. In the "Bridge of Hope" Night Shelter there is accommodation for twenty-five, and we find that number as many as we can efficiently help. Few realise the large wandering population there is in our midst—the hundreds, I may almost say thousands, who have no home, no regular employment, and consequently no visible means of subsistence. For my own part, I think this class will soon be dealt with otherwise than by the opening of night shelters. At any rate, night shelters should be considered as temporary palliatives for the present distress until better plans are thought out. As long as these wanderers can get a night's lodging, a free meal or two a day, and a few pence to spend in the public-house, they have no desire for better things, and drag on their miserable existence till they die, probably in the workhouse. We see, with painful distinctness, how difficult is the task; for without the most discriminating care we might facilitate the vice we are doing our utmost to combat, and the public-houses would benefit by the pence which would otherwise go for the night's lodging."

Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., dealt specially with the preventive aspect of the work in view of its remarkable results. A good work has been accomplished; hundreds of lives have been saved, and the neighbourhood is greatly benefited.

Prebendary Harry Jones recalled the time when there was no Bridge in Betts-street, no home of rescue or escape, no ladies ready to help the fallen and save the endangered from ruin. How different now, when all who will may find loving hands outstretched to save. Having seen much of these Homes, he maintained that the work they are doing is second to none, and demands the generous support of every patriot and every Christian.

Mr. W. F. Archibald added a few pointed and earnest words, expressing the fullest sympathy with Miss Steer's work at the Bridge of Hope.

Miss Steer added a few characteristic and telling sentences, disclaiming the idea that she had done all this work herself. It has been accomplished by the help of many loving and patient workers. While praising God for the past, she could not help feeling that if the rich merchants of London really understood how much of their safety is due to such labour among the poor, then funds would be furnished abundantly.

UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES.

Missionary sermons were preached on Sunday in the various Free Methodist chapels in the metropolis, and considerable interest was awakened in missions generally.

A Missionary Convention was held on Monday afternoon at Exeter Hall (Lower), when Mr. H. G. Gregory, who presided, spoke briefly on the personal responsibility of every believer to make known the Gospel. Rev. James Chalmers gave an address on "The Gospel and the Barbarians," being a thrilling account of his twenty-five years' life and labours in New Guinea. Addresses were also delivered by Mr. R. G. Rows, Rev. T. Wakefield, and Councillor Mart, of Leeds.

The evening meeting was held in the large hall; Mr. C. Furness, M.P., presiding. The report presented showed that there were in the home and foreign stations combined 380 ministers in active work, and 78,913 church members, being an increase on the year of 527. The total income for the year, including foreign local receipts, amounted to £21,094, and the expenditure, including foreign local expenditure, amounted to £21,172, leaving a deficit on the year of £78.

The Chairman, while thankful for what had been done, maintained that more was demanded. Sufficient progress had not been made. Greater energy and self-sacrifice were called for. He feared that this partial failure might be attributed to the fact that many members were too much engrossed in political, social, or commercial affairs, to the comparative neglect of the great work of the Church. He called for fresh devotion, believing that the churches contained elements of strength, which, if utilised, might become a blessing to many.

Vigorous addresses followed by Alderman Duckworth, Revs. J. C. Brewitt, B. J. Snell, and J. T. Cox.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.

It was a small but very select company that gathered in the lesser St. Martin's Town Hall for the anniversary of this useful society. Dr. Butler, the learned Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, presided, and paved the way for the set speeches by a carefully-prepared and choicely-expressed address, in which he set himself to show how Christian evidences should not be set forth. He said his only claim to be there at all was his experience among the young, and his interest in their welfare. It is too often felt by young students and inquirers that intellectual activity and research in matters religious are discouraged. One sees with pain the most of the able students in our colleges of the present day are loth to go into the bonds of "holy orders," because they fear that their mental liberty will thereby be curtailed. As to the causes that set young people against religion, Dr. Butler recalled four past events which, to his thinking, were samples of the things that manufacture unbelievers. These four acts—all done in the name of orthodoxy—were the expulsion of Frederic Maurice from the professorship; the withholding for a season of the salary of Professor Jowett; the objections raised to the appointment of Dr. Temple to the see of Exeter; and the cry that Darwin's epoch-making book, "The Origin of the Species," involved an attack on Christian truth. As to the burning present day question—the authority of the Old Testament—the chairman strongly urged that such delicate and complicated questions should be left to learned experts on both sides without cherishing any anxiety as to the imperilling of the Christian faith. All questions as to dates and authorship of the sacred writings, he contended, were matters for reason and not for faith, for learning and not for piety. Above all we must not drag into the controversy of the day the godhead of Jesus Christ, and make it a bar to discussion or criticism respecting these literary and historical questions. This is bringing the ark of God into the dust and heat of purely human battle, and constitutes in the minds of the inquiring young one more barrier to the reception of the truth. This whole utterance by the Master of Trinity was a remarkable, and, as some may think, a daring one on such an occasion. When published in its full form it will certainly evoke much discussion, and probably sharp controversy.

Rev. T. T. Waterman, one of the secretaries, in his brief summary of the year's report, was able to tell of much work done and much good result revealed; but in matters financial the net outcome of his statement was that £600 are needed at once to set the current exchequer right, and an extra £250 each year, if the work of the Society is to go forward properly.

The first speaker was Dr. Thornton, of Camden Town, who was discursive, militant, and amusing, but very interesting in his advocacy of the Society's work. He showed that the class specially dealt with is not so much the cultured, thoughtful, reverent youth of our time, as referred to by the chairman, but the noisy, blatant, and atheistic section of our industrial population. Dr. Thornton closed his capital speech by reciting a little incident only a few days old. The children of an infidel lecturer were ill, and the city missionary of the district visited his home. He asked permission to pray for the restoration of the children, and before he rose from his knees the sceptical father was himself on his knees. Last Sunday evening he came to the mission hall, and stayed to the second meeting. Thus kindness disarms opposition. Interesting speeches followed from the Bishop of Grahamston, Professor Redford, and others.

THE NEW HALL MISSION, Wellington, founded by the late Dr. Cranage, is still carried on actively and usefully. Mr. Weston, in his new report just issued, shows a large variety of earnest evangelical effort, with numerous meetings for various classes and regular house-to-house visitation by the missionary. The report may be had from Mr. Robert Weston, Carlton House, Wellington (Shrops.).

THE WIMBLEDON EVANGELISTIC CYCLING UNION, which started in the spring of last year, has done good work in the villages of Surrey. This season's work was begun on April 20, at Cheam, and on succeeding Saturdays visits will be made to Molesey, Worcester Park, Horsham, Carshalton, and Brentford. Further particulars may be had from Mr. William Mayes, 8, Alston Villas, Richmond-road, West Wimbledon, S.W.

THE BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES.

The Spring Assembly of the Baptist body as usual leads off the list of the larger anniversaries; it is in full session this week. The new president, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, gave his opening address on Monday, the subject being, "A Puritan Message to the Democracy."

"We are too luxurious (he said) to appreciate the Puritan's simplicities, too much the servants of forms and conventions to understand his rigorous sincerities, too pleasure-loving to give him credit for honest disdain of the world's frivolities. Think how far we have left that religious atmosphere behind, in which 500 English gentlemen, Members of Parliament, could kneel down together on the floor of the House of Commons, crying to God on behalf of their poor country, and shedding tears copiously as they prayed. Imagine the present House of Commons doing this; think what a power of imagination is needed to reproduce that scene, and then judge how remote that world is from ours. It is absurd to suppose that all inequalities are produced by social conditions. It is only in the sight of God, and in our relationship to God, that there can be anything approximating to human equality.

"Were one of the Puritan fathers to revisit us, he would bring more of the spirit of criticism than of the spirit of congratulation. I could fancy him saying: 'You are not so distinctly separated from the world as we were. You do not look upon its lighter diversions with our stern and scornful eyes. Perhaps we were somewhat too rigid, but may not you be getting a little too lax? Perhaps you are wiser in letting imagination have fuller play, but your popular literature is now so mixed, so sensuously realistic, some of it so defiled, that the young heart, and the old heart too, can hardly escape contamination if it be allowed the free run of the field. You have made your public worship far less sombre than that which we knew. There is more beauty in your sanctuaries, and that is well, if there be also as much strength. Your sermons have been cut shorter and shorter, chiefly in compliance with the dictates of the least religious. Take care that they do not dwindle to the vanishing point. I understand your difficulty; you belong to a pleasure-loving generation, which will hardly enter the Lord's house unless pleasure is written over the portals, and is reluctant to take its heavenly bread without a thick coating of earthly sugar—only remember that the religious life cannot be nourished wholly on sweets. You love music in your services better than we did, though we did not hate it so fiercely as is commonly reported. We swept the organs and choirs from the churches only because they had first driven out everything else; and it seems as if history were repeating itself, and you would by-and-by have to borrow our broom again.' These things the Puritan might say, but he (the president) thought he would also say: 'You have kept the faith, you have jealously preserved the truths for which we fought and suffered; you have not cut away the Bible with German scissors. All that was deepest in us is as deep in you.'"

Last Friday the Young Men's Missionary Association had a meeting in the Mission House, Furnival-street, when stirring words were spoken and the claims of the foreign field advocated by Rev. W. Holdsworth (of the Wesleyan Mission, Mysore); Rev. P. Davies, from the Congo; and Mrs. Williamson, from Barisal.

THE "EMPIRE" THEATRE.—The London correspondent of The Dundee Advertiser has the following in Monday's issue of that paper:—Judging by the appearance of the Empire promenades on Saturday night, I should say that Mrs. Ormiston Chant's crusade has not done one pennyworth of good. The promenades have been narrowed, and the crush is therefore greater than before. Some of the bars have a screen between them and the audience, some have a curtain, but these arrangements do not lessen the drinking, and in no way tend to diminish the particular evil attacked by Mrs. Chant. As far as the promenades are concerned, matters appear to be worse than before. This may be due to the fact that as the space for walking is more restricted, the crowd is denser than in the old days; but the impression produced upon me by two hours spent in all parts of the house was that the structural alterations, carried out under the supervision of the London County Council, have done nothing whatever to forward the movement with which Mrs. Chant's name is associated.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN GLASGOW.

A series of meetings for Christian workers was held in Glasgow on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. The series began with a conference on Saturday afternoon in the large hall of the Christian Institute, which was very largely attended, and the proceedings at which were marked by great fervour. Mr. W. A. Campbell presided. Speaking from Acts xi. 19, he pointed out that the carriers of the glad tidings of salvation to the Gentiles were not a number of ordained men but unofficial men and women. How like Antioch Glasgow was!—a city practically given up to commerce and amusement. Did not these two great factors play a most important part in the lives of most of their citizens? The shop and the factory during business hours, and such entertainments as were to be got in the music-halls and the public-house constituted the lives of the great mass of the people in the East-end of Glasgow; and the warehouse, the counting-house, and the exchange, dinners and dances and theatres were the great important factors in the lives of the West-end portion of the citizens. Let Glasgow be read for Antioch, and let them ask God to print deeply on their hearts what those unofficial men and women preachers of the Gospel to Antioch had printed in indelible letters on their hearts, "Glasgow for Jesus Christ."

Rev. Henry Montgomery, Belfast, delivered a powerful address on Acts iv. 31, urging the need of the times for a thorough spiritual awakening. Interesting evangelistic addresses were also delivered by Colonel Oldham, Mr. Robert Logan, Mr. E. J. Mitchell, and Mr. D. J. Knox.

Tea was served at the close of the conference, and in the evening missionary addresses were given. An open-air meeting was held at the corner of Main-street and Argyle-street. On Sunday services were held in a great many halls throughout the city.

NORTH PACIFIC MISSION.

About two years ago you allowed me to bring before readers of The Christian the needs of the Kitkatla Mission, North Pacific. The generous response that my appeal met with led to the sending out of a mission boat more suited to that dangerous coast than the slight canoe which had previously been the missionary's only means of reaching some of his scattered flock. May I mention a want which exists at the present time?—a want caused by the very success of the work itself—that of a new church.

Rev. R. W. Gurd, the C.M.S. missionary stationed at Kitkatla, writes:—"On January 16 there was a large meeting of all the village to discuss the necessity of building a new church. Our present building is only capable of seating ninety or 100 people, and as there are considerably more than 200 Christians, we have been much cramped for accommodation. I wish you could have been present and heard some of the speeches. All stated that the church must be built this summer, and, with God's help, they were going to do it. The people themselves promised 500 dollars, that is about £100 of English money. They said they would leave earlier for their hunting, and work later, to help the project. It will cost more than twice the sum named to erect a church in such an out-of-the-way place as this is. I told them I would do my best to obtain help from friends in Britain."

No one can doubt that much self-denial is involved in this self-imposed task. Shall we not stretch out the right hand of fellowship and help them towards the realisation of their wishes? I shall be glad to hear from interested friends.—Yours faithfully,

(Mrs.) Mary E. Bowen.

Stoke Lodge, Ludlow.

MISS CARLETON-ARSDALE.—In our issue of September 27 last, there appeared a paragraph concerning Miss Carleton-Arsdale, who was raising funds for a hospital which Miss Crawford hoped to erect at Bethany. It appears, however, that the Government permission necessary is not likely to be granted, the hospitals already existing in Jerusalem being deemed sufficient. Miss Carleton-Arsdale is therefore handing over all moneys collected by her to the Consular authorities. We are glad to state that her action in this and the other matters referred to appears to us to have been all that could be desired.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The presence of the Master, as a special refreshing to each worker, is what we ask for as a prayer-loving band for our monthly workers' meeting. Farewells and welcomings, times of sorrow and gladness, missionaries back after long years of privileged service, others bidding farewell full of youthful hope and burning zeal—all contribute to give a character to each gathering. On this occasion the beloved Mary Steer told us of answered prayers.

At our meeting on Wednesday, April 17, Mr. Walter Campbell directed us to the thought, "glorying in tribulations," which led to "joy in God," and the bringing forth fruit because of the indwelling of Christ Jesus in us, and we in Him. The speaker's own rich experiences of God's power, gathered in labours in India, helped even the youngest toiler, whilst heads of missions seemed to take a fresh hold of the "gift of grace—by the one Man, Jesus Christ."

Our little orphaned band were presented in prayer by Mr. Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest. Sisters in labours abundant brought gifts to aid in outfitting; others helped towards the numerous expenses of the long ocean journey which Mr. Merry and myself hope to take with them, starting on May 2. As in former years, we say with the prophet, "I will trust, and not be afraid." We ask a daily interest in your prayers, kind reader, that the loving Father of the fatherless will give the winds and waves charge concerning us and his little ones. Our definite need is a clear guidance to enable us to place each precious little one into the very home the All-seeing Eye beholdeth is best.

Never have we been more encouraged by the progress of our children in Canada. Out-and-out decisions for the Lord are heard of from week to week. Those over twenty have formed themselves into a missionary society, and by their toil are supporting their representative in South Africa. Others are attending the high schools, paying the expense by their own earnings; if the way is made plain, they purpose to become whole-hearted missionaries.

MISSIONARIES IN MADAGASCAR.

An Extract from a Private Letter.

We are both well and full of work with meetings and classes, often two and three deep every day in the week. The day before yesterday my husband was teaching a Bible-class of more than 1000 people, who filled the large church and overflowed outside. This was at a village half way between here and Antananarivo—one of the twelve hills which form the twelve military centres for Imerina, the fatherland of the Hovas.

Ambohimanga is one of these, being the ancient capital of the whole province. The class has been taught by Mr. Richardson, who has used a book on the Acts which my husband prepared. The people wished to have his book on the Gospel of St. John taught by the author, so he is to visit them every fortnight.

In regard to this and all other mission work here, we cannot help fearing how soon it may all be interrupted by the horrors of war in our midst. Although the French undertake to observe their engagements with Great Britain as to religious freedom "after the country is settled," we should all be under French martial law as long as they should continue to meet with any opposition from the natives. This might lead to anyone being arrested under the smallest pretext, as Mr. Shaw was in 1883.

If the capital is invaded, we and all the other missionaries will have to abandon our house and goods, and take refuge at a distance where we can. Very earnest prayers are being made by the natives for deliverance. Pray for us to have clear light and the spirit of wisdom, besides the special guidance and protection of our Master at this time.

MR. AND MRS. MAN SUKH LAL propose to return to Scotland in May, and will be willing to address meetings during the summer in various parts of the country. The co-operation of Christian and temperance workers is desired, and any wishing to make arrangements, or to hear further about their movements, should communicate with Mr. Grant Jackson, 44, Dick-place, Edinburgh.

FAREWELL FOR ZANZIBAR.

Kilburn Hall was crowded at the meeting held to commend to God Miss B. M. Hurditch and Miss Coote, who, as already mentioned in these pages, have gone to take charge of the Strangers' Rest, Zanzibar. Mr. H. M. Matheson presided, and Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson opened with a stirring address, speaking of Miss Hurditch as one of his own girls, and an addition to the noble company of women missionaries that it had been his duty to send out. While he was in Canada he sent out two ladies, the first two lady missionaries that ever went to the foreign mission field from the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Here in London they sent out three lady members of his church to the mission field, and he was glad to count Miss Beatrice Hurditch as the sixth in that honourable company. He was sure many would follow her and her companion in their career with much interest and with their prayers. Of course he condoled with Mr. and Mrs. Hurditch and the brothers and sisters at losing the company of daughter and sister; but he was far more disposed to congratulate them all that the Lord had honoured their sister in sending her to this work. After a few words from the Chairman and Mr. J. T. Isaac, Miss Beatrice Hurditch said she was not going to a life of pleasure, but expected to meet trials. Some friends thought she was just going away to Africa to die right off. Well, if she was to die, she was willing to get to heaven in a chariot of fever. It was a great trial, leaving all the joys of home and the dearest of parents, but she remembered the command to Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee... and I will bless thee." Each of them had only this one life, and it was worth living to Jesus, cost what it might.

Miss Coote stated she had worked in a London hospital and in Australia, and had seen much of sailors; hence she looked upon her previous work as a training for her new service at Zanzibar.

Mr. Russell Hurditch said that God knew what the parents felt at parting with their dear child; but when she was given to them she had been dedicated to God, as all the seven children had been, and now they were giving her up when God claimed her for work. What was the good of singing high hymns if they were not prepared to follow them out in practical work? It was no use singing "My all is on the altar," and then try to keep it back. He did not look upon it that she was going out to die; he had hopes of good work, and at the end of three years they would have her back, telling them of all the Lord had been doing. A few further words were spoken by Mr. P. Garrioch, Mr. J. J. Sims, and Mr. Edward Hurditch.

These two sisters embarked on board the ss. Irawaddy at Marseilles on Friday, April 12, and passed Port Said safely on Wednesday, April 17. It will be remembered that this steamer is carrying out General Duchesne and other leaders of the French Army about to invade Madagascar.

MISSION WORK ON THE CONGO.—A valedictory meeting of more than usual interest will be held at the Central Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, to-morrow (Friday), at 7.30 p.m. Amongst others who will address the meeting are Dr. H. G. Guinness and Mr. and Mrs. Cole, who have lately returned after several years' labour, and who have a thrilling story to tell of the opening up of new fields. Two ladies who are proceeding to Bolololand will also give a brief testimony. All Christian friends (ladies and gentlemen) are heartily invited to attend.

THE ARMENIAN QUESTION.—Sir Philip Currie, the British Ambassador (says a Reuter telegram), has made representations to the Porte in regard to the conduct of the authorities in the Turkish provinces in continuing the system of oppression and persecution of the Armenians. His Excellency pointed out the danger which would arise from a continuance of these practices, and urged upon the Porte the necessity for a complete change in the interests of the Turkish Empire. In reply, the Porte promised the British Ambassador to send instructions to the provincial governors in the sense desired. The Powers interested are convinced of the absolute necessity of reforms in Armenia, and will base their action in this question not so much on the result of the inquiry as on the generally unsatisfactory condition and the bad administration of the Asiatic provinces of Turkey, the continuance of which would constitute a permanent danger for the Ottoman Empire.

PORTA PIA MISSION, ROME.

Dear Sir,—Your readers are glad to hear of any progress made in the Evangelical movement in Rome. We recently celebrated the third anniversary of the opening of this Mission. Two Italian evangelists having spoken, Dr. Waugh, a missionary for thirty-six years in India, addressed the meeting in English, and his daughter joined him in singing a hymn in one of the strange languages of that vast country. Rev. Wm. Horne, chaplain of Trinity Church, and Rev. Dr. Gray, of the Presbyterian Church, also spoke. The former referred to the great change that has taken place both in the civil and religious aspect of Rome since it has been made free. He had been a witness of the state of things when the city was under the French protection. Dr. Gray exhorted the people to persevere in God's work on the old good line of apostolic evangelisation.

The Roman citizens commemorate regularly once a year, in the month of September, the downfall of the temporal power, forming themselves into a fine procession towards the gate where the victorious troops entered, carrying with them wreaths, which they hang on the city wall where precious lives were lost in the fight. It is fit that we should meet in a special gathering as followers of Christ, to thank God for the formation of an Evangelical church in this interesting locality, quite close to the historical gate, and to turn our faces to Him, in adoration, prayer, and thanksgiving for his marvellous doings amongst us. The attendance at the meeting was good, and the Church and congregation were greatly invigorated. The mission is connected with the Free Italian Church, which has so many flourishing causes all over the Peninsula. J. E. T.

THE CONGO BALOLO MISSION.

Dear Sir,—You will have been grieved to hear of the home-going of our sister, Miss Judd, of this station. After labouring for some eighteen months at our Ikau station, she came up here in March of last year, and from that time until her death, was used of God in carrying on a very blessed work in the towns surrounding Bongandanga. In one distant town named Bavaka, where our sister visited two days a week, she had a school of some sixty children; now there has been built (by the natives themselves, free of cost) a splendid strong chapel, where large numbers of people gather from time to time to hear the Gospel. We trace the beginning of the present good work at Bavaka to our sister's self-denying efforts, upon which rested the blessing of God.

The women of Central Africa are extremely difficult to deal with, and we could ill afford to lose one so well qualified to work among them as she was. God knew best, and though He has taken her whom we valued and loved away, He will continue his work. Mrs. Bett has lately left us to go home to Europe on furlough, so that we have now no sisters at this station. Mr. and Mrs. Cole will, we expect, be coming back this year, and extra "hands" are sorely needed, for the harvest truly is great.

Miss Judd was sick only a week, and as far as we could see, seriously ill only three days. She passed away on October 12. Will our Christian friends join us in prayer for her mother and sister, and also for us, that we may be kept faithful unto death?—Yours faithfully, Arthur J. Bowen.

C.B.M., Bongandanga, Lofoli River, Central Africa, Jan. 12.

THE EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY, which enables British Christians to assist in Gospel work on the Continent, has reached the jubilee of its formation. The treasurer, Mr. J. C. Bumsted, has issued an appeal for increased support of the work. He says: "The Society is strictly undenominational, both as regards its constitution at home and its work abroad, its one purpose being the spread of genuine Christianity and the promotion of vital godliness. It is at the present time in a position of peculiar need. The long-continued depression in trade, the loss by death of many generous supporters, and the competing claims of multitudinous newer societies, have combined to reduce its resources to a point which has made it necessary to diminish its grants in all directions, and to turn a deaf ear to the most pressing appeals." The secretary of the Society is Rev. George Giddins, 13, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

"REVIVAL AND THANKSGIVING."

Dear Sir,—I was much encouraged by noticing in a recent number of The Christian, that it had become the united cry of many, "Wilt Thou not revive us again?" I had not known of a general movement in that direction—being mostly confined to bed for the last few years, and so, in great measure, shut out from the world. But I can testify to such a constraining force within as had led me to make that prayer the burden of my cry also, for my own soul and household as well as for our more immediate neighbourhood and beloved land. Let us keep on pleading, aye, and "wrestle in prayer," giving the Lord "no rest" till the blessing descend.

Two things have specially struck me in connection with this subject, namely, that in Malachi iii. 10 we are commanded to bring all the tithes into the storehouse . . . and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Here we have the promise of abundant blessing plainly stated, but upon certain conditions. If we, as believers, are heedless of that first part of the verse, by withholding from the Lord that which is his due, how can we claim, or dare to expect, Him to fulfil his part?

Again, how lamentable it is, especially, I think, in small circles of Christian activity, how much envy, jealousy, rivalry, or party feeling predominates amongst many workers in the vineyard.

How grievous to our Lord! And how much it hampers their usefulness, dishonours the cause of Christ, and hinders the Holy Spirit's progress and blessing! As some of your correspondents have suggested lately, surely we have much need to set apart a time for humiliation and confession; for it is only when brought very low— abasing and "humbling ourselves before God" that we may dare to look up and expect "fulness of blessing." Might not this be wisely considered in the early part of the programme for May 1st—the day set apart for Thanksgiving and Praise? "Them that honour me I will honour."—Yours in Him,

A Regular Subscriber.

"GO UP TO ZION" (Jer. xxxi. 6-9).

Dear Editor,—There are yet some abiding amongst us who can look back more than fifty years, when both the Established Church and Nonconformist communities were vigorous and sound in the faith. It is not so now—vigour is without spiritual fervour, and the pure, health-sustaining Gospel is expanded and adorned with every visionary thought of a darkened imagination. The 23rd chapter of Jeremiah records a corresponding period of the Church in Judea—and there have been many since.

Friends could be named who join with me in believing that a thoroughgoing testimony at this time is of pressing importance. There are some, it is said, who, moving within certain limits, are so entranced in the growth of what is good that they refuse to recognise the presence of a soul-famine; even as a well-fed committee may fail to realise that they are starving bodies. Yet the Church spiritual is now so crushed beneath the weight of self-righteousness, formal devotion, and little disguised idolatry that it moans for deliverance—timid and trembling—weak and well-nigh mute. It has been in a similarly dangerous state at different epochs throughout the ages, from "Moses and the Prophets," when "types and figures were a glass in which they saw the Saviour's face," to our own day of "clearer light vouchsafed to us."

One hundred and fifty years ago the situation was almost identical, when the noble Countess of Huntingdon raised the standard, under which so many bravely fought, irrespective of particular minor differences. That great example is surely worthy revival, and if "times are altered," which need not be admitted, yet the present moment groans for relief.

So conspicuous was the change wrought under her influence, that in one country church could be counted 1800 communicants. The Countess did not lean to the idea "of a new Reformation Church"; there are "bodies enough," and to spare, as there have been endless endeavours to purify "the Church" that way. Driven as we have been, to inquire, "O where shall truth be found?" the time surely must be very nigh for every hesitating preacher of a crucified Redeemer to join heart with hand—and there must be a goodly band in hiding, fit to put on the "whole armour of God." True service is undenominational. That was the keynote of the good Countess's leading, and after one hundred years that foundation remains with a pure testimony. —I am, yours truly,

One of the Congregation of the Saints.

TO WEARY INVALID SAINTS.

Dear Sir,—May I be permitted through you, to address a few words of encouragement to those "prisoners of Jesus Christ" who have long been confined to house or bed?

Dear fellow-sufferers, "bound together in the bonds of affliction," although prevented from meeting in public in "the assemblies of saints" have not we special opportunities granted us, in private, for "holding up" (in prayer) the hands of those more actively engaged in "the battle for the Lord?"

We cannot all be a Moses, but let us remember that the Aarons and Hurs are needed also. Let us "be of good cheer," and thank God that we are accounted worthy to serve Him by suffering— "For unto you it is given . . . to suffer." "When we are weak then are we strong" (in Him) and as his grace is made "sufficient" for us, is not that enough?

Let us then "lean hard," lean wholly on Him, for every need, and care, and pang, and seek to glorify Him mightily, by bearing not only patiently, but cheerfully, whatever He sees fit to lay on us, knowing well that He never makes a mistake, and that "all things work together for good" to his children. "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." One of the Least.

PROHIBITION IN NEW ZEALAND.

Sir,—I have been reading your paper for April 11, and I see your remarks on Woman's Franchise in New Zealand. I have just returned from that country on a visit to my friends, having lived there twenty-eight years, and I think you will be obliged to me for telling you that you have made a great mistake in saying that the women voted against prohibition. I was in New Zealand at the time of the last election, about eighteen months ago, and of course voted myself. It was remarked at the time that the women came forward and voted en masse in favour of prohibition, so that several persons succeeded in getting a seat in the House who would not have done so without the help of the ladies.

I see that you only copy from another paper, The Truth, but as I do not know where that paper is published, I mention this to you.—Yours truly,

Dominick Browne.

Clevedon, Somerset, April 16.

P.S.—I am well known in Christchurch, New Zealand, where I have lived many years, and I hope soon to be back there again.

Dear Sir,—In your "Notes and Comments," April 11, you quote Dr. Brookes in The Truth to the effect that "the majority of the women voted in New Zealand against temperance." As I was one of the women who voted in New Zealand, I may be permitted to correct that assertion. If the women did not vote temperance, the men must have been extraordinarily virtuous, for a majority of members were returned to the House of Representatives in 1893 pledged to uphold and amend the Alcoholic Liquors Sales Act, which already provides for prohibition by a three-fifths majority, and by a bare majority for 25 per cent. reduction.

If Dr. Brookes had been in New Zealand after the election, he would have realised the "Conservative" indignation with the women for having thrown out some of their best and cleverest statesmen who would not support the local control of the liquor traffic, and putting in inferior inexperienced men favourable to that measure.

Thanks to the late Sir William Fox, Mr. L. M. Isitt, and the women, the liquor traffic in New Zealand is giving place to better trades.—Yours faithfully,

Emma E. Packe,

A reader for over twenty years.

CHAMBERI MISSION, MADRID.

Through the goodness of the Lord, this work is still sustained. We have concluded an eight days' mission, availing ourselves of what a friend called "an attack of religion" that comes over this people during Holy Week. Mr. Nisbet and I were helped by Mr. Wigston, from Linares, and my eldest son, Dr. S. B. Fenn, now home from Madagascar, and nightly an attentive audience occupied our 250 seats. Towards the end of the week many others crowded round our open windows. We had two or three exhortations during a little more than an hour's service.

On Friday night the procession of the "holy burial" visited us with the images of El Cristo, followed by La Virgin, with a multitude of lighted candles and a good brass band. All were drawn up in front of our open gates just after we had commenced the service. After favouring us with their performance and crying "Viva la Virgin!" they withdrew; we did not interrupt our meeting for an instant, though the procession stayed eight or ten minutes. Of the fruit of the mission we cannot speak yet, but several persons professed to have believed.

On Saturday the attack was nearly over by ten o'clock in the morning. The Lord was declared to be risen by the ringing of bells; the troops no longer had their muskets muzzle downwards; the traffic, suspended since Thursday morning, now resumed its ordinary course, for God was no longer dead. The Sunday of the resurrection was celebrated by an extraordinary bull fight (six bulls), theatres reopened, etc. The Holy Week had come and gone, and had left no holiness, or any sign of it. Such is the religion of Rome. Albert R. Fenn.

THE SEDGLEY TEMPERANCE MISSION.

The report of this mission states that "the presence of God the Holy Ghost has been most marked during the past twelve months at all our meetings—the Sunday evening, the Thursday evening, the out-of-door, Bible class, and prayer meetings. A goodly number have signed the pledge, and of those who have kept it some have, through Divine grace, added to temperance godliness." Great energy is thrown into Protestant testimony, tract distribution, and temperance effort, in view of the deplorable ruin wrought by intemperance. Full information may be had from F. A. Homer, Esq., J.P., Sedgley, Dudley.

THE FINSBURY PARK CHILDREN'S SERVICES have been well sustained throughout the year. A week's mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Hutchinson, of the C.S.S.M., was much blessed to the establishment of young disciples, and the gathering in of many precious little ones. The report just issued by Mr. W. L. Seyler, Glen Villa, Atterbury-road, N., is full of encouragement.

EASTERTIDE AND THE SAILORS.—With a view to providing the seamen with a rational means of occupying their time at the holiday season, Rev. G. J. Hill, of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society organised a series of special meetings and services on Good Friday, Easter Monday, and the following Thursday. A number of sailors signed the pledge at the meetings, and have given evidence of their intention to keep it.

KENTISH TOWN.—The Dickenson-street Hall, London City Mission, has held its annual meeting. Mr. Rob. Balch, local treasurer, read the annual account of the Boxholders' Association, the members of which number eighty-eight, and spoke of Mr. Chalk, the resident missionary's efforts as manly and wholehearted. Mr. Chalk said he congratulated himself, not on anything he had done, but on the dear friends he was surrounded by. He told of the earnest toilers in the vineyard of Christ, and the storming of the devil's kingdom, of the various agencies at work. They had hearty and delightful services; women's meeting conducted by ladies, three prayer-meetings weekly, a grand medical mission, conducted by Christ-like and devoted doctors. Addresses followed by Revs. R. Dawson, D. W. Vaughan, and others.

BROTHERS IN CHRIST.—An American paper says that in Morgantown, W. Va., a thrilling scene was witnessed recently in a revival which is still in progress. There came forward, among others, a Chinaman, in whom the pastor, Rev. Dr. S. H. Day, had taken an interest. He had scarcely knelt when there arose, came forward, and knelt at his side, a Japanese young man, himself a Christian and law student at the university in the city, and with his arm over the Chinese penitent, gave the seeker after Christ instructions, with such success that both soon rose from their knees, and the Japanese brother, with his ampler English, announced that Chan Sing Fauk felt that he had found Christ. How much nobler than the mutual murdering, called war, taking place at the time in China.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A Y.M.C.A. has been formed at Salcombe in Devonshire.

Switzerland reports this month 390 Associations, with 6420 active members and 1600 associates.

The Bermuda Y.M.C.A., which has between thirty and forty members, owns a small building free of debt, and is doing a good work.

Blackheath "annual" has just been held, under the presidency of Mr. Alexander Young. A quiet but excellent work was reported, and the finance statement showed a balance in hand.

The latest report states that there are now 125 Y.M.C.A.'s in France, with 1386 members, 1386 associates, and 795 juniors. Three Associations own their own buildings, and two engage the whole time of their secretaries.

We regret to hear of an accident which befel on Saturday afternoon five members of the Devonport Association, who were on a boating excursion to St. Germans. The boat was swamped, and two out of the five were drowned.

Much blessing has been experienced during the past few months by the workers of the Wakefield Y.M.C.A. One of the most active friends of the Association writes: "We are still reaping, and have a very happy work going on."

The annual report of the Leamington Association reviews the work of the past year with much encouragement, dwelling specially on the Bible readings, evangelistic meetings, and the village mission carried on by the Y.M.C.A. band.

In connection with the eleventh anniversary of the Hackney Y.M.C.A., a most eloquent sermon was preached on Sunday night by Canon Fleming, B.D., at St. Luke's Church, Hackney, followed by a collection on behalf of the funds of the Association.

Mr. Wm. A. Boyd, general secretary of the Dublin Association, and Mr. W. H. Roberts, district travelling secretary of the South of England, will attend the Springfield (U.S.) Conference of the American Y.M.C.A.'s. They will also attend the Secretaries' Conference at Hartford, Conn.

The Ware Y.M.C.A., which has been only recently formed, held a series of inaugural meetings on Easter Monday in the Town Hall. The services of several able speakers were secured, and a work was launched which promises to be of the utmost benefit to the young men of the town.

The conference of the National Scottish Y.M.C.A. and F. Union is to be held at Saltcoats from Sept. 10 to 12. Apart from questions of organisation, the subjects to be discussed are, "Present Social Problems: What can the Y.M.C.A. do for their Solution?" "How parents, ministers and elders, and employers can help the Y.M.C.A.," and "The Associations and Foreign Missions."

The annual breakfast meeting was held on Good Friday morning again this year, and the attendance compared favourably with that of recent years. Dr. Gladstone presided. The addresses given by the president, Revs. W. P. Legg, H. E. Stone, J. C. Carlile, and Mr. J. J. Sims were quite in keeping with the reputation of the meeting, and were thoroughly appreciated by those present.

On Easter Monday the annual conference of the Midland District Union of the Young Men's Christian Association was held at Leamington. At the morning sitting Mr. F. C. G. Ellerton presided. The annual report, which was adopted, stated that the membership had reached the highest total yet recorded, there being 3907 members and associates, against 3587 last year, together with 188 members in the junior sections.

The annual conference of the Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, one of the most important subjects considered being "The place of the spiritual element in Y.M.C.A. work," was held at Leamington on Easter Monday. In connection a special service was held in the Public Hall, Windsor-street, on Sunday afternoon. The address was given by Rev. J. Sellicks on "The Gospel of Getting on: Counsel to Young Men."

Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, who for six years has been general secretary of the Cork Association, has resigned with a view to devoting himself as an honorary worker amongst the Y.M.C.A.s throughout the country in conducting missions. The first series of meetings have just been concluded at Sheffield. It is believed that not a few will be thankful for the visit of Mr. Bailey, whose return to the "city of shining steel" will be warmly welcomed.

The Manchester Y.M.C.A. Young Men's Emigration Advice Society has sent out its second party for this year (being the 133rd party since 1883) of young men wishing to go abroad to learn farming, with the consent of their friends, has just sailed for Manitoba. They come from Wolverhampton, Southport, Lincoln, Tunbridge Wells, Bolton, Plymouth, Dublin, and Manchester, and were introduced to each other as usual by Mr. Newett the day before they sailed, when a leader was appointed.

Work in the Bombay Presidency (as well as throughout the rest of India) is very encouraging. Mr. Frank J. Clark, who is shortly expected in this country, writes that there are now in the Presidency ten Associations and three auxiliaries, with an aggregate of 1104 members. Mr. R. D. Pringle, the general secretary sent to Bombay by the English National Council, has been acting as secretary of Rev. John McNeill's mission in Bombay, which has been followed by most blessed results.

The Upton Park and East Ham Association started on 15th February, 1894, with nineteen men. There are now 115 members and associates on the roll. During the year there have been ninety-seven meetings held, and it is significant to note that the purely spiritual meetings have been the best attended. The new home speaks for itself, and although it cannot be said to be replete with every modern luxury, it may truly be said that it is homely, hearty, and hospitable. At present the work is going on steadily, although the attendance at some of the meetings is not so large as was anticipated.

Two Associations, city and college, at Aintab, Turkey, though small, are being well maintained. The secretary of one of them recently writes:—"During the last two years the cause of the Y.M.C.A. in Turkey has been almost entirely lost sight of, because the Government has been suspicious in the extreme, on account of the political question. As far as I know nowhere in Turkey, except here (and at Samakov) do such associations ostensibly exist; though there are other places no doubt where the young men still meet for prayer. In this city we carry on our work amid many trials, and much need the prayers and sympathy of friends who enjoy so many privileges in Great Britain and elsewhere."

The Easter Conference of the North-eastern District, held by invitation of Rev. H. E. Fox and friends at Durham on Easter Monday, was attended by fifty delegates from fifteen Associations. Mr. C. S. Wilson presided. After a number of verbal reports by delegates present, and written reports from the Associations not represented, had been read, an adjournment took place. In the afternoon, the Mayor of Durham (Dr. E. Jepson) invited the Conference to meet in the Council Chamber, and gave an address of welcome, saying he firmly believed in the establishment of these Associations for the benefit of young men, for their work was of incalculable value. A paper was afterwards read by Mr. W. C. Pike, of the Sunderland Association, on "The Y.M.C.A.: Its Necessity and Scope."

THE Y.W.C.A.

A UNITED conference of United States and Canadian Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers was held last week at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

At the St. Benet's branch, carried on at St. Benet's Hall, Mile-end-road, under Miss Edith M. Richardson, much good work has been done. There are 115 members.

The Evangelisation department arranged 170 meetings and missions last year, 64 in London and 106 in the South of England. Some of these missions lasted a week or more. In addition a large number were organized without the help of the department.

It is twelve months since the new rooms at 26, Lichfield-grove, Finchley, were opened, and they have been a continual cause of thankfulness, having proved most suitable for the work. The number of members on the books is 130, including fifteen from Edgware, where a weekly Bible-class is held. Misses E. S. Smalley and Gregory are hon. secretaries.

The Council of the London Y.W.C.A. have arranged, in co-operation with the Tourist Department of the Regent-street Polytechnic, to offer special facilities to Y.W.C.A. members and their friends who may be desirous of making a holiday tour in Switzerland, Norway, Italy, etc. A prospectus giving all information, can be had through local secretaries or from the London office, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

The Cork Y.W.C.A. Institute reports twelve to sixteen permanent boarders for last year, and about 200 visitors. The young women's Bible-class has been much blessed, while the missionary meetings and temperance work have been most successful. It is delightful to read that five of the members are now in training for the Foreign Mission Field: the expenses of two of them are being met out of the fund for "Our Own Missionary."

The membership of the Teachers' department is 594. Branches have been started at Carlisle, Newcastle, and Merthyr Tydvil. Twelve teachers have asked for a new branch at Maldon. A Bible-class is about to be started for the teachers of West Ham and Forest Gate. Several have written from Birmingham asking for a branch to be commenced. Mrs. Amand Routh, 14A, Manchester-square, W., will be glad to hear from any teachers in public elementary schools willing to co-operate.

Miss Reynolds, secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A., started last Saturday on a tour which is to last till Christmas. She goes first to Cape Town, where she will confer with the Y.W.C.A. committee, and probably spend a fortnight in seeking to open up fresh work. Miss Reynolds will then proceed to Hobart Town, Tasmania, whence a tour will be made of the leading centres in the Australasian Colonies. It is hoped that a conference of Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers will be held at Melbourne. The Hon. Mrs. Henley is honorary secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A., and the office has been located at No. 17, Old Cavendish-street, London, W. The committee will value the active co-operation of all interested in the spread of the Y.W.C.A. in the Colonies.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

THE Endeavour Society of Fayetteville, Ark., started a mission school which now has an attendance of 125.

The Australian societies make much of systematic Bible-study, thus ensuring for their work stability and fruitfulness.

A "Quaker meeting" was recently held by the Methodist Episcopal Society in Philadelphia on the occasion of its anniversary. No leader was appointed, the meeting being conducted entirely from the floor. The plan was an entire success. E. P. T.

During evangelistic services recently held in Bradford, Penn., the young ladies of the C. E. Society cared for the children of parents who would otherwise have been obliged to stay at home, but who, by this arrangement, could attend the services. Sixty children were cared for during a single service.

At Dorchester, Mass., twenty-nine members of the Village Y.P.S.C.E. united with the church on a recent Sunday, and thirty-eight active members have joined the society within a month. At the last consecration meeting eighty-six of the eighty-eight active members present stood up and took part in the meeting, and all within an hour.

The committee appointed by the Irish Wesleyan Methodist Conference to consider the question of the Church's work amongst the young, has unanimously resolved to recommend the Conference to adopt with some slight modifications, the Christian Endeavour movement; the suggested name being "The Methodist Society of Christian Endeavour."

The South-west District of London Union held a convention in Edith-grove Congregational Church, Chelsea, on Easter Monday, under the presidency of the president, Rev. C. Ingrem, of Wimbledon. The afternoon meeting was mainly business, and was taken part in by a large number of Endeavourers. At the evening meeting Mr. Davies' address will not readily fade from memory. The three excellent papers which followed by three Endeavourers were patterns of point and pithiness. The complete success of the meetings proved the wisdom of the conveners in arranging for them on a Bank Holiday; and the tone of thankfulness and hopefulness which characterised the whole proceedings, speaks well for growing power of this remarkable movement in the south-west district of the metropolis.

BUCKHURST HILL.—For twenty years now Mr. G. H. Lord, assisted by other helpers, has held the fort at Princes Hall, and God has signally blessed the testimony to the cleansing power of the blood of Christ and the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost. Every night in the week meetings are held in the hall and an increasing missionary spirit prevails. A drawback to the work lies in the fact that the hall is not free from debt. It would greatly gladden the heart of this brother and his fellow-helpers if any practical help were forthcoming towards the extinction of this debt. Mr. Lord's address is Florence Villa, Queen's-road, Buckhurst Hill. Encouraging services were held at the Hall (outside in the afternoon and inside in the evening) on Easter Monday.

GOD'S LIGHT IN THAT BOOK.—In Dingah, Punjaub, the missionaries of the Church of Scotland have met with much opposition from the Hindus (Sikhs). But one of the most prominent of the adversaries has just been won over in a remarkable way. He asked for a private interview with the missionary, who expected a fierce expression of hostility, and who was immensely surprised when the man pulled out a New Testament and said: "Sahib, I have read this book, and I find it to be pure and holy." After a little talk about the too common failure of Christians to obey the precepts of the Book, the man went on to say: "Up to ten days ago I was a bitter opponent of yours. I gave a public lecture against you, and against your work. Then I resolved that I would expose your Book. So I began to read it in order to pick faults in it; but, do you know, as I read, I was drawn to it. My heart was captivated, and now I cannot oppose you. I know God's light is in that Book." He is now determined, he says, that mission work in Dingah is not to be hindered.

IRISH NOTES.

The governors of the Presbyterian Orphan Society have just added 213 children to their previously very large list.

A new wing, erected at the expense of Mrs. Cairnes, as a memorial to her late husband, Mr. Thomas Plunket Cairnes, has been opened in connection with the Cottage Home for Little Children at Kingstown.

Professor Marcus Dods visited the North of Ireland last week, and lectured to large audiences in Newry, Armagh, and Belfast. He also preached twice in Belfast on Sunday week on behalf of the Presbyterian New Church in Duncairn Gardens.

The Cork Women's Christian Temperance Association, now in the third year of its existence, is in a flourishing condition, and is doing excellent work in the South of Ireland. It started with a membership of seventy, and now it has the names of 350 on its roll.

The Tralee branch of the Y.M.C.A. is making an earnest effort to meet the spiritual wants of the fishermen at present at Fenit. A hulk, which has been purchased and fitted up, serves as a mission hall, where services are held on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and are largely attended.

What has been known for many years as the Belfast Town Mission is to be designated in future the Belfast City Mission. This organisation is totally distinct from that carried on under the same title by Rev. R. C. Johnson and his helpers, and it is thought that the change in the name will therefore cause much confusion.

Miss E. J. Chadwick, daughter of the Dean of Armagh, has been accepted by the committee of the Church Missionary Society, and is going out as a missionary worker to Uganda. Rev. T. R. Buckley, curate of Maryborough, has also been accepted by the same society for mission work in Uganda. Both are to be sent out immediately.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Glasgow Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic at its recent annual meeting passed a strong protest against the Indian Government manufacture and sale of the drug.

The Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland admitted 105 children last year, making a total of 450 cared for during that period. It is desired to raise an endowment fund of £100,000. There are many calls on it to help the orphans of fishermen, but the resources of the society do not at present admit of that.

Rev. Thomas M. Lawrie, Dowanhill U.P. Church, Partick, died last week in Ayr, where he had been temporarily residing. He occupied his own pulpit on Sunday, 7th inst. It is supposed that he caught a chill, which developed into catarrh of the stomach. Mr. Lawrie, who was a native of Edinburgh, and about eighty years of age, was ordained to the ministry in 1841. He was a broad-minded man, an able and effective preacher, and his genial temperament and homeliness made him exceedingly popular with all who were connected with Dowanhill Church.

A contributor to the Aberdeen Free Press who has lately visited Stornoway, gives some curious glimpses into the religious prejudices of a section of the people. There is, he says, a large and shepherdless congregation of Free Church seceders in Stornoway, numbering about 300. One of the most intelligent and worthy members of this body gave the following three reasons for seceding—first, because Dr. Rainy had made a Bible which left out some of the books of the original. Being questioned how he knew this, he said that a friend of his had bought a Bible in Greenock, and on looking for a certain text, he could not find it, so he knew it was Dr. Rainy's Bible! The second reason was that Dr. Rainy believed that man was descended from an eel. The third reason was that Dr. Rainy had promised an increase of £20 a year to each of the Highland ministers if they would swallow the Declaratory Act!

THE AMOY CONGREGATIONAL UNION has been meeting for a number of days, and some points of general interest may be noted. There is progress outward. More than a hundred new members have been added. This is small as compared with the greater things sought for and expected. The more important progress is in character, and all that aids to it. The troubles in connection with old superstitions and idolatrous customs are by no means all over, but they are fewer. Contributions for maintaining and spreading Christianity now number several thousands of dollars a year. Christian fellowship is increasingly valued, and prayer for one another is a growing power. There is progress, too, in medical missionary work, both for men and women.

Amoy, Feb. 25. J. Sadler.

PERSONALIA.

Archdeacon Farrar has been appointed Dean of Canterbury.

Principal W. Garden Blaikie, of the Free Church College, Edinburgh, and Mrs. Blaikie, celebrate their golden wedding on May 20. They hope to have all the members of their family present with them on the occasion.

General Booth will leave London about the second week in August for South Africa. From South Africa he is going on to India, and from India to Australia and New Zealand. He expects to be away between six and seven months.

Rev. David Baron intends leaving London next week, accompanied by Mr. Marienburger, on another mission tour in Eastern Europe. On Monday next, at 4 p.m., there will be a prayer meeting at the Mission House, 114, Whitechapel-road, to seek God's guidance and blessing in reference to this tour.

Rev. Isaac F. Row, Indian secretary of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, has gone to Australia on furlough. He has been a very successful evangelist in many parts of India. His address for a short time will be:—"Wesleyan Book Depôt, King William-street, Adelaide." This may interest Anglo-Indians in Australia.

Rev. G. D. Macgregor, who at the end of last year retired from the pastorate of Paddington Chapel, which he had sustained for thirty years, has been laid aside for several weeks with a severe attack of influenza. He has been recruiting in the country, and has returned with restored health, and able to fulfil his preaching engagements.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has received a pressing invitation from Mr. Moody, and from three other sources, to visit the United States during the coming summer months. His plans, however, had been already settled. He hopes to spend the first two weeks of August at Llandudno, where he will give daily Bible readings, and afterwards to visit Switzerland.

Rev. Theo. J. Meyer, the venerable Presbyterian missionary to the Jews, recently bade farewell to the London Presbytery, on his departure from London. Acknowledging kind words by Dr. Thain Davidson and Mr. R. T. Turnbull, the aged missionary said he had hoped to die in harness; but now, in whatever of rest might be granted him here, the cause of Israel, and the whole work of the Church he has so long served, would have a place in his heart and prayers.

Pastor Frank White, we regret to learn, is compelled to seek entire release from all mental work, pastoral responsibility, and care for a lengthened period. He sails with Mrs. White in the Etruria for America on May 11. Mr. White asks the prayers of our readers for himself, wife, and two sons, and especially for his much-tried and long-attached flock. All communications may be addressed "Care of Mr. W. H. Gaussen, Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill." Only those marked "urgent" will be forwarded.

Mr. H. M. Matheson's jubilee as an officer of the Presbyterian Church (four years in the Diaconate, and forty-six in the Eldership) is not to pass without some kindly public recognition. At a recent meeting of the North London Presbytery, in which Mr. Matheson has had a seat through a large part of his half-century of office, a motion to take notice of his faithful service was made by Sir George B. Bruce. The Presbytery cordially agreed to appoint a small committee to consider the best manner of associating itself with an occasion of deep interest.

Rev. J. Fordyce, General Secretary of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, and formerly its commissioner in India, has sent his resignation to the directors. This has been accepted, on the understanding that he will still aid the Society by tongue and pen as far as he can. He retires after serving the Society a quarter of a century. The resignation does not take effect till the end of June, after he has entered his seventy-seventh year. Till then all communications should be sent to him at Simla, Cambridge, or 7, Adam-street, London, W.C.

Rev. Dr. Maclaren.—Union Chapel, Manchester, was crowded on Sunday morning, when Rev. Dr. Maclaren preached on his return from a three months' tour up the Mediterranean. He was bronzed and full of vigour, and his visit to Palestine and Egypt has greatly benefited him. He was very heartily welcomed by many friends, and in his sermon referred to the length of his ministry and the bond of union that existed between himself and the congregation. He spoke with all his old eloquence and earnestness, but with unusual emotion. He said he was thankful he had been permitted to resume work among his flock, he was grateful for their sympathy and the cordiality of their welcome on his return.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on a week of children's services at Winchcombe, Gloucestershire.—That blessing may attend work begun by Colonel Freeman among the educated classes and Parsees of Bombay.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been evangelising at Montgomery, Ala., with large congregations and many seeking salvation.

Alves, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith, Aberdeen, recently conducted a fortnight's mission here, when much interest was manifested.

Mr. G. C. Needham has been conducting mission services in Boston, Mass., and its environs. Mrs. Needham is an efficient helper in the work.

Abbots Langley, Herts.—Mr. Goudie has finished an eleven days' mission in the Baptist Chapel here. The attendance throughout was splendid, and the results have been most gratifying. Several have come out openly on the Lord's side.

Mr. W. R. Lane has been conducting a four days' mission at Burley-road Baptist Chapel, Leeds. He has spoken with much power, and the Holy Spirit has blessed the Word to the salvation of souls. The friends thank God for his coming amongst them.

Hertfordshire.—A band of brethren spent the Easter holiday in village work through Hertford. A few towns and many villages were visited, tracts and Gospel booklets were widely distributed, and the Word of Life proclaimed. The Hertford brethren showed the visitors no little kindness.

Ireland.—Evangelistic missions have been held in Birr Parish Church by Dr. Wynne, Bishop of Killaloe; in Clontarf Methodist Church by Rev. J. M. Alley, of Drogheda; in Kilrush Methodist Church by Rev. J. Good; and in Minterburn Presbyterian Church by Mr. Crawford, of the Irish Evangelisation Society.

Shipston-on-Stour.—A series of Gospel services have been held in the Baptist chapel here by Mr. John G. Stanger, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were well attended, and it is believed that great good has been done. The evangelist commenced a mission at Throop, near Bourne mouth, on Sunday last.

Leicester.—Mrs. Bosworth, of Stepney Green, has been holding a fortnight's mission in St. Nicholas-street Chapel. For long the church has been wrestling with God for a gracious outpouring of his Holy Spirit's power, hence when the evangelist came she found preachers, leaders, and members ready to co-operate in the work of the Lord. The meetings daily increased in power, and ere the mission closed upwards of sixty (principally of our young people) volunteered for the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. P. M.

KENSAL TOWN MEDICAL MISSION.

The report of the past year's work of the Kensal Medical Mission states that "the attendances have increased to 4102, of which 1301 have been new patients. It is a cause of great thankfulness that all patients have heard the way of salvation simply told in the meeting we have when the patients assemble, and, in some instances, we have had the joy of seeing the fruits in their true conversion to God. One beautiful case was that of a woman, who, one afternoon, during the singing of the hymn 'Happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away,' accepted Jesus as her Saviour. Later on, when, through her joining the mothers' meeting and Bible-class, we got to know her, we heard from her own lips how that afternoon she had claimed pardon through the Blood. She is now living as a bright witness for Christ.

"Our Home of Rest has continued to be appreciated by all who visited it this year, and all returned much strengthened and refreshed. We much want this Home to be known amongst a larger number of people, for last year we often had vacant beds—it is open to any women and girls needing change."

Communications should be made to Miss E. C. Thompson, The Cottage, Kensal-road, W.

"BECAUSE GOD LOVED ME."—Three new stations have been opened in the forty miles between Chin-chew and Eng-chhun. One of them, Soa-thau-sia, is the shrine of a popular saint. Another of the three places, Ho-chhi, was the home of a ripe Christian saint, who has gone to the better home. She first heard the Gospel at the Chin-chew Hospital, and received it "like a little child, so simply and so gladly." Her disease was incurable, and she was sent home to die. When they told her she could not recover, she answered with a beautiful faith, "It was because God loved me that He let me have this disease; how else could I ever have heard of Jesus, or found salvation for my soul?" Miss Graham visited her afterwards in Ho-chhi, and found her brave and steadfast, anxious that the mission should come to the town, in order that her friends and neighbours might hear the Gospel which had brought joy to her own heart.

OBITUARY.

PROFESSOR J. D. DANA.

The death is announced of Dr. James Dwight Dana, the eminent mineralogist and geologist, for forty years a professor at Yale College, U.S.A. He had a world-wide reputation, being a Fellow of the Royal Society (England), Member of the Academy (France), and connected with other scientific bodies in Europe. He was the author of a number of learned works, and a man of Christian faith and influence. His lecture at Yale, in March, 1890, on "The Genesis of the Heavens and the Earth, and all the Host of Them," as reproduced in Vol. XI. of the "Old and New Testament Student," was a very instructive exposition of the opening chapters of the Bible.

MR. ANDREW MOUAT, HULL.

This esteemed elder fell asleep on Thursday, April 11, passing peacefully away in his rest. His work for the Presbyterian Church, extending over thirty years, entitles him to be called the father of Prospect-street Church, Hull. To his great efforts in the early history of this congregation are due the position the church has so long held, not only in itself, but also in originating and helping the sister churches of Holderness-road, Grimsby, York, and latterly Newington. He was most generous in his givings, and the Church's schemes will suffer much by his removal. Although he had reached his eighty-first year, his intense interest, not only in the affairs of his beloved Prospect-street, but in all matters affecting the Lord's work, continued to the end.

MR. EDWARD HUTCHINSON, LIVERPOOL.

The death of this well-known leader is an immense and irreparable loss to Methodism. He was so quiet and undemonstrative that very few had any idea of the extent of his services and liberality. He did not use his great business success to heap up riches for himself. He gave constantly, liberally, in all directions. He was as ready with his sagacious advice as with his purse. His death is a terrible blow to Lancashire Methodism. There seems no one to take his place. At first he did not altogether approve of the London Mission; but, the moment he came to understand it properly, he became one of its warmest friends, and was to have presided at the approaching anniversary of the West London Mission. But that anniversary must now take place under the shadow of a great loss. Inspired doubtless by her father's missionary enthusiasm, his eldest unmarried daughter is now receiving a medical education in London, in order to go as a medical missionary to the East.

REV. RICHARD CHEW, SHEFFIELD.

One of the ablest preachers and leading workers in Free Methodism has passed away in Rev. R. Chew, ex-president of the United Methodist Free Churches. This is the second loss the Connexion has suffered within eight or nine days, Mr. Chew's death having followed quickly after the death of Rev. M. T. Myers. Mr. Chew was highly esteemed for his erudition and life, and his death will be widely regretted. He was born in 1827, and entered the ministry in 1847. He took an important part in founding the denomination, and has since filled every office of honour that his brethren had to confer upon him. In 1866 he was elected connexional secretary, and in the following year president, and again in 1881 he filled the presidental chair. At the last annual assembly he was appointed to succeed the Rev. A. Holliday as Principal of the Theological Institute, Manchester, and would have entered on his duties next August. He preached for the last time at the end of January in Hanover Chapel, Sheffield, and was shortly afterwards taken ill and quietly passed away on Good Friday. In an early issue we hope to give a portrait and sketch of the deceased.

REV. OLIVER M'CUTCHEON, D.D., LL.D.

Widespread regret is felt throughout Ireland at the unexpected death of Dr. McCutcheon, president of the Methodist College, Belfast, who passed away, after a brief illness, on Sunday week, aged sixty-nine years. Deceased was a native of Omagh, and entered the ministry in 1852. For many years he acted as secretary of the Methodist Home Mission Fund, and latterly as one of its treasurers. Some four years ago, on the death of Rev. Dr. McKay, he was elected president of the Methodist College, Belfast, and under his care that institution reached a degree of prosperity it never previously equalled. He used his pen freely, and although he did not publish much in book form, he contributed many valuable articles from time to time in religious newspapers and magazines. He was an able preacher, a wise administrator, a faithful pastor, and a kind friend. He took an active part in all that concerned the good of the community in which he lived, and his name was not only on the list of many committees, but, as far as his time permitted, he attended their sittings, and effectively aided them by his counsel. His last appearance in public was at a mass meeting held in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, on the evening of March 26, to oppose the establishment of drinking bars in connection with the Belfast Industrial Exhibition, and one of the most vigorous and pointed addresses on the occasion was delivered by the deceased. Altogether, he was a man of sterling principle, and took the deepest interest in everything that concerned the welfare of his native land and the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

REV. G. C. KNAPP, BITLIS, TURKEY.

The blow that has been so long hanging over our mission circle came upon us on March 12 in the death of our senior associate, Rev. G. C. Knapp, who passed away from apoplexy, in his seventy-second year. For months he had been helpless, suffering on a bed of languishing. Though two of us had been absent in the outside field, yet fortunately we were all present, and able to be about the good man's bedside as the emancipated spirit took its flight to the better land. Though his mind had been for some time beclouded, towards the last he was favoured with returning faculties, and left some comforting words as a legacy to his afflicted family.

This worthy father of the Evangelical work in these parts, and his estimable wife, saw troublous times in those early years beginning with 1858. If opposition was so rank as to contest his every foothold in town, now all the churches and monasteries vie with one another in doing honour to his memory. Owing to the status quo generally, all eyes are turned on Protestants, and missionaries in particular, all of which, we trust, may be but an earnest of greater spiritual progress and still higher Christian fraternity for all humanity here. As our small, select procession, largely made up of the mission circle, arrived at our Protestant church, a novel sight met our eyes. The large audience-room was already thronged, while prominent among them were three leading priests, with their gaudy clerical robes, and surpliced singers, with the paraphernalia of a noted burial service. Christians closed their places of business, and gathered in such numbers that before the service was over there were in all about 2000 present, including crowds that could not enter the church, but were at the burial outside.

Considering all the experiences of early years, when keen opposition left no little prejudice to rankle in the hearts of the more aged, it was quite an innovation to have old church functionaries follow in quick succession the American missionary's prayer and Scripture selections, with chants and intonations from their church book. Together they sat, on the same platform, as if belonging to one family while various speakers eulogised the good man's deeds. Few were disposed to turn back to the dark days of the past, but rather to face hopefully towards the future. The deceased was spoken of as a "pioneer of new principles and doctrines," one whose tongue had never given pain, "an Israelite in whom was no guile." "These foreign workers had brought in education, and been instrumental in elevating Armenian diction in the land"; "had begotten in the race new impulses of a higher manhood amid more propitious surroundings." We closed our exercises after more than three hours. Keen sympathy is turned towards us in these trying times, all the more from what is mutual because of heavy misfortunes that came upon certain provinces in their Christian population, during the past year especially—sympathy born of a clearer understanding on the part of outsiders as to what our religion is made up of, and the unselfish motives that actuate the workers, leading them to sorrow for any phase of down-trodden, suffering humanity. (Rev.) R. M. Cole.

Bitlis, Turkey, March 14.

THE EARLY AND THE LATTER RAIN.—In the April issue of Jews and Christians (6d. Nisbet & Co.), Dr. Thomas Chaplin, for many years resident in Jerusalem, examines the assertion which has frequently been made during recent years, that the climate of Palestine has been undergoing a change, by more copious "latter rains" than have been known for many generations. After quoting from many sources, ancient, mediæval, and modern, he concludes: "There has come down to us an unbroken chain of evidence that the rainfall and fertility of Palestine have in every age been in their main features the same as now, and that there is no proof, indeed, no indication, that the latter rains have ever been permanently withholden. If the latter rains have not been withholden, they cannot be restored. Yet it is remarkable, in connection with the opinions current with respect to their restoration, that whilst during the sixteen years ending 1892 the mean rainfall was 26.66 per cent. greater than in the previous sixteen years, the increase of the latter rain, if taken as that which fell in April and May, was no less than 56.49 per cent. If March, April, and May be taken as the period of the latter rain, the increase was only as 6.00 inches to 5.38 inches, or 11.5 per cent."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Free Church Congress passed a strong resolution in favour of the local veto.

Steady, satisfactory progress is reported in temperance work in Canada on the lines of the C.E.T.S

At the tenth annual meeting of the Chesterfield branch of the Midland Railway Temperance Union, it was reported that the branch now numbered 171 members.

The sixteenth annual Gospel Temperance Mission, under the auspices of the Watford and District Temperance Union, has been held in the Clarendon Hall, with encouraging results.

General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught will preside at a meeting of the Army Temperance Association, to be held at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on Thursday, May 13.

No fewer than 409 Good Templars have recently been elected as parish or district councillors, vestrymen, or guardians. Several districts have yet to report, and these, together with many who are elected as town or county aldermen and councillors, will doubtless bring the number up to 500.

The Lancashire and Cheshire Temperance Union has held its annual meeting, Mr. Alderman Park presiding. The report spoke of unusual activity and progress in every department during the past year. New unions had been formed in Southport, Heywood, St. Helens, Barrow-in-Furness, and Lymm.

Mr. Buxton, the Under-Secretary for the Colonies, stated lately in the House of Commons, that according to the latest returns the spirits annually imported into the Oil River Protectorate were 1,355,000 gals.; into Lagos, 1,680,000 gals.; the Gold Coast, 1,450,000 gals.; Sierra Leone, 295,000 gals.; and the Gambia, 47,000 gals.

Mr. Thomas Edward Murphy has been conducting one of his most successful temperance campaigns in the city of Lewiston, Me. The movement was endorsed by the most prominent men of the city. One Sunday evening all the churches gave up their meetings and the congregations united in the Gospel temperance meeting, when 700 signed the pledge.

The Brockley Temperance Union, which embraces nearly all the churches and temperance societies in the Brockley district, has held a well-attended meeting in the Lecture Hall of the Lewisham High-road Congregational Church. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., gave an address, pointing out the progress made by abstainers, and the successful results in the experience of those who adopted it.

Rev. Thomas Evans reports that during his recent winter temperance campaign through the Punjaub, Sindh, Bombay, Berar, and the Central Provinces, he has organised twenty-one new associations, and enrolled about 2000 new members. He believes that the more intelligent among the people of India begin to realise the danger to which their country is exposed from increased use of strong drink. The Kayasth movement against the use of liquor is an encouraging sign; the Brahmo and Arya Somajs are also teetotallers. He laments, however, that many staunch Hindus, acting contrary to the teachings of their faith, are beginning to indulge in the use of intoxicating drinks.

The National Council of the B.W.T.A., to be held in June next, will be distinguished by some new departures of unusual interest and importance, in consequence of the third biennial meeting of the World's W.C.T.U. taking place in London the same week. Representatives from many lands are expected to be present at the "World's" Convention, which is fixed for Wednesday, June 19, in Queen's Hall. Over three hundred delegates are expected from America. For these united meetings it is proposed to form a white ribbon choir of five hundred voices, composed of members and associate members of the B.W.T.A. The Sunday services preceding the meetings are already being organised in many places of worship and halls in London and the suburbs; these devotional meetings will be addressed by white ribbon women.

As to alcoholism in France the Actes du Congrès de la Ligue Française de la Moralité Publique, now published, contain many papers of great medical interest. First is Dr. Legrain's important contribution to the literature of alcoholism. As chief physician to the Ville Evrard Asylum, Dr. Legrain has had unusual opportunities of studying the progress and effect of alcoholism. His wards are filled with victims of intemperance. M. Legrain describes in a vivid manner what he calls "collective alcoholism"—the influence exercised by intemperance on social and political phases of life. Public meetings are frequently held at wine shops, and alcohol is apparently an unavoidable element in political discussion. Alcohol plays a fatal part in elections. It takes a prominent share in multiplying and fomenting strikes. In short, it is an enemy to the prosperity, not only of the individual, but of the State.—British Medical Journal.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. J. J. Lias has been appointed Chancellor of Llandaff Cathedral.

Canon Brooke, rector of Bath, on Tuesday announced his determination to resign in consequence of ill-health.

Dr. Kitchen, Dean of Durham, was seized with very serious illness on Saturday week, but is now progressing well.

Rev. R. A. Squires, well known as a useful C.M.S. missionary in Bombay, has been appointed to St. Peter's, St. Albans.

Rev. George Forrest Browne, Canon of St. Paul's, was consecrated on Sunday in St. Paul's Cathedral as Bishop Suffragan of Stepney.

The acceptance by Mr. John Buxton, J.P., of the office of President of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, in succession to the Earl of Harrowby, is announced. He is a staunch Protestant, and a liberal supporter of all Evangelical enterprises.

Bishop Selwyn presiding lately at the Church House over the London Committee of the Melanesian Mission, stated that of the £6,000 anually expended, about £1,200 came from the endowment fund, largely bequeathed by Bishop Patteson. The missionary vessel, Southern Cross, without which nothing could be done, cost £2,000 per year.

Within a few weeks Canon W. L. Bevan will have completed his fiftieth year of ministerial work as Vicar of Hay. He is widely known as an authority on Church history, a writer of educational works, and a contributor to Smith's Bible Dictionary. To signalise his approaching jubilee, the inhabitants of Hay and friends of Canon Bevan intend presenting to him a suitable memorial.

Mrs. Creighton, wife of the Bishop of Peterborough, recently addressing a meeting of the Birmingham Ladies' Union of Workers Among Women and Children, remarked that she could not but believe that a great deal of the failure of rescue work in the past, and in many of the institutions connected with the reformation of women, had been due to the fact that they had been very largely managed by men.

At Ribchester, near Preston, the Evangelical Protestant Mission is making excellent progress. Some years ago a body of the parishioners left the parish church, owing to the unscriptural doctrines propounded by the High Church Vicar, and decided to commence a mission where they could worship in accordance with Evangelical teaching, and hear the Gospel in its simplicity. Preachers from Blackburn and other towns have visited the village, and as a result a great revival has taken place.

Dr. Percival, the new Bishop of Hereford, was enthroned on Sunday, at Hereford Cathedral. His sermon concluded with a vigorous appeal on the Armenian atrocities. Even if the English people had not direct political responsibility in the matter, it would be our duty as Christians to cry shame; but we had very direct responsibility, and if we did not take action we should be sharers in the guilt of the Turk. Our honour as Englishmen is besmeared and defiled so long as these atrocious deeds in Armenia are permitted, and it was our duty to see that the possibility of the repetition of such deeds was removed.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A mission room has been opened at Farley Hill, between Matlock Bank and Darley Dale.

Rev. W. J. Butler, of Westgate Church, Peterborough, has been ordered to take six months' rest.

Rev. Alexander Forrester, late of Billingshurst, has been recognised as mission pastor at Deptford.

It has been decided to erect an additional chapel at Folkestone to accommodate the worshippers living in the West-end of the town.

Mr. W. H. Hill, who for the last ten years has laboured as evangelist at Kimberworth Independent Church, Rotherham, has been appointed minister at the church at Thorpe.

During the year thirty scholars of Milton Sunday-school, Huddersfield, have joined the church. In the schools there are now 813 scholars, ninety-three of whom are members of the church.

Rev. Thomas Hill, presiding at the annual meeting of the Congregational Board, held last week, mentioned that on the previous Sunday he had entered on the fifty-seventh year of his ministry.

Miss Fletcher, of Blackheath, has offered £50 a year to assist in supporting a resident evangelist at Fritchley-green, where there is a population of 1000 without a Nonconformist minister.

It is stated that overtures are being made by a leading church in North London to Rev. Dr. R. Thomas, of Boston, United States, with a view to his settlement in this country. He is known to have a desire to spend his closing years in his native land.

The manual of Islington Chapel (Rev. R. Berry) reports the admission of sixty members, making the total now on the roll 483. In the Sunday-school are 680 scholars, of whom 150 are members of the church, ten having been received into fellowship during the past year.

In Hassocks Chapel on Easter Sunday two sermons were preached by Mr. Tomkins, of Plumpton, in connection with the settlement of the pastor, Mr. T. Turner; and on Easter Monday a tea and public meeting was held. Pastor and people were greatly refreshed, as the result of the services.

Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, addressing the local Congregational Union, said a marked change was taking place in the attitude of the working men to Christ and his Gospel. Whenever any church had opened not merely its doors but its heart to the working people it had found no more fruitful field of labour than among them.

Calls.—Rev. Hugh Jones, formerly of Mansfield College, Oxford, to Wharf-street, Brisbane; Rev. W. H. Hill, of Kimberworth, Rotherham, to Thorpe, Yorkshire; Rev. G. Currie Martin, of Nairn, N.B., to Reigate, Surrey; Rev. R. Chatfield Jude, of New College, to Erith, Kent; Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Oxford, to Union-street, Brighton.

Resignations.—Rev. Henry Dolamore, of Dronfield; Rev. A. W. Bennett, of Southsea; Rev. William E. Day, of South Brisbane, Queensland.

BAPTIST.

Rev. G. W. Oldring, of Long Sutton, is seriously ill.

The report of Lower Circular-road Church, Calcutta, shows 122 members.

Memorial stones have been laid of the chapel in course of erection at Westward Ho.

The late Mr. Franklin, of Salem, Longford, has left £1000 towards the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society.

Immanuel Church, Southsea, has decided upon the erection of a new place of worship, not on the old site, but nearer to Fratton, a new district.

Rev. Wm. T. Float, of Barking, has been invited to resume the pastorate of the church at Foxton, Leicestershire, which he occupied from 1877 to 1887.

The Metropolitan Association of Strict Baptist Churches reports sixty churches maintaining active union with the Association. At these churches there are 3853 members, 6956 Sunday scholars, and 608 teachers. The baptisms last year numbered 137.

The Pastors' College Evangelical Association has chosen as the subject of its eighth annual conference, "How to Maintain and Increase the Pastor's Own Spiritual Life." This will be opened by Revs. H. E. Stone and J. S. Morris. The sermon will be preached by Rev. Thomas Spurgeon.

As the outcome of a tour in some of the villages of Lincolnshire during the past few days, Rev. E. A. Carter and Alderman Cory, of Cardiff, propose making some important recommendations with reference to the future management of a number of Baptist churches which hitherto have found it difficult to struggle along. The church at Holbeach is to be taken over by the Baptist Pioneer Mission, and several other churches, including Gedney Hill, in the Holbeach district, and Sutterton, on the Boston side, have appealed to be taken under the Pioneer Mission.

Rev. C. Rudge, Sevenoaks, Kent, hon. sec. of the Nyassa Baptist Industrial Mission, pleads the case of the famine-stricken millions of British Central Africa. "In many districts every atom of native food has been devoured by the locusts, many of the natives have already perished of hunger, and the reports of the missionaries are simply heartrending. "We could employ hundreds of extra natives on our missionary coffee plantation if we had the food with which to pay and support them for their labour. This would cost less than one shilling a week for each individual. We can ship maize from London at £5 per ton, and this is better than rice, and less than half the price."

Calls.—Rev. H. J. Martin, of Conduit-road, Plumstead, to New Mill, Tring; Rev. T. Leader, of Bristol College, to Fuller Chapel, Kettering; Rev. J. M. Bergin, to Camberley, Surrey; Mr. A. D. Brown (son of Pastor A. G. Brown), to Herne Bay; Rev. D. Garrow, of Glasgow, to Waterfoot, near Manchester.

Resignations.—Rev. J. Turner, of Trowbridge; Rev. C. Broome, of Fressingfield; Rev. T. Yauldren, of Ashwater.

METHODIST.

Charles-street Chapel, Cardiff, was destroyed by fire on Good Friday.

New chapels are being built at Brownhills (Yorks), Scalby (Scarborough).

New schools are to be erected at Sherrington and Stony Stratford, near Wolverton.

A site having been secured at Okehampton, steps are being taken to raise funds for the erection of a new chapel.

It is expected that Rev. G. Packer, of Huddersfield, will be elected President of the Methodist New Connexion Conference.

Dr. Moulton is now quite recovered from his attack of influenza, and will shortly leave Cambridge for rest and a change of air.

A new mission chapel has been opened at Brundall, near Norwich. The new school chapel in Park-lane will be ready for opening in about a fortnight.

A strong plea is being made by the Wesleyan President and others for help in rebuilding the chapel at Headless Cross, Redditch, which was completely wrecked by the gale of March 24.

Dr. Rigg stated at the quarterly meeting of one of the Home Mission Circuits in his district that this was probably the last time he would attend as chairman of the district. The time was approaching, he said, when he must think of retiring from such work altogether.

The three Methodist Conferences of South Australia were held in Adelaide simultaneously. The Wesleyan Conference reported an increase of 1022 members, the Primitive Methodist 160, and the Bible Christian 358, making an increase of 1540 members for Methodism in the colony. The Bible Christian members have increased 1000 the past five years.

Upwards of 200 were present at the tea meeting held in connection with the anniversary of Clapton Park Tabernacle on Friday week, and the meeting which followed was most enthusiastic. The remarkable evangelistic and philanthropic work of the past year formed an inspiring theme for the speakers. A net increase of sixty-three church members was reported.

The London Wesleyan Methodist Council met on Monday at the Centenary Hall, when Professor J. Agar Beet opened a discussion on "Modern Biblical Research in its bearing on Christian Thought and Faith." He believed that historical faith was on a sounder footing now than it was fifty years ago. They also had a better method of studying theology. He then proceeded to deal with certain difficulties which had arisen during his research. The more he studied John's Gospel the more was he personally convinced that it was the production of the Apostle.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new chapel is being built at Northrop Hall, near Hawarden.

The English Presbyterian Synod meets in Newcastle on Monday next, April 28.

The winter session of the Presbyterian College has been closed with an address by Principal Dykes.

St. John's-wood Church, of which Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson is minister, reports a membership of 1,192, including 305 at the mission church in Kilburn.

The Davies Lecture, in connection with the Calvinistic Methodist General Assembly, will be delivered this year, at Exeter Hall, by Principal Edwards, of Bala.

The interesting old Presbyterian church at Aston Tyrrold has its anniversary—now well on to the 230th—in June. The preacher this year will be Rev. Alexander Connell.

Rev. Dr. Mathews has sailed for the United States in order to visit the Presbyterian Assemblies, and arrange the meetings of the Pan-Presbyterian Council to be held next year in Glasgow.

Mr. Robert Stark who, as organising evangelist, has for years done valuable service in connection with the North London Presbytery, having withdrawn from active work, owing to advancing years, is settling down in one of the most delightful spots in Berkshire, the village of Blewbury, in which the curfew bell is still rung nightly, and the old Bible is still chained up in the parish church.

The premises in front of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, Upper George-street, have been altered and fitted for use of congregational work. The lower floor is used as a class-room for the infant department of the Sunday school. The drawing-room floor has been turned into a handsome parlour for the use of the various ladies' meetings during the week. The two upper storeys have been beautifully fitted and furnished for chambers for young men.

The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland has had a successful year in 1894, its increase in membership having been greater than for many years past, and its missionary and benevolent fund having increased by nearly £6000. In twenty years it has made up the loss of about ninety-four congregations in England, which it surrendered to form a union with the English Presbyterian Church. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth." The testimony of this Church to Christ has been consistent, and his blessing has been upon it.

Calls.—Rev. P. Macdonald, of Edinburgh, to the Gaelic Church, Stornoway; Rev. H. M'Cluskey, of Glasgow, to Fullerton Church, Irvine (accepted); Rev. W. Davies, of Graig, Merthyr, to Melincrethan, Neath; Rev. John Thomas, to Tyldesley, Manchester.

Resignations.—Rev. A. M. Macarthur, of Mumbles; Rev. R. Eames Williams, of Ganaddv, Bangor.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The contingent of officers to commence work in British Guiana has sailed.

The Self-Denial week has been held in Africa, and has been the most successful the Army has held in that country.

Mrs. Ballington Booth has been successful in enrolling some hundreds of auxiliaries during her recent tour in the United States, which has been attended by people of all classes.

Mr. Bramwell Booth held a large meeting of young men, particularly for those not directly under any religious influences in the Freemason's Tavern last week, and purposes continuing such gatherings in the metropolis.

Commissioner Ouchterlony, the lady officer in charge of the work in Norway, has recently had an interview with the Queen, who expressed her gratification at the work done by the Army in that country. A few days later Her Majesty sent a donation to the Army's funds.

Since the inauguration some few months ago of the Naval and Military League, that branch of the Salvation Army formed for work amongst soldiers and soldiers, persons connected with no less than 160 regiments and ships have joined the league, and the number of soldiers and sailors now in membership amounts to several hundreds.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Wooburn Green, on 16th inst., Rev. Taliesin Davies, aged seventy-two, who for forty years has laboured devotedly as pastor of the Congregational Chapel at Wooburn.—At Bedford, on 14th inst., Bishop John England, aged eighty-one, a devoted minister of the Moravian Church.—At Hurberton-road, Whitehall Park, Mrs. F. Jones, aged fifty-nine, well known and loved as an earnest worker.—At Brecon, Rev. Henry de Winton, Archdeacon of Brecon, a leading clergyman.—At Princes Risboro', Mrs. S. Loosley, aged ninety, a faithful follower of Christ.—At St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Rev. James Monaham, aged forty-nine, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, who for twenty-six years has done good service.—At Littlehampton, Mr. H. Lock, for fifty years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Dowanhill, Glasgow, Rev. T. M. Lawrie, aged seventy-six, who for fifty-four years had done good ministerial service.—At Stourpaine, Dorset, Mr. R. Cook, aged eighty-eight, a faithful local preacher.—At Coseley, on 14th inst. (suddenly, during service in the chapel), Mrs. Kitely, aged fifty-two, a quiet, earnest believer.—At Wincanton, Mr. Robert Green, a leading worker and Sunday-school superintendent.—At Abergele, Rev. E. T. Davies, aged seventy-three, a useful Congregational minister.—At Sale, Mrs. E. Morris, widow of the first pastor of the Congregational chapel, and herself an active worker.—At Dunmurry, Mrs. Browne, widow of the late Rev. J. D. Browne, M.D., Presbyterian minister of Manorcunningham, co. Donegal, in her eighty-third year.

Appeals.

Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh asks friends to replenish the treasury of his "Gratuitous Tract Distribution Fund," which is considerably overdrawn, that he may be in a position to respond to pressing appeals. Every subscriber of 5s. will receive an assorted parcel of tracts of the value of 10s. Contributions should be sent to him at 70, King's Cross-road, London.

The Orphan Working School at Haverstock-hill and its supplementary houses appeal urgently for aid. The income for several past years has been quite insufficient, and the board has been compelled to borrow from their bankers a considerable sum to meet current expenses. Although philanthropic work may be called upon to bear its share of "bad times," there should always be "bread enough and to spare" for the children. The Orphanages are well and frugally conducted, and I venture to suggest that one of the best returns for charitable outlay is given by a work of this kind. Here, at least, there is no waste or failure to tempt the donor to regret his gift. J. Compton Rickett.

TO METAMORPHOSE FAT PERSONS.

We were reading in the Penny Illustrated Paper how to reduce obesity, wherein it says in that very excellent publication: "The corpulent will be glad to learn how to lose two stone in about a month with benefit to health, strength, and muscle, by a comparatively new system. It is a singular fact that the patient, returning quickly to a healthy state, with increased activity of brain, digestive, and other organs, naturally requires more food than hitherto; yet, notwithstanding this, he absolutely loses in weight one to two pounds daily, as the weighing-machine will prove. The book, 'Corpulency, and the Cure,' (256 pages), containing the 'recipe' can be had gratis from Mr. F. C. Russell, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C., by sending cost of postage, 4d." We had the curiosity to send to this specialist, and found to our surprise that he had discovered a simple herbal remedy, most pleasant to the taste, which entirely disposed of the necessity of starving oneself if he wished to be rid of all superfluous matter. An interesting point which goes to prove that the almost magical compound is beyond doubt harmless is that in prescribing it in a tentative way to lean persons, or rather to those who carry no superfluity of fat beyond that which is required as fuel for Nature's furnace, the medicine is absolutely inoperative, attacking only that unhealthy, disease-creating waste accumulation which is the burden of the fat creature's existence. In many cases where people take decoctions reputed to be new medical discoveries to cure some specific disease, they may recover by the action of the medicine, or Nature may have effected her own cure. In the case of corpulency, if a simple remedy undertakes to reduce a person, say 7 lb. in a week, all that one has to do is to get weighed, and thus prove it conclusively. So it is with Mr. Russell's compound, but he asks you to prove it in twenty-four hours only.

The following is an extract from Leeds Times, December 1 1894.

CURIOUS EXPERIMENTS IN CORPULENCY.

A Mr. Russell, author and specialist in obesity, has experimentally tried the effect of administering large doses, to moderate lean persons, of his well-known herbal discovery, which is so marvellously effectual in reducing superfluous fat, with the result that there is not the slightest alteration or diminution of weight recorded, thereby proving conclusively to our minds that it is only the unhealthy adipose waste tissue which is destroyed, for after dispensing a few fluid ounces of his remarkable vegetable compounds he succeeds in destroying the diseased fatty mass at the rate of from 2 lb. to even 13 lb. in seven days. There can be no ambiguity about it, or any person can test this for themselves by standing upon a weighing machine. He explains that all lean persons carry a certain amount of fat necessary for the natural production of heat in the body, but Nature has only stored up her requisite stock in the healthy system, which she most zealously guards, and thus declines to part with an ounce to the persuasions of Mr. Russell's vegetable tonic, however immoderate the dose may be, which testifies abundantly to the fact that it is only a chemical solvent of insalubrious adipose tissue. There is no doubt that the inventor of the composition must have possessed a profound vegetal knowledge in selecting this simple but peculiar combination.

Those who resort to the pernicious products of the mineral kingdom, or even the deleterious sections of the vegetable world, doubtless can decoct something powerful but injurious in its action; such, however, require no laudatory commendation; but Mr. Russell (we herewith append his address: Woburn House, 27, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C., the author of "Corpulency, and the Cure," 256 pages, price 4d. stamps), makes no secret of the simplicity of his treatment, and avers that the decoction can be drunk as a refreshing summer drink, pleasant to the palate, yet having sufficient effect, although perfectly harmless, to remove generally 2 lb. or more in twenty-four hours. We think stout persons would do well to send for his book, which can be obtained through booksellers, or at the address given above.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec.

Notes and Comments.

It is always good to be corrected, and we have to thank several of our readers for having reminded us that some of the hymns mentioned in a recent number, as having been enfeebled in our modern evangelical hymn-books, appear in their integrity in several Church and Nonconformist collections.

The fresh outbreak of murder and outrage perpetrated by Turkey on Armenia, recorded in The Daily News and other papers on Monday, gives renewed emphasis to the remarks in a recent issue of Truth :—

We have done our best to secure to Turkey power to misgovern Christians in Europe. To our insane illusion that the maintenance of the integrity of the Turkish Empire, alike in Asia and in Europe, is necessary for our own safety, are due all the atrocities that have been committed by Pashas and Kurds on the Armenians. For my part, I care not what European Power reduces the area of Turkey. The rule of the Turks is so vile, so inherently cruel, such a negation of all that is good, that I welcome with delight anything that takes from the Sultan a province, and I should welcome with still greater delight the application of the bag-and-baggage policy of Mr. Gladstone to the entire Empire.

The upholding of so barbarous a government for selfish purposes must be the result of an "insane illusion." God must be against it, for righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne. Is the iniquity of England in upholding Turkey very far below that of Turkey in murdering Armenian men and outraging Armenian women ?

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, Editor of The Bombay Guardian, and member of the Anti-Opium Committee of Urgency, London, sends us the following communication :—

The illegal disclosure by the secretary of the Royal Commission on Opium of the contents of that Commission's Report, before it has been printed (except in proof) and communicated to Members of Parliament, has obviously placed the friends of national righteousness at a great disadvantage. They cannot follow the supporters of the iniquitous traffic in opium in a course of illegality. They must wait until the Report is issued before they can reply to it. But while this much requires to be said to explain the temporary silence of Anti-Opium Committees as to the Opium Commission's pronouncement, no one who understands the real inwardness of the opium traffic will suppose that the long-delayed Report will settle anything. A London daily newspaper exultantly exclaims, "The agitation against the cultivation and exportation of opium in India has received its death-blow." That is the hope of those (whether official or non-official) who batten on the human misery caused by this traffic. But no cause that is of God will die while He lives. When a human tribunal dares to pronounce a verdict antagonistic to the principles of Biblical righteousness and eternal justice, God's people may rejoice in the belief that the triumph of the cause that is thus condemned cannot be far off.

It is noteworthy that Dr. Stalker and Dr. Parker each struck the same chord, and a timely one, in addresses recently delivered. Said the former :—

One of the theological temptations of our day is to take shallow views of what took place on Calvary. But one thing is certain—that in so far as our conceptions of what took place there are shallow, in exactly the same proportion will the motives of Christian work be weakened.

So also Dr. Parker, speaking of missionary zeal :—

Do missionaries go out to Madagascar, New Guinea, etc., because they are so struck with the beautiful character of a young man of Galilee who lived 1900 years ago? The love of Christ constraineth them....From the Cross of Christ we gather inspiration, impulse, enthusiasm, action, passion for the salvation of men.

Fuller notes of these addresses will be found on page 11.

Mr. Greenhough's address to the Baptist Union, briefly noted in our last issue, was conspicuous for its moral insight and courage. He spoke as a wise student of history and as a loyal Christian when he said that Puritanism was the Bethlehem of the new age :—

From that fountain flowed the ever-broadening current of modern democracy which was carrying all on to unknown and doubtful issues, issues which were only to be dreaded if the religious spirit which originated the movement was trampled out by gross material and secular forces. The Puritans knew nothing of the modern rant which claimed for the indolent and thriftless the rewards of the sober and the dutiful, and which in its insane endeavours to force a general levelling up would bring about a universal levelling down. No contrivances could make men equal, and it was only in the sight of God and relationship to Him that there could be approximation to it. The strong should help the weak, and whether men were strong or weak they had the same place at God's feet.

While these words will no doubt be often quoted for the benefit of all who are eager for change, it should not be forgotten that they are only an echo of what the working man M.P., Mr. Burt, has always taught his fellow working men. The only enduring social and labour foundation is—honest work from workmen, just and equal wages from masters.

It is matter for congratulation to everyone that the boot struggle is over, and not only over, but that a step in advance has been taken by which future fights may be avoided. Sir Courtenay Boyle, of the Board of Trade, who has done such good service, made some remarks when it was over which all parties should lay to heart:—

The danger of such struggles was in the unspeakable misery which they entailed on women and children who were only indirectly concerned with the dispute. Considering also the loss which such wars entailed on manufacturers, and, indeed, the entire country, no pains should be spared to lessen the duration of such quarrels.

Let us hope that the applause with which these words were received indicates a determination to strive resolutely for the future against a recurrence of these industrial wars. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." A nation split up into sections can have neither moral strength, nor political force, nor commercial soundness.

The Mayor of Leicester deserves the thanks of decent people for his determined stand against the profanity at public sports. He says :—

I do not feel disposed to attend any football sports until the managers of such things can purge, by enforcing strict regulations, the players and even the circles of the use of oaths and foul words. Nor would I think of the Mayoress being degraded by hearing such language as is too often heard at the sport.

If a few more men in a similar position would act in a similar way the effect could not fail to be good; it would lead many to ask whether they are justified in exposing themselves and perhaps their children to language and to scenes which must do harm. The whole question of bad language in all public places needs to be very forcibly taken in hand, for it is a crying scandal.

The second reading of the Irish Sunday Closing Bill called forth a most remarkable consensus of opinion in its favour. Mr. D. Plunket, speaking specially for the Unionist and Conservative members for Ireland, believed they were entirely unanimous in heartily supporting this Bill. Mr. Johnston, speaking for Belfast, wished the House to know that on any subject there was scarcely ever such a unanimity of opinion as there was in favour of Sunday closing. Mr. Dunbar Barton, though interested in one of the largest breweries in Ireland, supported the Bill in obedience to the wishes of his constituents. A majority of ninety-nine carried the second reading. When shall we have English members saying the same of England's wish?

That the Local Veto Bill, if passed into law, will have a great effect upon the drink traffic, may be safely inferred from the deliverances of those publicans who met in London to guard their interests. The chairman asked :—

What would result if the Bill were passed? Ruin and desolation to thousands. A wail of anguish would pass all over the land, and those most affected would be those in whom the sands of life were running low. The cry of the helpless and the despairing would rise, and a terrible responsibility would rest upon those who passed the measure. If licences were to be taken away, adequate compensation must be given. He strongly protested against the limitation clauses and the Sunday closing clause.

One could wish that some sensitiveness were felt for all the misery and desolation now inflicted by the trade; in any suffering that may be imposed by the nation's struggle to shake off this trade, where one publican suffers several of his customers will be advantaged. The country does not exist for the benefit of a trade or trades, but they for it, and if one of them is proved to be hurtful it should cease.

The Prison Commission's Report brings before us the state of a host of men and women who live beyond our knowledge. Are we doing the best for them? "No," say those who have been investigating the facts, so says the Commission. "No," say we, if prison visitors cannot be freer than they are now allowed to be, and if prison chaplains preach as they are said often to do. The most successful workers in prisons, as in every other place, are such as go from pure love to Christ. A mere regulation man is of no use. We say so with a clear conviction that some prison chaplains are just the right men, but some of them are not. We want some sanctified common sense in the management of our criminals, and of those who are in prison, but are not criminals. Let us bring the best men and women to bear upon the worst.

"The spirit which breathes through the letter of Leo XIII. to England must touch all hearts." Such is the opinion of The Church Times. It thinks that, so far as England is concerned, nothing of equal importance, or so fraught with hope for the future, has taken place since the fifteenth century! The eyes of our contemporary are closed to every revival of pure religion granted to our country during the last four hundred years, and to the steady growth of power which has marked it. It seems, according to it, that England would have been better off had she remained under the power of the Pope, and been sunk in Romish ignorance and misery. We fancy that this will not be the general opinion. Our High Church contemporary asks in conclusion :—

Meanwhile, what in England should be the response to such an invitation? Surely nothing short of this—that at the invitation of our own Bishops the whole of England should unite day by day and Sunday by Sunday in the prayer that He who promised his peace to his Church should look, not on our sins but on her faith, and grant her that peace and unity which is agreeable to his will.

We shall see whether the bishops will ask this, and whether the whole of England will comply.

In 1890 the islands of Pemba and Zanzibar came under the direct control of Her Majesty's Government. One would therefore expect that slaves are not living under our flag there, but according to Mr. Joseph A. Pease, M.P., there are a great many slaves, and they are badly treated. The evidence appears to be only too strong; thus it is reported :—

On April 22nd, 1893, Gunner Jennings, of H.M.S. Philomel, in charge of boat, landed at a small island (about a hundred yards long), some half mile from the mainland, and found sixty-five slaves, who had been shipped from Zanzibar, and taken to the island for the purpose of transshipment. They were in charge of five Arabs, three of whom escaped, the two others wounded the interpreter, but were eventually secured. Twenty-two of these slaves had been kidnapped at Zanzibar, Bagamoyo, and Saadani, taken to the island in canoes, where they had been for nine days, on the last two of which they had neither food nor water.

Her Majesty's ships of war are coaled at Zanzibar entirely by slave labour, women and girls doing the most of the work! It is true they receive wages, but these go to their masters! England's hands are not so clean as we thought.

It is well known, says Mr. Pease, that the majority and the more highly valued of the slaves sold at the coast are obtained by raids among the native tribes in our own Nyasaland Protectorate. These raids are variously estimated as sweeping annually from 300,000 to 500,000 negroes away, only ten per cent. of whom reach the coast, the rest dying of cruel treatment by the way. Then, again, the condition and treatment of the porters who are engaged to carry goods, &c., into the interior for sportsmen, for our Government and for others, seem to be about as bad as possible. England will not feel happy when once she has been made to realise these things. What steps should be taken to stop them it will be for the Government to decide, but stopped they must be, and the sooner the better.

We have received from different great towns such as Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, Southampton, and Nottingham, catalogues of publications and pictures of unspeakable obscenity. They emanate from the Continent, and are addressed sometimes to young men at houses of business, sometimes to householders at their private addresses. They are stated only to be sent by request, but this is very doubtful. Principals and managers who have the welfare of their young employés at heart may be able, by watchfulness in regard to the letter-box, to intercept evil communications which corrupt good manners.

A secular paper has a long article denouncing the immoral and demoralising abuse of massage by evil-minded people, serious injury being done thereby to respectable masseurs and masseuses. Advertisements of bogus establishments are inserted in high-class papers, and advertisements for girls to learn massage, where ruin for life follows (a mother who allowed her innocent daughter to go as an assistant to one of these houses has never even seen her again).

A curious point arises in connection with the advertisements in daily papers. It is well known that these papers, since the exposure of last year, have insisted upon a doctor's reference with every advertisement. But the bogus establishments are advertising to-day just as before. I desire, therefore, to inquire who the doctor is that allows his name to be used as a reference for brothels. Perhaps the editors of these papers will reply to my question.

The article thus concludes :—

The fact is the evil is now flourishing on all hands, and the time has therefore come for deciding whether it is to be allowed to go unchecked in our midst. I ask, what are the vestries doing that this is permitted with impunity? Where are the police? Where are the purity societies? Where is Mrs. Chant? And will someone kindly unchain the Nonconformist conscience?

This last paragraph is an appeal to the powers that be, and to the friends of purity, often derided by the Press, and to women whom it has often bitterly and maliciously maligned; and, above all, to men entrusted with the Gospel of God—that they should bear witness against a form of vice resulting from fulness of bread and abundance of idleness—the ruin of Sodom and her daughters.

Another paper thus concludes a long article on the Oscar Wilde scandals :—

There has been for years a conspiracy of silence in regard to the vices and immoralities of a certain class of idle and professedly artistic people, of which the current scandal is the natural outcome. You can't pen up vice for ever. If you profess not to observe its painted face, its frippery, its flabby lips, its goggle eyes, its vile maxims, and its cynical sneers at everything that is decent, not to say religious, it thrives so well that at last it becomes arrogant and knocks its giddy head against a policeman. Suddenly in the darkest of its haunts the bull's-eye flashes discovery.

Any reflective outsider who has studied recent literature, noted the character of our newest plays, stood at Piccadilly-circus any night between eleven and twelve, chatted with any communicative detective concerning the kind of resort frequented by the green-carnationed men, and the free-and-easy language which the young women of the better class now permit themselves, will hardly be surprised at the social degeneration of the times; while the bare-faced swindles and daily robberies which sully the fair fame of the City, under the protecting wing of the Law, make one wonder how honesty manages to get a show at all.

We are no pessimists, but we are not so blind that we do not observe the dark outlook of these latter years of the century. If the present condition of society, literature, the stage, the City, politics, and the new "freedom of the sexes" is the result of the higher culture, give me the Nonconformist Conscience and the censorship of Mrs. Grundy. No doubt there is sufficient innate strength in the national character to save us from drifting into the rapids of a moral collapse. [?] What is the pulpit about in these days? Where is the great preacher? The London Press at one time made itself pulpit and newspaper in one. Of late years . . . "it winks the other eye." Now is the time and now the hour for the pulpit. Where is the man—the strong, earnest, eloquent preacher with a mission?

Here is the same appeal on behalf of society, that is the world, to those to whom a dispensation of the Gospel is committed, that they should cry aloud, spare not, but show the people their unclean transgressions and their lascivious sins. Righteous Lot, sore distressed by the lascivious life of the wicked, dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, tormented his righteous soul from day to day with their lawless deeds; but when the judgment was about to fall he seemed like one that mocked when he warned his sons-in-law. Eli trembled for the ark of God, but God will judge his house for ever, for the iniquity which he knew, because his sons did bring a curse upon themselves and he restrained them not. These fateful examples from the past are full of pungent meaning for the present. The blood of souls will be required at the watchman's hand.

Whilst some may take exception to parts of the address given by the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, at the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, there will be universal approval of these words of his :—

It is well-meant errors of Christians which make unbelievers. The first requisite should be love of truth at all costs. Second, warm sympathy with every form of spiritual conflict, and with that part of it which is intellectual; every genuine religious difficulty of an intellectual kind deserves, not denunciation, but loving sympathy and help. Third, intellectual power, backed by adequate learning; and, fourth, which is of unspeakable importance, to deal fairly and courteously with adversaries. Hardly anything repels young people so much as books on the so-called orthodox side which speak rudely or bitterly of their opponents.

We only wish that Dr. Butler had gone on to speak of the marvellous power for helping doubters over their intellectual difficulties possessed by men and women of small intellectual power and attainment, but of loving heart and simple mind. Their simple faith is contagious, and creates an atmosphere in which believing becomes easy.

In the April issue of The Biblical World (Chicago), Professor Adams, of Johns Hopkins University, quotes with obvious approval the saying of Mr. Jacobs that "the higher critics have about fulfilled the possibilities of their investigations." There is ground of comfort in the fact that the critical "possibilities" are limited, for so far the "investigations" have been unsatisfactory in a high degree. With regard to the Pentateuch the conclusions have been in constant flux, and almost as varied as the men who have occupied themselves in the analysis. Isaiah and the Psalms have been dealt with resolutely, but the touchstone of "historical setting" has yielded no uniformity of result. Finally, the book of Daniel has been weighed in German balances, and found to be "avowed fiction"! It is well that the critics and their followers sometimes use plain language, so that common people can take in the situation.

Those who contemplate with alarm the battle around Old Testament books, should find some consolation in view of the discomfiture which came upon a similar critical campaign against the New Testament books, well within the memory of most of us. Already there are signs of retreat from the bolder positions taken up with regard to Moses and the Prophets: the "possibilities" are "about fulfilled," is one version of the significant fact. Meantime, Dr. Farrar's so-called exposition of Daniel is shown in the May issue of The Thinker to contain arguments based on flagrant errors, and to serve up the mis-statements of other writers. The reviewer, Rev. J. E. H. Thomson, B.D., knows the subject well, and he says: "We could multiply indefinitely mistakes and blunders either peculiar to Archdeacon Farrar or adopted by him"; and he mentions the "numerous self-contradictions, of which the commentary is full."

If the poison is published, the antidote should also be forthcoming. Recent important works are: Isaiah One and His Book One, An Essay and an Exposition, by Principal Douglas, of the Free Church College, Glasgow (10s. 6d. Nisbet); and The Inspiration and Accuracy of the Holy Scriptures, by Rev. John Urquhart (7s. 6d. Marshall Brothers). These substantial and useful volumes we shall describe in detail in due course.

THE UNVEILING.—17.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—THE FIRST WOE.

V.

THE foregoing expositions are the result of a remark made to me over forty years ago in a letter written by a devout and diligent student of Scripture—that the key to this vision was the prophecy of Joel, and that the locusts signified the lusts of the flesh.

Dean Alford said concerning this vision :—

There is an endless Babel of allegorical and historical interpretation of these locusts from the pit. The most we can say of their import is that they belong to a series of judgments of the ungodly which will immediately precede the second advent of our Lord; that the various and mysterious particulars of the vision will, no doubt, clear themselves up to the Church of God, when the time of its fulfilment arrives; but that no such clearing up has yet taken place a very few hours of research among histories of Apocalyptic interpretation will serve to convince any reader, who is not himself a servant of a preconceived system.

While this is largely true, I venture to claim that no vision of the Apocalypse has ever been interpreted upon a sounder method, by Preterist, Presentist, or Futurist, than that of this vision adopted here. Every particular feature of these mystic creatures has been accounted for by reference to Scripture and in accordance with the nature of things. Every reader can test it by living examples around him, and by his own experience within him. It accords with the four preceding Trumpets, and with the two succeeding Woes, and equally with the history of man, from the fall in Eden to the judgment of the Great White Throne. It is past, present, and future, because it is universal. It illustrates the character of the Apocalypse as an unveiling of world-wide and everlasting principles, while great out-standing events during successive periods of time receive their true and increased significance when regarded as contributing to the great stream of history, and to the cataclysmal crisis at its close.

I said in a previous paper (No. 13) :—

In none of these visions is the true exposition more capable of proof by the rule that the interpretation which accounts satisfactorily for each symbolic feature, and harmonises them all in one ideal, is the true one.

Such proof is here of a two-fold character (1) The whole vision is the first of a series of three Woes, and its interpretation must be tested by its consistency with that of the two which follow. (2) There are numerous symbolic features, the meaning of nearly every one of which is fixed by its previous use in the Old Testament; and the interpretation by which these are all brought into line, and accounted for, will be authenticated by the process of cumulative proof.

Since this was written I have read in the Morning Star, an exposition of one of the parables of Matt. xiii., in which the same principle as to interpretation is laid down by Rev. A. Wilkes. He says :

That it is of great importance, its position in relation to the other six parables would alone suffice to prove.

Similarly, the relation of this first Woe to the four preceding Trumpets, and to the two succeeding Woe-Trumpets, is a severe test of the interpretation. See (1) above. Mr. Wilkes proceeds :—

No interpretation could be even generally accepted, if the following facts might not be rigorously and satisfactorily applied to it as tests.... These facts must be applied as tests to each proposed, or already accepted, interpretation...and that interpretation, which will not stand the application of every one of these tests, must be abandoned....Now, if one interpretation—but if only one—can be found which shall bear the application of all these tests, then that interpretation ought to be universally accepted as the true one, even if less attractive than some other which had been empirically accepted.

In unison with this I may be allowed to repeat here a passage from my No. 14 :—

Here are twelve particulars, descriptive of these weird, mystic, dreadful creatures; and the significance of every one is discovered from its previous mention in the Old Testament Scriptures or from common human experience.

Any interpretation which accounts for all these characteristics, and to which they are all necessary to complete the picture, has at least established a claim to consideration, if it has not already demonstrated itself to be true.

When the significance of each symbol is Scripturally proved, or shown to exist in the nature of things, any interpretation or application of the vision must still bring all these characteristics into line, in accordance with the significance thus ascertained. This I hope to do with a completeness which will carry conviction as to the soundness of the argument and the validity of the interpretation.

And this, I believe, has been done in the issue of last week.

I know of no interpretation of any of the Apocalyptic visions which is more unquestionably verified by tests which would be admitted in any court of justice as fulfilling the most stringent laws of evidence. Twelve such characteristics ascertained, in accordance with the French anthropometric system, would infallibly identify a man. No two men exist precisely alike in twelve particulars, such as nationality, age, resemblance of countenance, complexion, colour of hair and eyes, height, birth-marks, measurement of limbs, tone of voice, character, education. And nothing else but the lusts of the flesh and of the mind have ever been found, Dean Alford and all interpreters being witnesses, to combine in one the features (Scripturally translated) of the mystic locusts of the First Woe.

The one Woe is past: behold there come two Woes more hereafter. Three woes follow sin. The first is that which every lust carries in its own tail. The second is the direct judgment from God, during this life and in this present world, at the appointed hour of the appointed day of the appointed month of the appointed year (Rev. ix. 15). The third is when the sovereignty of this world becomes the sovereignty of our Lord and of his Christ—when the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand (Rev. xi. 14-18)? M.

Our Government, a Theocracy.

THAT was the ideal of the English Puritans and the Scottish Covenanters; and earnest attempts were made in the direction of the realisation of the lofty ideal. The able president of the Baptist Union, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, in his high-toned and most timely presidential address the other day, recalled a great Puritan memory, which shows what kind of men our rulers and legislators were at a period which, whatever may be said about it, was one of the grandest in our history. "Think," he said, "how far we have left that religious atmosphere behind in which 500 English gentlemen, members of Parliament, could kneel down together on the floor of the House of Commons, crying to God on behalf of their country, and shedding tears copiously as they prayed."

How that scene has impressed me! What national recognition of God in it! Only let such a scene, in the spirit of it at least, be re-enacted to-day in the Houses of Parliament and throughout the land, and political and social problems, now so perplexing and difficult, would be solved; evils we deplore, and against which we are so helpless, would be swept away, for God's hand would be gloriously manifested, and peace and prosperity would fill our borders, and the theocratic ideal of our fathers would be actualised. MILDMAY CONFERENCE, 1895.

JUNE 25, 26, AND 27.

THE following is the circular announcement and programme of this approaching Conference :—

BELOVED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,

Recalling—with thankfulness to God—the blessings of the Conference of 1894, when so many of the saints were refreshed and strengthened, it is our privilege once more to invite you to gather with us at midsummer whilst another year of grace is given to the Church of Christ for service and testimony.

Last year those lofty themes—"the might of the Spirit, the love of Christ, and the fulness of God"—lifted our thoughts into the heavenly places, and there were displayed to us some of the glories of our blessed Triune God. But we cannot exhaust in many Conferences the enumeration of the exceeding riches of his glory; and this year we propose, under Divine guidance and help, to consider Him who is "the Author and Finisher of our faith," under the threefold aspect in which his body, the Church, has from its commencement been taught to regard Him, the one great central figure, in old time of Scripture prophecy, and now of sacred history :—

The Prophet greater than Moses;

The Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek;

The King, the Desire of all Nations.

We purpose following the procedure of last year, which afforded greater liberty to the speakers, with, perhaps, greater profit to the hearers, in not restricting to particular sub-divisions those who are privileged to minister the Word in our meetings.

The following honoured brethren, and possibly others, are expected to take part in the Conference addresses: Revs. H. E. Brooke, C. A. Fox, G. H. C. Macgregor, Canon McCormick, Andrew Murray (of Wellington, Cape of Good Hope), John Riddell (of Glasgow), D. M. Stearns (of Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.), E. A. Stuart, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, H. Lindsay Young.

The Apostle has enjoined us, "Be ye followers of God as dear children, and walk in love." Before there can be imitation of Christ, there must be intelligent and habitual contemplation of our blessed Redeemer: "We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image" (2 Cor. iii. 18).

We earnestly desire that in our coming Conference there may come to our hearts and minds such an unfolding of the beauty and majesty of our matchless Saviour and Lord that there will be wrought in many, many lives, by the power of the Holy Ghost, marvellous transformations; and that all of us may experience a closer conformity to the example of Him who lived, and died, and rose again, that we might become the sons of God.

Yours affectionately in his service,

POLWARTH, Chairman of the Conference.

JAMES E. MATHIESON, E. TROTTER, HARRY C. NISBET, R. C. HART DYKE, A. R. PENNEFATHER, W. H. DAWSON, J. H. TRITTON, } Trustees of the Conference Hall.

SUBJECTS.

Tuesday, June 25.—Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Burden and Fulfilment of the Prophetic Word (Rev. xix. 10; Acts x. 43; 1 Peter i. 11, R.V.).

Wednesday, June 26.—Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Completion of Sacrifice and Priesthood (John xvii. 4; John xix. 30; Heb. vii. 24, R.V. margin; Heb. ii. 9, R.V.).

Thursday, June 27.—Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Approaching Manifestation of God's Perfect King (Psalm ii. 6; Psalm lxxii. 7; Rev. xix. 16; 2 Pet. iii. 14).

CONTINENTAL HOLIDAYS.—"Ian Maclaren" (Rev. John Watson, of Liverpool) is to lecture on "Certain Traits in Scottish Character" and preach two sermons at Grindelwald, in August, in connection with the Holiday Conference in Switzerland organised by the editor of The Young Man. Mr. Atkins has arranged for an additional tour this year, and he offers ten days in Belgium—seven days at Blakenberghe (a delightful resort, with fine sands and sea-bathing), and three days at Brussels—with second-class ticket and full hotel accommodation for £5 5s. The twelve days' Swiss tour costs £10 10s. An illustrated programme of the tours can be obtained from Mr. F. A. Atkins, 2, Amen Corner, London, E.C

(1 Sam. xvi. 12, 19.)

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

It has been supposed that the incident we are now to consider belongs to a subsequent page in David's history, following the narrative of the slaying of Goliath, so as to make that the occasion of the young shepherd's first introduction to Saul. This transposition seems to be called for by Saul's slowness to recognise his former minstrel in the young warrior that stood before him with the head of the Philistines' champion in his hand.

But, after all, this may be accounted for by David's manly growth between the period of his minstrelsy and his first great exploit in the battlefield. How long that interval lasted we cannot tell; but during its course David had grown from youth to manhood, his figure becoming stalwart and robust, his face moulded by the growing soul within. If we reject this explanation, and do not allow the incident to remain where we find it, we have to face the further difficulty of how Saul's courtiers could dare to introduce to their master one whose successes had already stirred his jealousy (xviii. 9); or why it was necessary to employ so much circumlocution to describe the personality of the young singer (xvi. 18). Surely it would have been sufficient to recall what David had done in the vale of Elah to identify him at once. We hold, therefore, that this story should stand in the place it has held ever since this narrative was penned.

After his anointing, David returned to his sheep. When Saul, advised by his courtiers, sent for him to charm away his melancholy, this was the specific indication he gave to Jesse, his father, "Send me David, thy son, which is with the sheep." It says much for the simplicity and ingenuousness of the boy's character that he should have returned to the fold, to lead, and guard his helpless charge, faithfully fulfilling the routine of daily duty, and waiting for God to do what Samuel had spoken to him of. So Jesus left the temple, where to his boyish eyes a radiant glimpse had been afforded of doing his Father's business, to be subject to his parents, and engage in the humble toils of the carpenter's shop.

A contemporary hand has given a brief portraiture of his character as it presented itself at this period to casual observers. One of Saul's young men said, "Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Bethlehemite, that is cunning in playing, and a mighty man of valour, and a man of war, and prudent in speech, and a comely person, and the Lord is with him." These five characteristics enable us to form a graphic conception of the young hero who was making the country side ring with his renown.

I.—THE MINSTREL.

He had the poetic temperament, sensitive to nature, open to every impression from mountain and vale, from dawn and eve, and he had beside the power of translating his impressions into speech and song. His psalms commemorate to the present day, and will as long as man shall live, the story of the green strips of meadow-land where his flocks grazed at noon; the little stream somewhere near Bethlehem of whose limpid waters they drank; the smooth paths which he selected for their feet; the rocky defiles where they were in danger of lion and bear.

A great modern poet imagines him reciting, as he sang to his harp, his call to his sheep, the song of the autumn vintage, the joyous marriage lay, the solemn funeral dirge, the chant of the Levites, as they performed their sacred duties, the marching music of the men of Bethlehem when they repelled some border foray. And we might add to these his marvellous power in depicting the sacred hush of dawn, where there is neither speech nor language, just before the sun leaps up as a bridegroom to run his race, and the solemn pomp of night, where worlds beyond worlds open to the wondering gaze. And to these we might add the marvellous description of the thunderstorms that broke over Palestine, rolling peal after peal, from the great waters of the Mediterranean, over the cedars of Lebanon to the far-distant wilderness of Kadesh, until the sevenfold thunders are followed by torrents of rain, and these by the clear shining in which Jehovah blesses his people with peace (Psa. xxiii., xix., viii., xxix.).

The psalm began with David. Its lyric beauty and tender grace; its rhythmic measure; its exuberant hallelujahs and plaintive lamentations; its inimitable expression of the changeful play of light and shade over the soul; its blending of nature and godliness; its references to the life of men and the world, as regarded from the standpoint of God—these elements in the Psalter which have endeared it to holy souls in every age owe their origin to the poetic, heaven-touched soul of the sweet singer of Israel. What wonder that Saul's young man said that he was cunning in playing? The psalms which he composed in those early days, and which are so delightfully free from the darker elements which persecution, and unkindness, and consciousness of sin introduced into the later creation of his genius were destined to go singing through the world, working on men effects like those wrought on the king, of whom it is said that when David took the harp and played with his hand Saul was refreshed.

II.—THE YOUNG WARRIOR.

There was abundant opportunity for the education of his prowess. The Philistines' frontier was not far away from his native town, and probably there were many repetitions of the incident of after years, when the sons of the alien held it, and placed a guard demanding toll of the water of the well of Bethlehem that was by the gate. Many a skirmish had the men of Bethlehem with the border warriors, who would sweep down upon the produce of their vineyards and cornfields when the harvest was ripe. In these David acquired the character of being a man of valour and a mighty man of war. It may be that sometimes he had to stand alone against a handful of sheep-stealers intent on plundering the fold.

He tells us how he needed to be on the alert against the wild beasts that prowled amongst the hills of Judah—the lion with his hungry teeth, the bear with his deadly hug. For these he had no fear. He smote them, and delivered the trembling lambs from their mouth. He caught them by their beard and slew them. He could break a bow of steel with those strong young arms, and wield Goliath's sword with ease, or club a wild beast with his staff, and hurl a stone with unerring aim. A proud young Samson, laughing in the fulness of his manly strength.

But he would have been the last to attribute his exploits to his sinewy strength. By faith he had learnt to avail himself of the might of God. Was he not his servant, designated for a great mission, summoned to wage uncompromising war with the uncircumcised? He might be a babe, yet out of his mouth God had established strength in order to still the enemy and the avenger! He might be a suckling, yet he was made to have dominion over the works of God's hands! Listen to his buoyant challenge, "By Thee have I run through a troop, and by my God do I leap over a wall. It is God that girdeth me with strength. He maketh my feet like hind's feet; He teacheth my hands to war. Thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me." "Through faith he subdued kingdoms, stopped the mouths of lions, escaped the edge of the sword, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens."

III.—PRUDENT IN SPEECH.

The sagacity of David will appear as our story proceeds. He was as prudent to advise and scheme as he was swift to execute. He had understanding of the times, of human hearts, of wise policy, and knew just how and when to act. Frank to his friends, generous to his foes, constant in his attachments, calm in danger, patient in trouble, chivalrous and knightly, he had every element of a born leader of men, and was equally at home in the counsels of the state and the decisions of the battlefield. Whatever emergency threatened, he seemed to know just how to meet it. And this was no doubt due to the repose of his spirit in God. The few mistakes he made may be traced to his yielding to the sway of impulse and passion, to his forgetfulness of his habit of drawing near unto God, and inquiring of Him before taking any important step. The attitude of his soul is sweetly mirrored in one of his earliest psalms, "O my Strength, I will wait upon Thee...Unto Thee, O my Strength, will I sing praises" (Psa. lix. 9-17). When men live like that they cannot fail to be prudent in speech, sagacious in counsel.

IV.—THE CHARM OF HIS PRESENCE.

He was David the beloved. Wherever he moved, he cast the spell of his personal magnetism. Saul yielded to it, and thawed; the servants of the royal household loved him; Michal, Saul's daughter, loved him; the soul of Jonathan was knit with his soul; the women of Israel forgot their loyalty to Saul, as they sounded the praises of the young hero who was so goodly to look upon; the wild, rough soldiers were willing to get him a draught from Bethlehem's well just because he expressed a wish for it. So he passed through life, swaying the sceptre of irresistible potency over men and women. The beautiful Abigail is glad to wash the feet of his servants; Achish says that he is as an angel of the Lord; Ittai the Gittite clings to him in his exile; the people slink into the city because he is weeping over Absalom; when he speaks, the hearts of the men of Judah, conscious of treachery, and backward to welcome him, are moved even as the heart of one man. Beloved of God and man, with a heart tremulous to the touch of love, the soil of his soul was capable of bearing crops to enrich the world, but it was also capable of the keenest suffering possible to man.

V.—GOD WAS WITH HIM.

He had no hesitation in describing himself as "thy servant," liable to hidden and presumptuous faults, from which he desired above all things to be delivered. He thought of God as his Rock, Redeemer, Shepherd, and Host in the house of life, his Comforter in every darksome glen. In weariness he found green pastures; in thirst, still waters; in perplexity, righteous guidance; in danger, sure defence, in what the Lord was to his soul. God's Word, though he knew but a part of it, was perfect, right, and pure; and as he recited it to himself, under great nature's tent, it restored his soul, rejoiced his heart, enlightened his eyes, and seemed better than the honey that dripped from the rock. He set the Lord always before him, because He was at his right hand, he could not be moved, and therefore his heart was glad.

How well he realised his own ideal of God's anointed king! His was a morning without clouds, when the tender grass springs out of the earth through clear shining after rain. Oh that the fair dawn had never been overcast with the dark sin-stains and bitter sorrows of after years! Man after God's own heart thou wert; would that thou hadst always kept so.

LOVE LIES BLEEDING.

Love lies bleeding. Behold the Man!
He is bound to set us free:
His love has fathomed the depths of death,
And reaches to you and me.

His bleeding love to the bleeding heart
That is wounded on time's dark shore,
Brings the balm of life, and the bliss of heaven,
And the love that bleeds no more.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

Whate'er thy will, Lord, keep me still:
Thy will is best, so let me rest.

Cometh to me to-day, from Thee—
Sunshine or rain, pleasure or pain,

Gladness or grief, distress—relief,
Sickness or health, poverty—wealth.

May I believe, all I receive,
Is sent in love from Thee above.

So let me rest, Thou knowest best:
Whate'er thy will, Lord, make me still.

DR. STALKER ON CHRIST'S PRESENCE.

Before a splendid congregation of Baptists and others in Bloomsbury Chapel on Wednesday week, a missionary sermon was preached by Dr. Stalker, the text being Rev. i. 18, "I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore." There was a simple dignity and clearness in his treatment of the theme that seemed to commend it to the crowded audience; when a strong reference was made to the propelling power which comes from right views of the Atonement, the hearers were only with difficulty restrained from breaking into loud applause. We give his leading thoughts:—

When you think of Christ, where do you locate Him? Different persons would, I fancy, answer this question differently. Some would say that, when they think of Him, their thoughts involuntarily fly back over the centuries and locate Him in Palestine, as He was in the days of his flesh; others would say that their thoughts involuntarily rise to a region beyond the stars, and they locate Him in heaven, where He is seated now on the throne of God. Others still would confess that generally, when they think of Christ, their thoughts fly to the future, and they picture to themselves his second coming, when He will appear to inaugurate the new heavens and the new earth. To think often of Him in any of these ways will powerfully influence heart and life; and each way has attached to it a peculiar blessing. If, however, we wish to be influenced by Christ all round, we should probably think of Him habitually in all these ways in turn. Let us see how thinking of Him in these three ways respectively—as the Christ who was, as the Christ who is, and as the Christ who is to be—bears upon Christian work.

THE CHRIST WHO WAS.

Some people, when they think of Christ, locate Him in the Palestine of eighteen hundred years ago. The bent of theological thought in our day tends powerfully to produce and strengthen this habit. Lives of Christ pour from the press; the scenery amidst which Christ moved has been visited and described times without number; investigation has been brought to bear on every feature and incident of the life of his age from which any light on Him is likely to be derived. The consequence is that we can follow Him from step to step of his career as preceding generations could not do—from Bethlehem to Nazareth, from Galilee to Jerusalem—on the mountain, on the lake, on the highway, in the synagogue, in the Temple—among the suffering and dying, among the publicans and sinners, among the children, among his disciples, among his enemies. What is the effect of the whole on an observant and sympathetic mind? Is it not that of a soul wholly absorbed in the service of God and the service of man? Do we not receive an overwhelming impression of the beauty of self-sacrificing love? and does the whole not say in tones which cannot be withstood, "Go thou and do likewise"?

It looks at present as if the next stage of this movement of thought were to be concerned with the teachings of Christ. I venture to predict that we are going to get from scholars as minute and thorough a presentation of Christ's words as we have already obtained of his deeds. I need not say how many of our Lord's detached sayings refer to Christian work; but what was the master-word of his teaching? Undoubtedly the phrase which stands out most prominently in the evangelic records is "the kingdom of God." That kingdom—its nature, its growth, its conflicts, its victory—had a large place in the thoughts of the Saviour; and it will have a large place in the thoughts of all who work their way back to listen sympathetically to his actual words.

But, while the Christian mind of our day thus loves to follow Christ from town to town and province to province, and to linger with Him in many enchanting scenes, it comes to rest at the Cross. In this respect, at all events, its instinct is not singular. On arriving at Calvary, it finds all the Christian generations encamped there, for Christ, lifted up, has drawn all men to Himself. There have been generations before our own which have been drawn to the cross with a more irresistible attraction, and have entered more profoundly into its mystery. One of the theological temptations of our day is to take shallow views of what took place on Calvary. But one thing may be said with absolute certainty—that, in so far as our conceptions of what took place there are shallow, in exactly the same proportion will the motives of Christian work be weakened. There is one motive without which no great evangelistic, ministerial, or missionary life ever has been or can be led, and it is this: "He loved me, and gave Himself for me."

THE CHRIST WHO IS.

Some Christians, secondly, when they think of Christ, locate Him in heaven, where He now sits on the right hand of God. The great blessing of this mode of thinking of the Saviour is that it keeps before the mind the fact that He is at present alive. If we were only entitled to locate Him in Palestine, and in an age long past, we might be profoundly affected by his memory, but He would be as dead as Plato or Dante, Luther or Shakespeare. Such spirits of the bygone centuries may be said to live on in the ideas they have bequeathed to the world, but, when we are communing with them in their books or biographies, we have no reason to believe that any response to our enthusiasm can come back from the hearts which we admire. But Christ lives and acts. He has far greater power than He had when He was on earth in his state of humiliation; the government is upon his shoulder. He has not delegated to others the work which He began on earth. All who work in the cause of his Gospel are only his servants and soldiers.

It is not difficult to see how this bears on the temper of Christian work. The vivid realisation of Christ's present life and of his exalted position should breed a spirit of dependence. But it should also immensely strengthen our courage and hope; we should feel that we have inexhaustible resources to draw upon. It is worthy of note that in the Pentecostal era this way of thinking of Christ, as risen and reigning, was the one which held the mind of the Church. The apostles had, indeed, the earthly life of Christ, which they had witnessed, fresh in their memories; but, if you read the Book of Acts with care, you will find that their habitual attitude was not looking back, but looking up.

THE CHRIST WHO IS TO BE.

There are Christians, again, whose thoughts, when they think of Christ, alight most naturally on some date in the future, when He will come again to receive them to Himself. In many minds this habit is connected with peculiar beliefs about our Lord's Second Coming, as it is called. They expect Him to revisit this earth and set up his throne among men. Especially if such a belief leads those who hold it to expect Him to arrive any day, it is capable of communicating a peculiar alertness to Christian experience. If those who profoundly love Christ believe that at any moment the heavens may open to reveal Him, or that He may be met at the turn of the street, it is easy to understand how tender may be their walk, and how anxious they may be to have their work in such order that it may meet his approval when He comes.

There have been extravagances connected with doctrines of the Second Coming, but there is a sublime episode in the history of the Christ who is to be, about which there can be no mistake. He is the Judge of men, and there is a day coming when He will appear to wind up the present dispensation, and, seated on the Judgment-seat, will determine the destinies of men according to their works. This is an arresting fact, and the thought of it ought to exercise a potent influence upon all life, and especially on Christian work. It did so with Paul.

Let me refer to a fourth way of thinking of Christ.

HE IS HERE.

He is a Divine Person, and there is no place in which we may not say He is here. We can say so when we lie awake in the darkness; at noonday we can say it, when we mingle in the rush and roar of life. There are dangers in this way of thinking of Christ. It may become too familiar; we may belittle Him in our thoughts. If we think of Him in this way, we ought also to think of Him in the other ways. We must give dignity to our conception of the Christ who is down here by remembering that He is the same who is up there, on the throne of the worlds; we must actualise it by recalling the traits of his earthly life; we must ethicise it by remembering that He will be our Judge. And if we are thus enriching it, perhaps this is the best of all ways to think of Christ. It may be familiar, but it is realistic. If Christ is here, how can I sin with these eyes bent on me? How fear with this almighty strength so nigh? How refuse any service when under the constraint of this love?

CONJECTURE AND REVELATION.

In a powerful discourse at Regent's Park Church last week on Matt. xvi. 13, Dr. Joseph Parker expounded the Evangelical as opposed to the Unitarian view of Christ's person and work. Towards the close he said:—

The difference between all those theories of men which I have examined and the Bible, is the difference between conjecture and revelation. We have an abundance of good essays. We have splendid answers, divers spiritual enigmas; but they may be changed at any moment. I cannot live on guessing, and conjecturing, and speculating; I cannot live long even on an hypothesis. But there are men who would almost leave the Church because they have read somewhere that some man has propounded a new hypothesis! I suppose we are all liable to those mental aberrations and eccentricities. There will be a great home-coming some day, and we shall hear again Christ saying to one, and another, and a thousand, "Blessed art thou, for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father, who is in heaven." He has shown it to the heart in pain and necessity, whispered it to the soul when the soul longed for a voice to cheer it and guide it. That is revelation—a term not to be defined, but to be accepted and to be understood through a gracious and practical emotion.

We believe in an accurate conception of the personality of Christ, because without a right conception of his personality there could be no true missionary work. Are there any missionaries here? I would ask you this question, "Did you go out to Madagascar, New Guinea, the New Hebrides, Polynesia, Africa, India, anywhere, because you were so struck with the beautiful character of a young man in Galilee who lived 1900 years ago?" You did not. When you went out you said, "The love of Christ constraineth me; if I thus judge that if One died for all then were all dead, I feel I must go and tell about the Christ and the Saviour and the way back—not to a selfish pardon, but to a Divine forgiveness, and the beginning of a new immortal hope." Without this conception of the personality of Christ you have no motive-power for your work, no enthusiasm, no dynamic propulsion—and compulsion, as it were. You cannot go out on a mere theory, however ingenious. You are constrained by an inexplainable, though all-sufficient and overflowing love; that is the reason of the strength and the light and the life of those churches. I do not know what men preach about who do not preach about the Cross of Christ. I do not see what it is all to end in, unless it be in verbal pedantry, in Pharisaic righteousness, or monastic self-discipline. But from the Cross of Christ we gather inspiration, impulse, enthusiasm, action, passion for the salvation of men.

GIRLS' LETTER GUILD.

The annual festival of this Guild was held in the Town Hall, Birmingham, on Saturday, April 20. About 2500 girl members were present. The Bishop of Coventry presided, and gave an address to the girls. Addresses were given by Mr. George Cadbury, Miss Tuckwell, and Rev. W. E. Ivens.

Miss Kenward (general secretary) stated that the membership of the Guild in the two centres, Birmingham and Leeds, amounted now to 5000 girls, and about the same number of ladies, each lady writing to and taking under her charge one factory girl. There were always over one hundred girls without ladies, and she pleaded for more lady correspondents. Another great want in the Guild was a centrally-placed room for meetings, and till some friend would come forward and pay the rental of this, the work of classes and meetings to which the ladies' letters ought to lead up, must be greatly hampered.

PORT SAID.—After nine months' absence in England and on the Continent, I have returned here in safety, greatly refreshed in spirit, and having experienced God's lovingkindness in restoring me again to health and strength. The needs of our work are afresh impressed on us just now by the saddening mixture of superstitious and idolatrous rites we have witnessed during the Easter season. In the midst of this spiritual darkness we rejoice in the privilege of prayer and simple meditation round God's precious Word. G. A. Eoll.

MEDLAND HALL EN FÊTE.

It was a curious festival I witnessed the other Sunday evening, at this Stepney Shelter, the homeless man's church. Of course it is not like other churches, nor is it intended to be. It adapts itself to its congregation, caring for the bodies as well as the souls of those who congregate within its walls; and judging by the crowded audiences every Sunday evening there can be no doubt that it is doing Christ's work in a very Christian manner.

The ordinary service was well on its way—solos had been sung, instrumental pieces rendered, Scripture passages repeated, the general confession of sin made; bright intervals of pithy, pointed talk had followed. There was verve in the meeting that would make itself felt when twenty men, who a few weeks ago were as crushed and woe-begone as any amongst the audience, were called to the platform. Now they are clean, clad, "and in their right mind." The despair of other days has given place to hope; every face has caught the glow of it, every heart feels it. They are about to bid farewell, for this is a valedictory festival. Before the week is gone these twenty wayfarers will be crossing the sea to a new land.

As the intending emigrants joined with their former associates in poverty in singing the well-known stanza, "God be with you till we meet again," never perhaps before had a Medland Hall audience caught the tender pathos of any hymn as they caught this and gave it voice. Many eyes were moist. Few souls failed to thrill. Then, as one of them said, "Comrades, we may never see one another here again. May God bless you! I hope we shall all meet in heaven by-and-by," so sympathetic was the rough assembly that a man in the back gallery stood up and responded, "Farewell! God bless you." It was not with weak sentimentality that a friend afterwards remarked, "I wanted to get away into some corner and cry."

This is the second group of emigrants who have gone forth within the last fortnight from Medland Hall to push their fortunes in the Far West. The Self-help Emigration Society and the London Congregational Union, whose offices are at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., generously united in providing the ways and means for thus helping a few of the worthiest, who have fallen upon hard times, to become useful citizens in a distant country, where fierce competition and over-population do not crowd out so many willing workers as here. These men will not be cast, uncared for, upon the unkind shores of their adopted country. Within forty-eight hours of landing they will be engaged in work that is even now waiting for them.

The scene in one of the waiting-rooms at Euston Railway Station on the Wednesday night, where the men and a few friends assembled to say the final "Good-bye," was full of heart and hope. Strong kind words of cheer and wholesome advice were spoken by Mr. E. Wilson Gates, secretary of the Self-help Emigration Society. Rev. Ernest Thorn, of Lower Edmonton, will conduct the party, and see the men located amid their new surroundings before he returns.

JUNIOR CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.—The object of this Union is to win for Christ the lads and young men (of whom there are many hundreds) entering the Civil Service. Ministers, Sunday-school teachers, or Christian workers interested in any such entering the Government service are desired to communicate with the secretary of the Union, Mr. J. F. Foot, 14, Melody-road, Wandsworth, S.W.

JOYFUL NEWS MISSION.—The Conference committee of the Joyful News Mission met lately in Rochdale. From the report of Mr. Champness it appeared that there are eighty-one male evangelists connected with the Rochdale Home, and twenty-five female evangelists connected with the Rugby Home. The demand for the men was never greater than it is to-day, many more applications for their services being received than it is possible to grant. The expenditure of the Mission during the year exceeded £6000, the income not being quite equal to that amount, so that Mr. Champness has been obliged to make use of his reserve fund of £500, and, indeed, to exhaust it. As the result of strict economy and skilful management debt has been avoided, and the Mission is in a prosperous condition, although in need of increased financial support.—Methodist Times.

THE HIGHER ASCENT OF MAN.

Prebendary Reynolds, in his weekly scientific lecture, on Wednesday last week, in the Church of SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C., stated:—Sir David Brewster, great in science, thanked God that the way of salvation is so simple; no hard argument, no puzzling out of difficulty is required; to believe in the Lord Jesus is to live. These were his last words—"Life has been very bright to me, and now there is the brightness beyond."

The present life is of great value. In the right use of it we are being led on to the attainment of a monarch mind; to the faculty of commanding circumstances; to the mystery of God-like power. At the end and after our present life, recollection will bring beautiful visions of the past, and their excellent meanings will be fully known. We may be said to know this, for our acquaintance with the world shows that the vast universal harmony includes the smallest and lowest under the sun. Everything with which we have to do is infinitely grander in its meaning and results than all we know, or are at present able to know. We are even now at a height far beyond the imagination of an uncultured mind, and are not yet at the close of our day. We discern a pathway of gold to that embodied glory, the sun in heaven, which sets but to rise in other lands to make them also fair in the beauty of light; we too are advancing and widening, not to return hither again; but, as now accompanying that sun in his grander motion pass onward and onward to an ascent vast beyond all our ken.

Regarding our advance in knowledge of creation, and our spiritual insight as to the meaning and future of things, in that knowledge of material workmanship, and in that spirit by which we are able to be in the presence of the Great Father, we are finite representatives of the things made and of the Power making and ruling them. We bear the image of the earthly and we bear the image of the heavenly. Take Adam as a new and first example of the life we live; you are soon by devout thought in Paradise. Then Eve, as representing love and desire for higher knowledge and higher state, leads to Christ born of woman, as woman was born of man. On the pathway to this, and nearer to what we are now, we learn the mystery of life and knowledge.

From this standing we see that the conflict of physical and moral evil is removing the unfit, the incapable, and prepares the seekers of what is true and good within the attainment of every man for that higher ascent which we discern as extending from the earthly horizon to things of surpassing beauty. It becomes every one of us to say, as we look day by day at our work, "God forgive me that I have done it no better; God help me to surpass myself in the future that, attaining the higher ascent, I may be welcomed in the new country and crowned as victor."

PERSECUTION IN FRANCE.

The work of evangelisation at Toulon is just now undergoing persecution on the part of the police authorities, who made a sudden irruption into the Salle de la Rue Nationale while the Gospel was being preached there during Passion Week, ordering the dissolving of the assembly. It was without avail that the licence from the prefect, giving authority to hold these meetings, was exhibited, and under pretext that no new "culte" is permitted, the closing of the salle was summarily enforced. The plea that these assemblies were not held for the purpose of a "culte," but merely as "conferences" or lectures to teach the people, was without effect, the result being that the hall has had to remain closed during Good Friday and Easter-day.

Meanwhile the brethren have been uniting privately in prayer that these things may redound to the furtherance of the Gospel. As the matter will, it appears, be referred by the Police Bureau at Toulon to the authorities at Paris, it is hoped that by thus obtaining more publicity, this affair will result in securing to the community at Toulon those rights and privileges of religious freedom which are now established throughout France. Will Christian friends unite in prayer that our brethren at Toulon may be supported in this time of trial and waiting?

CHRISTIAN ALCHEMY.

The ancient alchemists pored over their crucibles searching for some method whereby to transmute the baser metals into gold. In the present day in the Sheltering Home, Liverpool, Christian tenderness has found a way of rescuing young lives from vicious, ignoble, and base surroundings, and turning out the golden product of truthful, honourable, useful citizens.

A lad sought admittance to the Sheltering Home last autumn, who at first sight did not prepossess one item in his favour. Pale, thin, weak-eyed, he was about as plain and uninteresting-looking a lad as could be seen. Nor did the account he gave of himself inspire that confidence which his looks failed to attract. His education had been that of the street. He was a homeless waif, sleeping under the landing stage or in empty houses, picking up something for food by carrying parcels, etc.

Walter was admitted on trial, and as his eyes prevented his studying in school, he was utilised as door-boy and messenger. By degrees it was proved that he was more to be trusted than the other boys; he would run in his eagerness to serve and carry messages quickly; he showed wit and intelligence in answering the ceaseless visitors of all descriptions at the door. His gratitude for the kind home he had found, made him identify his interests with those of the Home.

When the time arrived for the band of boys to sail with their teacher, Walter was unfortunately not quite well, and the doctor could not pass him. He bore this disappointment manfully, without a tear or a murmur, and to a lad of fourteen it was no small trial to see his comrades setting off in such high spirits, all rigged out in new clothes, and be compelled to remain behind. However, last week Walter was able to sail with the second party for this season, and he will no doubt succeed in Canada by his truthful, trustworthy conduct and willing disposition. Was not this lad worth saving for time and eternity?

ONE BY ONE.

Within the past three months a young sailor has gone forth from the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, serving Christ upon the lines of definite prayer and personal effort for his comrades "one by one." He is in a subordinate position on board one of our largest warships, where, within a week of being commissioned, he wrote: "It is with a heart full of thankfulness I ask you to unite in praising God for answered prayer in the salvation of my sister before I left home, and for blessing since I have been on this ship. God has already given me one soul. When this comrade saw me kneel down before my messmates he said he knew I had something he had not. Praise God, the life-giving Spirit has also now come to him. . . . As I told him how I, a weak, sinful creature, was changed, he yielded, confessed Christ before his shipmates, and is now realising the power that saves from fear."

A month later this brother writes telling of further answers to prayer in the salvation of five others on board. He says: "What a happy day the first Sunday in April was! Five of us got together in a store-room, three of whom came to the Lord last month. It was a time of mighty blessing as we sang over and over again our dear old mission chorus—

> At thy feet I fall,
> Yield Thee up my all,
> To suffer, live, or die
> For my Lord crucified.

What wonders of grace would be manifested the world over if every Christian would wait upon the Lord to receive from Him the names of such as He would have each one to pray for definitely, and by some positive personal effort seek to win such for Christ.

WINSON GREEN, BIRMINGHAM.—During the past eight years, in connection with the Christian Mission Prison Gate Work, etc., about 5000 free meals have been given to ex-prisoners and others. Five hundred have been provided with regular or temporary work, principally lads. About 40,000 tracts have been distributed at prison gates, etc. Services are held continually on Sundays indoors, and in summer in the open air. Many who have received a helping hand are now leading better lives.

APRIL SIGHTS AND SOUNDS.

I.

Now Spring with tenderest green light
Moves like an angel through the woods,
And everywhere enchants the sight
With shimmering showers of dancing buds.

Nature's long, dim, mysterious halls
Now widen, deepen, and expand;
New verdure clothes the elastic walls,
New guests arrive from every land.

A dewy shyness veils the world;
The liquid voice within the brake,
Each glancing wing, each leaf unfurled,
Love's chaste espousals chaster make.

Soft vapoury verdure swathes the trees,
Each dell becomes a deepening shrine—
Frail hosts of pale anemones
With bent heads drain the mystic wine.

All through the half-cleared coppice land,
And mossy hedgerows of the lane,
And where the huge gnarled oaktrees stand,
Lie pensive pools of primrose rain.

"Come forth!" a voice cries, passing sweet,
"Nature's green scriptures bright and calm
Break open noiseless at your feet,
Instinct with parable and psalm."

The wandering cuckoo's magic note
Breathes home for all, yet home has none;
Swallows flash back from climes remote,
And flying gossip in the sun.

All day from dazzling belfry high
What bridal chimes rings out the lark!
The nightingale, copse-hid hard by,
All his love jewels stores till dark;—

Then sprinklings of rich notes, like spray
Of liquid diamonds, drop at first;
Soon deep soul-gurglings force their way,
Intense, diviner, grows love's thirst;

Till from fenced thicket's tangled heart
Flashes of rapture blind th' sod,
Where in the secret place apart
Love's soul sings closeted with God.

Dews softly now say evening grace,
And through heaven's yielding lattice bars,
Ten thousand windows lighting Space,
Lean forth full-souled, large, sentient stars.

II.

"God shield the mother bird," I cried,
"That in low, careless wayside nest
Sits tightly wedged, expectant eyed,
With beating heart and brooding breast."

I saw her through the glimmering twigs
Leave hastily, 'mid blotted leaves,
Those four warm wonders of blue eggs,
By holy instinct that deceives.

"God shield her dauntless faith," I say,
"That, at love's bidding straight took flight,
Lest her fond presence should betray
Her hanging homestead close in sight."

When love, at love's superior call
(For Love still shadows mortals o'er),
Abandons back to Heaven her all,
God watches the unguarded door!

CHARLES A. FOX.

PAST AND PRESENT.

IF there is less open profligacy there appears to be a quiet underlying current of scepticism. A friend, born and bred in a seaport town, says that he well remembers the terrible scenes which took place fifty years ago among our soldiers and sailors. That is all altered now. He attributes the change to treating the men more like human beings; to soldiers' and sailors' institutes; recreation rooms in barracks; married soldiers' quarters; and temperance societies in the army and navy. Sailors returning from a four or five years' commission used to be waylaid by crimps, publicans, and worse; and when their money was gone they were cast out into the streets. Now they can remit monthly to their families; and if single men to their old parents.

The "Homes" in all our great seaports are to the sailor what clubs are to civilians, in which much religious work is done. Nevertheless, scepticism is very prevalent, not the less dangerous because less profane. N. H.

THE PINK BOOKLET.

AMONG those on board a noble steamer which lately made the voyage from Dunkerque to Saigon was W——, a young man who had recently been converted, and was consumed with a desire to benefit those around him. While the vessel was loading, W—— spent some happy evenings at the Sailors' Rest, joining with delight in prayer and praise to Him "who hath loved us and washed us from our sin." Before the vessel left the port, we placed on board one of our sailors' bags, well filled with Gospel literature, which W—— took charge of and promised to distribute. The last evening he spent at the Rest, he selected several tracts and booklets from the cases which always stand open in the reading room, with an invitation, "Please take one." Among them was one with a pink cover, written by Rev. Dr. Pentecost, entitled, "Saved in a Snowstorm."

True to his promise, W—— gave away the contents of the bag among officers and crew, the pink booklet falling to the share of the steward, who, like too many of our seamen, was the victim of strong drink. Out in that burning East, with no opportunity of getting ashore and nothing to relieve the monotony of life on board, this poor man gave way freely to that terrible habit, until he became incapable of performing his duties, and had to be put aside. Waking at length from his stupor, one idea fixed itself in his mind—the desire to end that life which, through his own folly, had become an intolerable burden. He arose with the determination of throwing himself overboard. His hand was on the rail, his foot on the companion-way, when, turning to take a last look, the pink booklet caught his eye. Led by some irresistible impulse, he took it up, and in the dim grey light of that early dawn, sat down and read it. The simple story, penned by a master-hand, came home to the wretched man's conscience like a voice from heaven. The terrible consequence of the deed he was about to commit was revealed as by a lightning flash, and, falling on his knees, he cried to that Saviour to whom none appeal in vain, who is still "moved with compassion" for the lost and erring.

These facts were related to us by W—— on the return of the vessel to Dunkerque in December last. How we thanked God for using the booklet with its silent message! The pink cover is somewhat faded, its pages soiled and worn, but it is one of the steward's most cherished treasures, that he would not part with for gold. Work among seamen is necessarily a work of faith, a literal casting of bread upon the waters. We can only follow the seed sown with earnest prayer; and, in common with those engaged in similar work, we often long for some evidence that the thousands of Gospel tracts we distribute are not without some definite result.

This incident comes to us like a refreshing shower, bidding us be of good cheer, "Your labour is not in vain in the Lord." It is also one more instance in which a simple tract has been used as the turning point in the history of a life. We shall value the prayers of the Lord's people, for a mighty revival to break out in this almost unknown corner of his vineyard. (MRS.) A. STEWART MACKENZIE.

CHRISTIAN MISSION, GREENOCK.

THE evangelistic agency established about sixteen years ago in a small hall in the lowest portion of the town has so grown and extended that the large music hall, holding from 800 to 1000 people, is regularly crowded on Sabbath evenings. An important mission has been brought to a close, carried on by Mr. William Munro. From the start till the close the interest increased, especially amongst men; latterly the large hall was nearly filled with men of all ages. The spiritual results have been very encouraging.

A notable feature of the services lately has been the conversion of a number of Roman Catholics, of some who were often in prison, and the workers have not had such experiences since the Mission was founded.

THE SALAMANDER, torpedo gunboat, has left Portsmouth in search of a fast-steaming "coper" which has been giving trouble in the North Sea and Irish Sea fisheries by smuggling spirits on board the smacks. The Salamander has orders to tow her prize into the nearest port as soon as she is captured.

GOSSNER'S MISSION IN INDIA.

GOSSNER'S Mission works exclusively in India. In the division of Chota Nagpur of Bengal, among the Kols, we have met with great success ever since our operations commenced there in 1845. Besides this we have another field in India, viz., at Ghazipore and on several stations in the province of Behar. It is, however, chiefly among the Kols that the Lord has blessed the work of our missionaries, there being now upwards of 40,000 native Christians under our care; and the work is going on continually increasing, so that we have about 3000 new inquirers every year. To instruct, teach, and guide our large congregations we have taken care to train up native assistants, of which there are at present nineteen ordained pastors and 322 catechists, teachers, and colporteurs.

Besides the Theological Seminary for the training of the native agents, containing eighteen students and 200 boys in the preparatory classes, we have for the education of the children a large number of boarding and village schools, seventeen of the former and sixty-four of the latter. We maintain also an hospital and two asylums for lepers and other incurables. I intend going out in the autumn, in order to be present at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of our missionary operations among the Kols, to visit our stations there, and to inspect the work. Our missionaries are crying for help, for the building of new stations, for the increase of the number of labourers, pupils, etc., and I am going to see how our work can be carried on in the most economical manner, without endangering its progress.

Though German Christians are spending about 80,000 rupees annually on the subjects of Queen Victoria in India, through the agency of Gossner's Mission, we receive but little assistance from Christians in Great Britain. On account of the great blessing the Lord has been pleased to lay upon the labours of our mission among the Kols, together with the difficulty to increase our home income, we have been obliged to consider the reduction rather than the expansion of our operations. Our missionary, Rev. Ferd. Hahn (c.o. Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, 17, Greenhill-place, Edinburgh) will be in England till May 13, and will gladly avail himself of opportunities to explain the wants and prospects of our mission. May God bless you for any help you may be able and willing to give us towards the coming of Christ's kingdom among the heathens in India?

CHARLES PLATH, Mission Secretary and Professor at Berlin University.

Friedenau, Berlin.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

MR. J. J. SIMS, of Canada, has been giving addresses on "The Lord's Second Coming," at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., during the month of April. There has been manifest interest from the very beginning, and the Lord has been "confirming the Word with signs following." This hall is situated in the very centre of a population of the richer classes, a number of whom have been regular attendants at the meetings. The numbers have been larger than for some years past, and are steadily increasing.

Among the special cases of blessing is that of a young man, a Roman Catholic, "whose heart the Lord opened." He was under deep conviction for some time, and the night he found peace he went home to his wife so full of joy that she said he was "silly." He asks prayer that his wife may be made "silly" in the same way!

An intelligent woman who had been a strict Ritualist had her eyes opened, and went away rejoicing in the finished work of Christ. When it was shown to her from God's Word that "eating the flesh" and "drinking the blood" of Jesus was simply believing in Him, and had no reference to the Sacrament, she exclaimed, "I never heard anything like this. I do believe on Him, and God's Word says I have everlasting life, and it must be true."

Mr. Sims will continue the services through the first half of May on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and Sundays at 3.30 and 7 p.m. He is being assisted in all his missions by the singing of Mrs. Sims and Mr. F. H. Hutchins, whose Gospel duets have been specially owned of the Lord, and will not soon be forgotten by those who have heard them. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 5.—COL. IV.

Steadfast Prayer (1-6).—We must pray more. Our lives cannot retain the Godward attitude without prolonged seasons of communion with Him through the Word. We know too little of the watching against everything that would mar a life of devotion. Intercession will often unlock closed lips and make our souls glow. Let us be ready also to step in wherever God opens the door. (5) The great need of wisdom for the right-ordering of our daily life can only be met from the fulness of God. He will teach us how to buy up our opportunities by making the most of each of them. (6) Give your lips to Christ. Salt sparkles, and purifies.

Personal Notices (7-17).—See how the Apostle bound his fellow-workers to himself by the high estimate he put on them. Love idealises. Probably we should have thought these men ordinary enough, but the great heart of the Apostle saw them in hues borrowed from itself. They were beloved with a love like Christ's, which imputes its own ideal. Notice how often the word "faithful" occurs. Think how wonderful that Onesimus, the runaway slave, only lately converted, should be spoken of as the "faithful and beloved brother"! Epaphras has a marvellous record. He is a slave of Christ Jesus, and his labour is in his prayer. Have we ever learnt to labour for men in our prayers? May we not in these allusions to Paul's friends find a transcript of Christ's feelings towards us? He counts us beloved and faithful, and reckons that we are fellows in his service, sufferings, and kingdom. (18) The last verse was probably written by Paul's own hand. We can detect the clank of the chain.

MONDAY, MAY 6.—1 THESS. I.

The Apostle's Memory (1-5).—This earliest of Paul's Epistles was written from Corinth, where Timothy and Silas had joined him, the former bringing tidings of the state of the Church (Acts xviii. 5). Each church of believers is in the double enclosure of the Father's grace, and the Saviour's peace. (2) Always remember others when you pray, and give thanks for them. (3) The Apostle was so fond of introducing faith, hope, and love, as a kind of acrostic woven into the very texture of his epistles. Faith works; love labours; hope has patience; and they are all possible in fellowship with Jesus Christ. (4, 5) Our election is according to the foreknowledge of God; but it is manifested in the effect produced in our hearts. It is a great matter to find stability and endurance right back in the choice of God. But this will not help us unless it flowers into a holy life. Let us ask that when we preach the Gospel it may come to our hearers as Paul's to his.

The Testimony of Holy Lives (7-10).—They were not only holy, they were full of the joy of God. True religion is ever glad through the Holy Spirit. They imitated the Apostle, and were examples for others to imitate. Where men are living in the power of true religion their lives speak. The preaching of the Gospel is less necessary where the whole church manifests vital godliness. (9, 10) Notice the steps in true conversion; in the first place, it is a turning to God. We cannot do this without turning from idols. And then our heart is incited to yearn for his return, with whom we were raised from the dead, to whom we owe deliverance from wrath, and in whom alone we can find our perfect consummation and bliss.

TUESDAY, MAY 7.—THESS. II.

The Apostle's Life amongst His converts (1-12).—There was much holy boldness in his words, as of a man who had but one end to serve in pleasing God. There was no taint of erroneous doctrine, of impure affection, or of insincerity. He ever acted as a man who had been entrusted with the Gospel. We also are stewards of the manifold grace of God, and it becomes us ever to speak and act as in the sight of the All-Seeing. There was no trace of self-seeking in this heroic soul; neither money nor praise had any attractions for him. Combined with this strength of purpose there was a sweetness and tenderness as of a nurse. Self-denying labour also for his own maintenance, which took from his eyes needed sleep, was another proof of his devotion to the Gospel he preached. He said there was no harm in receiving the gifts of the disciples, but he was consumed with a holy passion that it might never be suggested that he had preached the Gospel for money. (10) With all these other traits we must combine the beauty of a holy and blameless life. It is a solemn question, Am I walking worthily of God?

The Word of God (13-16).—It should be received with reverence and faith. It should be allowed to have free scope to work in us. It is sure to bring us into collision with the spirit of the world which killed the Lord Jesus. There must be eternal conflict between the Gospel and those who please not God.

The Crown and Joy of the Christian Worker (17-20).—He had been cast out by his Jewish countrymen, but his reward was great, not only in the love of his converts, but in the consciousness of his Master's "Well done." It is as though he expected that his work amongst them would be the subject of permanent rejoicing, and that he would be able to cast a garland of saved souls at the feet of Jesus. What a conception is opened in that little sentence of the hindrances that Satan throws in the way of Christian workers; but Christ shall beat him down beneath our feet.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8.—1 THESS. III.

The Apostle's Longings for his Absent Friends (1-10).—No thought of his own comfort interfered with his efforts for the young churches he had planted. He wanted them to be stablished and comforted amid the storm of persecution that swept over them. (4) Those who will follow Christ must suffer persecution. There is only one path to the glory, and that is lined with stones and flecked with blood. These afflictions are our appointed path, and a man may begin to doubt if he is on the heavenward track if he escape them. (7) The waters surged around Paul's soul. But he could bear anything if only his work stood fast. (9) What a glimpse into his heart! The stream of thanksgiving which he poured into the ear of God for this handful of souls; the exulting joy that burst all bounds as he rejoiced before God, oblivious to his own pressing anxieties; the prayers which night and day ran parallel with his manual labour (i. 9); the intense desire to see them that he might perfect the work of grace within them. When we contrast all this with our own solicitude for our fellow-Christians, how gravely we are rebuked. Think you not that each of these sentences is true of Jesus Christ, and his feelings towards us?

The Apostle's Prayer (11-13).—Satan had hindered, but his efforts were futile against God's work for his servant. He will always direct our way if we trust Him. Abounding love, blameless hearts, establishment in holiness, let us pray for these, and covet them as the best gifts, that we may stand accepted before the Lord Jesus at his Second Advent. The holy life is the best preparation for his coming.

THURSDAY, MAY 9.—1 THESS. IV.

The Will of God (1-8).—Our sanctification is the end of God in all his dealings with us, that we should become so in-filled by Himself that there may be no room for the intrusion of aught that would grieve Him, or mar our peace. It is a comfort to fall back on this. What cannot God's will effect in and for us, if only we yield to it? The sanctified, of course, abstain from sins of impurity, because they reckon that they are the temples of the Holy Ghost. If you cannot possess yourself in all purity, let the Spirit of God possess you. Then, on the positive side, we must daily walk, that is, take all the steps of life, with a fixed resolve to please God in them all. (6) The injunction to purity is enforced by the consideration that the contrary course wrongs others, and incurs the heavy judgment of God. (7) For a third time in this paragraph, sanctification is mentioned, the possession in the nature of the indwelling of God, who gives his Holy Spirit to those who are willing to welcome Him.

Love to the Brethren (9-12).—It is a beautiful suggestion that God is the teacher of Love. Others may teach the lower classes in the school of grace; the highest is reserved for the Divine Teacher. (10) Note that recurring abound more and more. (16) The distribution of goods in the early Church may have led to abuses, which these repeated injunctions to work were intended to rectify. It is well to have a definite work to do in the world, and to do it. If you have not to work for your living, work for the good of others.

The State of the Departed (13-18).—These saints anticipated the speedy return of the Lord, and feared that they would thus obtain some advantage which the beloved ones who had died would miss. The Apostle assured them that there was no need for these regrets. Those who had fallen asleep were with Jesus, He would bring them with Him when He came again, their bodies would be raised before the living saints were changed, and then there would be reunion and fellowship at the bridal feast.

FRIDAY, MAY 10.—1 THESS. V.

Watching and Ready (1-11).—How absurd these calculations about the Lord's return! His coming in the air for his saints may take place at any moment, and when least expected. It is the coming of the Bridegroom to his people, but as a thief to others. Joy to the one, travail and destruction to the other. (5) We must act in a manner becoming to our lofty origin, and move to and fro among men as white souls, clad in the glittering armour of light. Always ask yourself of any action, is this befitting a child of light? (8) Note again the conjunction of faith, hope, and love, as in i. 3. (9) Our salvation will not be complete till the body also shares in it at the coming of Jesus Christ; for this we hope and wait. (10) See that death makes but very little real difference to the soul that loves Jesus. On either side of that mysterious event we may live together with Him, and with all holy souls in either world.

Sundry Exhortations (12-28).—A kind word as to the esteem in which ministers of the Gospel are to be held. Even if you are admonished by them you ought to love them. (14) Each soul has a ministry to others. (18) Again we are reminded of the will of God, and a sketch is given of the life which He desires for us. Full of peace, and goodwill, and unceasing prayer, and overflowing joy, and the unquenched fire of the Holy Ghost. (23) We may not be faultless in this world, but we may be blameless; and we shall be, if we will let the God of Peace take up his abode in our spirit, the Holy of Holies, whence He shall pour his keeping, sanctifying presence through soul and body. God is faithful: He will fulfil desires He has excited.

SATURDAY, MAY 11.—2 THESS. I.

Counted Worthy of the Kingdom (1-5).—It was probably only a handful of converts in that great heathen city, and these mostly of the lowest classes, yet what infinite prayer and love the Apostle expended on them. The growth of their faith, the abounding of their love, their patience under trial and persecution, these were dearer to him than the produce of an empire. And this was largely because he viewed them in relation to the progress of the Kingdom of God through the world. To be counted worthy of that Kingdom seemed his loftiest ambition for them and him. Are we worthy to be considered as its citizens and children? Then God will not be ashamed to be called our God, since He has prepared for us a city.

God Glorified in His Saints (6-12).—These earliest epistles are fuller than the later ones of allusions to the second advent. In those dark days the Church stood much at the oriel window, watching for the dawn. It must be nearer now than ever. It will bring rest, infinite rest, to the persecuted and weary; but what awful affliction to those who have persecuted the Church, and rejected the Lord. (8) Those who know not God reject the Gospel. They will not stoop their proud necks under its gentle yoke. (10) Christ will be seen in his saints, in whom the beauty of his character will be revealed. What a marvel that the Lord can be admired in thee or me, and glorified in us, not only when He comes (10), but now and here (12). Let us only yield ourselves to Him that He may realise in us every desire of goodness and every work of faith with power.

ROMANISM IN AMERICA.—The following is from a reliable source, just received in a letter from U.S.A.:—"It is appallingly true that ecclesiasticism is the great bane of all the churches, and that is the reason that the Romish Church is actually expecting to bring about Church unity, and that within a few years, by absorbing all the Protestant denominations into itself. Allow me to say that Roman Catholics are expecting this not without good reason, for while Protestant Christendom is divided, and each sect fighting for its own creed and practice, Romanism is one. In the United States the Roman Catholics are increasing much more rapidly than all the Protestant sects together. Here in our land, for aught I know, is where the battle of Gog and Magog is to be fought. Thank God we know where will be the victory, but not without persecution, martyrdom, and blood."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MAY 12.

JESUS BEFORE THE HIGH PRIEST.—Mark xiv. 53-64.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Isa. liii. 3.

IN this lesson Jesus appears as a criminal before the high priest, and receives his sentence of death. "As the Passion advances, its amazing contrasts grow in affecting interest. The Deliverer in bonds; the Judge attainted; the Prince of Glory scorned; the Holy One condemned for sin; the Son of God as a blasphemer; the Resurrection and the Life sentenced to die; the High Priest for ever condemned by the high priest of that one year."—Stier. Tell the story of this strange mockery of a trial.

THE COURT was the Jewish Sanhedrim, the great ecclesiastical court of the Jews. It consisted of seventy members, in which were (1) chief priests, the heads of the twenty-four courses of priests; (2) scribes, the authorised teachers of the law; and (3) elders, men of age and influence. It was contrary to Jewish law for the Sanhedrim to try capital offenders at night. The present gathering was, therefore, informal, and a second assembly, "when it was day" (Luke xxii. 66), was needed to confirm what was done here. This was a packed meeting, hurriedly called together, and it is probable that Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, both members of the Sanhedrim, were not present.

The JUDGE of this court was the high priest. Annas had held that office for fifteen years, but had been deposed (A.D. 14) by Valerius Gratus, the governor who preceded Pilate. It appears that the Jews still recognised him as holding the office; hence they took Jesus to him for a first examination (John xviii. 13). But the Romans had appointed Caiaphas, his son-in-law, to the office, and it was he who sat as presiding judge of the Sanhedrim. Had He not reason to expect fair treatment from them? But Jesus has been continuously "wounded in the house of his friends."

WITNESSES were produced (55-59). Does not this make the case seem hopeful for Jesus? Surely, out of the multitudes whom He has healed and blessed, many will be found to speak for Him? But the Court did not desire such witnesses. (55) Two only were found; and even their witness, though it referred to the same words spoken about three years before, did not agree (58-59). The words were not correctly reported, and their meaning was wilfully perverted. He who had cleansed the Temple of its impurity, called it his Father's house, taught in it, and performed many of his miracles there, could not be charged with speaking blasphemous things against it. All witness against Christ must be false witness.

THE PRISONER is Himself appealed to. Caiaphas made the demand by rising from his seat, and stepping forward into the centre of the circle where Jesus stood. The silence of Jesus was his best reply (61). (See Isa. liii. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 23.) He never failed to reply to any sincere questioner; nor even to an important question though insincerely put. Admire, and imitate the meekness of Jesus. To the second question of Caiaphas, which put Jesus on his oath (61; Matt. xxvi. 63), He did reply, and confessed two things:—First, that He was the Messiah; and second, that He was the Son of God. It was a bold confession, knowing as He did the use that Caiaphas would make of it. But He added more than that (62). The prophecy of Daniel vii. 13, 14, was to find its fulfilment in Him, even though they should put Him to death. It was a sublime utterance, and contained a solemn warning that ought to have been sufficient to arrest his enemies. What a change when He is Judge, and his judges and accusers are arraigned at his bar! How solemn is the warning to those who deliberately reject Him now.

THE VERDICT (63, 64).—The action of the high priest was a piece of hypocrisy, intended to represent how it rent his heart to hear such blasphemy. But to denounce it as blasphemy was both foolish and wicked. Jesus had made a very exalted claim; was it not right to call witnesses as to his life and work, and to compare such facts with Old Testament prophecy? Caiaphas does not act so. He has found in the confession of Jesus what the false witnesses did not supply—a pretext for putting Him to death. And the vote of the council is given accordingly.

While all this went on, where were his disciples? (See 50.) Yet Peter was not far away. He had "followed afar off" (54), sufficiently interested to desire to know what became of Jesus, yet not daring to appear as one of his disciples. The denial is practically begun when he mingles among the servants of the high priest as one of themselves. What disastrous consequences follow from half-hearted discipleship!

Do not forget why Jesus submitted to all this mockery of a trial. He was innocent, but we are not. Think of Him as the innocent one standing in our place as guilty. What return do you make to Him for such condescending love?

For the Young.

THE LIVING CHRIST.*

How may we know that Christ is still living? Well, how did those know who saw Him in the flesh after the Resurrection? Because they had seen Him, had touched Him, and spoken to Him, and He to them. All sorts of rumours were afloat about it, and some women had seen Him, but they were only half believed. Into the midst of the assembled disciples two men rush, and say "The Lord is risen indeed, for He hath appeared unto Simon. We are sure that He is risen, there can be no doubt about it, for He hath appeared to Simon Peter"; but even this was not enough, for Jesus Himself came into the assembly that they might know that indeed He was risen. It was very kind, and just like Jesus, to appear so soon to Simon Peter, who had denied Him with oaths. No doubt the reason was because He wished to comfort and reassure the penitent, for Peter's heart had been almost broken since the Lord had looked upon him with that kind, upbraiding glance (Luke xxii. 61). How thankful Peter must have been to see Jesus, not as He stood arraigned at Pilate's bar, but as his risen Lord!

We cannot see, or hear, or touch Him as those did, but we can see, and hear, and touch Him in another way. Let me try to make you understand it. When Mary Magdalene tried to clasp Jesus's knees, when first she saw Him in the garden, He said unto her, "Touch Me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." That means, cling not to Me with your hands; but if we may not cling to Him, because He was not ascended, it follows that we may cling to Him after He has ascended; but we cannot cling to Him with our hands when He is in heaven and we are on earth. How then, can we touch Him? By faith.

Sometimes we sing "I am so glad that Jesus loves me," and then we go on to sing—

> If you should ask of me how I can tell,
> Glory to Jesus, I know very well
> God's Holy Spirit with mine doth agree,
> Constantly witnessing Jesus loves me.

In a way that we cannot understand, but can clearly feel, Jesus lets us know that He has forgiven us our sin, that He loves us, cares for us, hears and answers our prayers. He must be alive to do that, must He not? To little children St. John writes: "Because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake." They knew their sins were forgiven them because God had told them so.

"I've done it," said a little boy to a minister.

"Done what?" asked the preacher.

"Given my heart to God."

"How do you know you have done it?" was questioned.

"Because God's taken it," was the instant reply.

There could not have been a better answer.

Remember, children, Christ is as near to you as when you first began to love Him.

We have referred to the Ascension. As you know, Jesus Himself spoke of it to Mary Magdalene the first time He appeared to anyone after his resurrection. He has passed into the heavens. It is there that He lives. St. Paul tells us that "He ever liveth to make intercession for" us, that He may pray for us. Sometimes we sing:—

> Five bleeding wounds He bears,
> Received on Calvary;
> They pour effectual prayers,
> They strongly speak for me.
> "Forgive him! O forgive!" they cry,
> "Nor let that ransomed sinner die."

A very old story, which I daresay you have all heard before, tells how a certain Greek was condemned to death for a crime that he had committed. When the judges asked him if he could give any reason why the sentence should not be executed, he was speechless. He could not think of any reason; he was silent because he had nothing to say. He had a brother, an old soldier, who had lost an arm fighting bravely in battle for his country. This brother stepped to the condemned man's side, and held up the stump from which the arm had been cut off. He did not utter a single word, but the stump and the loose sleeve pleaded powerfully. They meant, "Give me my brother's life for the life I risked for my country." And the judges pardoned the criminal for his brother's silent pleading. So Christ has actually died for you and me, and his presence in heaven is silent prayer for us. But he makes intercession as well, praying for us, perhaps in words. We are sure that Jesus Christ is now living, because God forgives our sins, and bestows on us his grace in answer to his Son's intercession.

A MISSIONARY'S PERIL.

DR. ROBERT KERR, of the North Africa Mission, and his party had some stirring experiences while travelling from the coast to their mission station at Rabat during the recent outburst of civil war. He writes:—

Our party consisted of Mrs. Kerr, Miss Paterson, our two boys, and myself. Owing to the unsettled state of the country, we were unable to get as far as we intended. About 4 p.m. on the first day of our overland journey a band of Arabs refused to let us go further. As we had no tent, we had to share that of an Arab, the open sides of which and the smoke from the green wood made us not too comfortable on a chilly night. Before retiring we sang a few Arabic hymns.

Next morning we were allowed to proceed, and started before 7 o'clock. All went well until we came to Ain El Hamara, some fourteen miles from Rabat, where we were again stopped. Two men ran toward us, one of whom, carrying a repeating rifle, called out, "You son of a Jew, stop, or I will drop you." Standing in front of my horse with his rifle cocked, he demanded our money. We refused, saying he could shoot if he liked, but that both he and his tribe would suffer for it. Our muleteer then told him I was the Christian doctor at Rabat, at which he appeared afraid, and drew back. Not deeming it wise to proceed further, I turned my horse to go back to the Kasba of Schairat, some 600 yards distant. Here the Arab made another rush at me, and held his gun in my face, saying, "You are going back to the Kasba to inform on me; dare move one step, and you are a dead man!"

We could do nothing but stand still and wait on God. Our eldest boy of five, who was riding in front of me, was so afraid that he jumped from the horse, while Mrs. Kerr, too, suffered much during the painful suspense, being unable to move, having our baby boy in her arms on the top of a loaded mule. It is at such moments as these that one realises the faithfulness of Him who has promised to keep and sustain in every trial. Like Ezra, without escort, or any human aid, the Lord led us safely through. We learned later that the Arab who attacked us was the nephew of the governor of the district.

During our journey from England to our destination, the promise in Isa. xliii. 2 came home to us with especial force, encountering, as we did, stormy waters, the dangers of crossing tidal rivers, and the threatened fire of hostile weapons.

When travelling I never allow my men to take firearms, because I believe "the hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him" still, as He was with Ezra on his journey to Jerusalem. I earnestly solicit an interest in the prayers of our readers, that this dark land may be soon won for Christ.

CHICAGO BIBLE INSTITUTE.—Mr. Moody has proposed special arrangements for school-teachers who desire to obtain the advantage of study in the Bible Institute, but after the work of the winter feel unable to take the full course laid out for regular students. Accordingly, a special course has been prepared by which they can share in the study and work so far as their strength will permit, and can also pursue a musical course if desired. Besides the usual lecturers, Dr. A. T. Pierson is expected in June, and Preb. Webb-Peploe, of London, is expected in September. The person in charge is Miss E. S. Strong, 230, La Salle Avenue, Chicago.

A REMINISCENCE OF 1859.

Dear Sir,—I feel constrained on reading again of the blessed Revival of 1859 to tell you of the Lord's goodness to me at that time. I was young, and considered to be a real Christian; was a regular attendant at church, Sunday-school teacher, and loved to visit the sick, etc., but I was unsaved. I suffered much from the fear of death and the loss of my soul. I spoke to our curate about it. He could not understand why I should think so much about that, as my life was so right, but bade me do something more. He suggested I should have a class of young people at home, and he would lend me good books to read to them. I was thankful to try anything that might help me to lose the fear of being lost.

I asked a friend to let the young people from her shop come on a definite evening for an hour. They came; I asked God to bless the little meeting, and I took the book which the curate had lent, and commenced to read. It was an account of the wave of blessing sweeping through Ireland. They were very attentive, and when it told of a desperately bad lad who had gone in to upset the meeting, and whom the Lord dealt with first, causing him to cry out "What must I do to be saved?" I noticed that Frank, the young apprentice, looked much moved. I again asked God to bless the hour thus spent, and they went.

The next evening I was alone in the house. In answering a knock I found Frank at the door; he apologised for coming, but asked if I would mind reading again to him about that wicked boy who was saved in Ireland. Of course, I gladly said, "Yes," and asked God's blessing. What a night for that dear boy, and what a night for me! As I read he broke down, sobbing out "Oh, I can't bear it; I never knew I was such a sinner before; I've gone to chapel always, but I never knew I was lost. What shall I do?" Then came the heart-breaking sobs. I sought to comfort him by speaking of Jesus who died for sinners, and then I asked God to speak to him and comfort his heart. Soon the storm passed, and there was a radiant look of joy and peace on his face as he said "Good night."

I went back to the parlour and literally fell down on the floor. It was as if a voice said "You have been praying for that boy. You have been comforting him, but you have never seen what that dear boy saw—that you are lost; but you are at this moment lost. There is no hope for you; you have taken a false place; you are lost." I could not kneel, I could not speak, I could not move, so close Satan seemed, so awful was my condition. I seemed to be withered up; my mouth was parched, and my frame shook terribly. Then I heard my name called. I sprang up, thinking it was Frank come back. However, no one was there when I went to the door. I seemed as if a great burden had now gone; as if chains had been taken off me. I could kneel now by mother's armchair, and weep, and say how sorry I was that I had walked with blinded eyes, and taken a wrong place. Then my name was called again, still seeming to me that it must be Frank, but no one was there.

Then there came the thought of God's voice to Samuel, and when I knelt and heard it again I said, "Speak, Lord, for my ears are opened." Then it was all told me; I was taken to Calvary, and saw that "great transaction" done. I saw, by faith, the blood of God's dear Son shed, and I knew it was shed for me; I knew "He loved me and gave Himself for me." I knew I was eternally saved; that I was his, and none could pluck me out of his hand. The very telling of it seemed to communicate blessing to others. Oh, that first morning of the second birth! That treading on the earth, but being really with Jesus, a citizen of the heavenly country. How can I ever praise Him enough for his great love!

But this I do—I cry to Him for a greater revival in this year than in 1859, and a speedy gathering in of his own from the world, and then the return of our blessed Lord Jesus. "Thine is the power," I plead, "Thine be the glory." He has put it into the hearts of so many to yearn for a world-wide revival, and to pray for it. Prayer was in 1859 a preparation to receive the grand answer; and surely it is so now. How thankful I am to read of the thanksgiving meetings. I will seek to help together by prayer, and to continue in the same, and He will keep his word.—Yours in our coming Lord,

J. E. Weller.

EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.

Some sixteen years ago (writes a representative) it was my melancholy privilege to visit this abode of the mentally afflicted, on the occasion of a summer fête, and to describe briefly in these columns the work of the institution. While recently spending a few days in the vicinity, I made another call at Earlswood, hoping to learn something of the everyday life of the patients, and to note how those in charge seek to "minister to the minds diseased" of the 600 residents within its borders. My wish was readily acceded to by the medical superintendent, Dr. Corner, who very courteously showed me over the schools, workshops, dormitories, and other parts of this splendidly-equipped institution.

There are many grades in the ranks of those who have had the misfortune, either wholly or in part, to lose the Divine gift of reason. Earlswood is especially designed for such cases as are not deemed hopeless. As far as possible curative agencies are employed, and such rudiments of mental capacity as the inmates possess are trained and called forth. A goodly proportion of the inmates are young in years, and the work among them is of course the most hopeful and fruitful. The cases of these boy and girl idiots seem peculiarly sad, since their affliction must be the result of some physical weakness or moral obliquity on the part of ancestors. But if taken in hand in time there is a good chance, generally speaking, of sufficient improvement to remove them out of the category of the useless and helpless, and enable them to take some humble share in the world's work.

A round of the afternoon classes and the workshops, under Dr. Corner's guidance, was an interesting if chastened experience. The first thing to be noted was the healthy appearance of the young people, and the happy demeanour they showed, almost without exception. Teaching work among scholars so heavily handicapped must be singularly trying, but it was evident that patience, kindness, and care on the part of the instructors have their reward. Classes for elementary branches of knowledge are held in the earlier part of the day, and during my afternoon visit the girls were sewing, knitting, or engaging in such other handicrafts as their capacity or individual tastes would allow. Much of the work I saw would have done no discredit to those of the same age with all their wits about them. Some of the boys in class were also occupied in making useful or decorative articles that are good enough to be sold for the benefit of the institution. I could not help being delighted with the marked feeling of sympathy between teachers and taught, and specially with the glow of interest which the passing presence of the doctor awakened in the children. He seemed to know every member of his large and pitiful family by name, and had some cheering word of encouragement for each. I might note here that the principal lady teacher expressed a desire that friends outside should send her gifts of knitting wool of various kinds and shades; of any old needlework, patches, or other odds and ends that could be turned to account in the girls' sewing classes. Perhaps some kind readers with a superfluous store in their wardrobes will act on the suggestion; Earlswood Asylum, Redhill, is sufficient address.

There are some of the children unhappily, and numbers of the older patients, who have lost, if they ever had, sufficient capacity for any consecutive work or mental exertion. These can only be amused, gently dealt with, and left to Him who has ways and means of reaching the reason-dethroned spirit beyond human ken or resource.

An inspection of the workshops revealed the interesting fact that a good part of the industry needed in connection with the daily maintenance of such a large human colony, is done by the patients themselves. Thus I found that the extensive kitchen, baking and laundry departments find scope for the help of a goodly number; the 200-acre farm also affords an outlet for much healthy energy; while the printing, mat-making, basket-weaving, carpentry, shoemaking, tailoring, and other departments have each their quota of industrial patients. Some of these earn sufficient to maintain themselves; and they would probably do the same outside of Earlswood if the like loving care and supervision could be ensured.

In such a large collection of mentally maimed and wounded humanity the infirmary is a department in constant use. The mysterious disease of epilepsy, especially with the young, is very weakening both to body and mind, and not a few succumb to its recurring attacks. Some of those I saw lying in the infirmary cots were clearly not long for this life, but it was comforting to know that everything possible would be done to smooth the inevitable and not unwelcome passage into the next.

It did not come within my opportunity to be present at any of the chapel services, but these are regularly held, and I doubt not that many are able to appreciate and profit by such Christian ministrations. I was told by Dr. Corner that "music hath charms to soothe" the idiot breast; and that form of diversion is freely provided. I saw a large audience both of men and women quietly enjoying some performances by the brass band of the institution. Dr. Corner with his cornet and Mrs. Corner with the pianoforte, frequently participate in these musical treats. All seems to be done, in short, for the instruction and happiness of the patients that scientific skill and hearty sympathy can suggest.

The patients, though mainly, are not exclusively of the non-paying class. There is accommodation at Earlswood for those who can afford to contribute, either fully or partially, to their own care and maintenance. The great bulk of the inmates, of course, have to be received on the Foundation and supported by the gifts of the public. Just now there are very numerous applicants for a share in the bounty of the asylum, and the number of newcomers, for the usual period of five years, must depend on the extent to which the funds are replenished by those who have enough of this world's goods and to spare. After five years' treatment the cases are reconsidered, and further help must be the result of a fresh election. No words that I could use would be too strong in commending this Good Samaritan Surrey hostelry to the generous and grateful remembrance of the sane and the sound minded. Any friends wishing more detailed information can obtain it from the secretary, Mr. Downing, 36, King William-street, London, E.C.

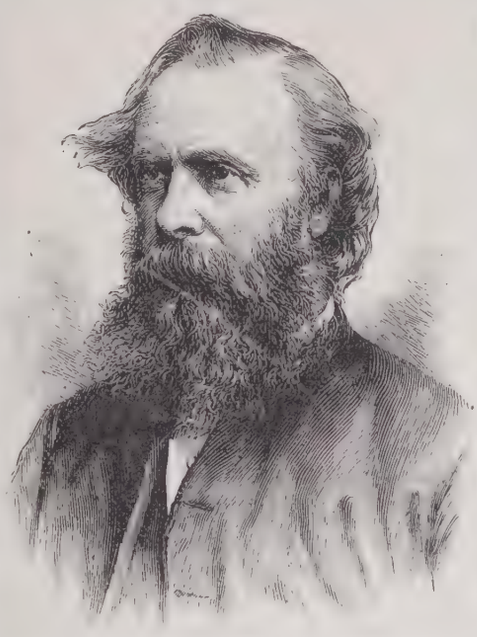
THE PROGRESS OF STUNDISM.

A well-known Orthodox clergyman (says the Daily News) writes a long and noteworthy article in The Moscow Gazette on the subject of the Stundist propaganda. According to this authority, the rigorously suppressive laws lately promulgated against the Stundist sectarians are not only unsuccessful, but would actually appear to have given a renewed impetus both to the open and to the clandestine spread of the schism; whilst the best efforts of the special missionaries appointed to counteract the teaching of Stundism, and to reattach the Orthodox apostates to that creed, have been absolutely fruitless. The most lamentable feature of this propaganda, says the clerical writer in the Moscow journal, is its evident progress among the intelligent class of Russians who have practically abandoned the State Church, or who, when they hold bureaucratic positions, attend the Church service once or twice a year as a mere official habit and custom. It is also to this growing public inclination towards Stundism that the writer attributes the difficulty of getting the majority of the ordinary magistracy to convict the Stundist propagandists, and for the same reason large employers ignore the legal injunctions laid upon them with regard to the exclusion of Stundist workpeople of both sexes.

This Orthodox writer makes a significant admission when he candidly avows that a large number of intelligent and educated people who are gradually adopting the Stundist creed, would otherwise become freethinkers. "Unlike many other Russian sectarians," writes an Odessa correspondent, "the Stundists, whose religious tenets very closely resemble those of the Baptists, do not proselytise, and hence the police authorities find it difficult to convict them. It is by the force of example only, by their exemplary lives, their high-toned morality, sobriety, industry, thrift, and honest dealings that they attach the adherence and cohesion of their orthodox neighbours. Their bitterest opponents in the State Church cannot deny these many virtues of the 'heretics,' nor can they, if they bear truthful evidence, decline to acknowledge the reclaimed lives and material prosperity of the many thousands of ignorant, intemperate, and degraded peasants who have voluntarily adopted the Stundist teaching and copied the manners and morals of the Sectarians. There are no more conscientiously law-abiding subjects in the Czar's dominions.

Rev. David MacEwan, D.D.,
CLAPHAM-ROAD, LONDON.

FORTY-FOUR years' faithful pastoral and evangelistic service, crowned with many tokens of the Divine blessing, commend the subject of our sketch to the love and esteem of the Church of God. Many who know his good work in London will be glad to be reminded of his earlier and equally useful labours in Scotland.



DAVID MACEWAN is, in Scottish phrase, "a son of the manse," his father having been for thirty years a faithful minister of the Gospel. He was born in Strathaven, Lanarkshire, about 1830, and at the early age of thirteen addicted himself to the work of the ministry. Entering Glasgow University he passed through the full curriculum, with honours, and after a five years' theological course was licensed by the United Presbyterian presbytery of Glasgow at the early age of twenty. Ere long he was called by the U.P. Church of Ayr, to the pastorate of which he was ordained in 1851, a heavy charge for a young man of twenty-one, seeing that the membership of the congregation numbered about 800. In the following year he accepted a call to South College-street, Edinburgh, where he laboured for thirteen years with considerable success. For a year, during the rebuilding of his church, he preached Sunday and Sunday in a large circus accommodating about 3000 people, and this was usually crowded.

This rising young minister soon attracted attention elsewhere, and various calls reached him, which he felt right to decline. At length, however, in 1865, he was invited to succeed Dr. William Anderson in John-street U.P. Church, Glasgow. His predecessor had been a remarkable man in many ways, and the congregation was large and influential. Mr. MacEwan was led to feel that it was God's will for him, and he therefore accepted the invitation. He threw himself fully into his new sphere, the congregations grew, and the work of the church flourished. Being deeply imbued with the evangelistic spirit, he took an active and earnest part in Mr. Moody's great meetings, entering thoroughly into the revival that swept over parts of Scotland during the first visit of our American brethren, Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Especially was Mr. MacEwan to the front in the great gatherings on Glasgow Green, preaching frequently to thousands in the open air or in a large tent erected for that time on the Green. In addition to these pastoral and evangelistic activities he took a leading place in the general organisation of the United Presbyterian Church, devoting himself largely to Sabbath-schools and work among students. Foreign missions also claimed a share in his interests, while various home missions and philanthropic institutions in the west of Scotland found in him a hearty and willing exponent.

After ten years' labour in Glasgow a call came from London. His old friend, Rev. Dr. John Macfarlane, who had been the means of building up a large and prosperous congregation in the Clapham-road, passed away, and on his death Mr. MacEwan was invited to become his successor at Trinity Presbyterian Church. Here his labours have been greatly blessed of God. The congregation has been built up and edified by his faithful and able ministry of the Word. The efficiency and prosperity of the church have been well maintained; while the people have been taught to work and give. Home missions have occupied a large share of attention, in view of the classes of the non-church-going to be found in the adjoining districts. A mission hall, which has since grown into a flourishing church, was earnestly fostered; while the claims of foreign missions were by no means overlooked. In connection with the English Presbyterian body Dr. MacEwan has also rendered important service, and in 1886 he was elected Moderator of the Synod.

One who knows him well thus writes:—"Dr. McEwan's personal qualifications have been the main element in securing his success. His preaching is warm and thoroughly evangelical. He attends most carefully to every department of congregational work, and keeps it all well in hand. He is a man of prudence and sound judgment, and of a most kindly and conciliatory spirit. With these qualities of mind and character he has now for forty-four years proved himself an efficient and able minister of the Word and faithful pastor of his flock."

Rev. John Dunlop thus outlines his view of Dr. MacEwan's Christian character:—"The gold of piety in him is not only real but radiant. He has a genial sunny nature that assimilates to itself what it touches and makes it beautiful. In private life he is a warm and trustworthy friend; in public life he is distinguished for meekness, gentleness, and courtesy. His goodness and learning are adorned with courtesy and civility. He is careful not to give any reasonable cause of offence, and slow to take offence. He never differs with others if it is possible to agree. He always follows after the things that promote peace, and he is clothed with humility. He is public-spirited, taking a deep interest in all the great pressing questions of his time. He is catholic-spirited; while warmly attached to his own denomination, he is a lover of all good men, and sympathises with all movements which aim at progress in Christian truth and righteousness. He longs for the time when light and love will admit of no prismatic separation in the Church of Christ on earth.

"Dr. MacEwan has often appeared in public in connection with the missionary and benevolent work of the various Evangelical denominations and the great Christian societies that have for their aim the highest weal of man. For many years he has been a director of the London Missionary Society, a governor of St. Thomas's Hospital, honorary secretary of the Freedman's Mission Aid Society, one of the honorary secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance, and a member of the committee of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. Both in Scotland and England he has always shown a deep interest in the work of God among his ancient and everlasting people, and has powerfully commended it in pulpit and platform."

Now, in advancing years, he is still found labouring in the Gospel, his ripe experience and insight into the Word being highly valued by his attached flock. He has been lately indisposed and compelled to rest awhile, but is hopeful that further service still lies before him for the Master he has so long sought humbly and faithfully to serve.

THE CHILDREN OF MANCHESTER.

THE twenty-fifth annual report of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes opens with a retrospect, not only of the growth of these institutions, but of work for the well-being of poor children generally. At present these Homes and Refuges embrace eighteen distinct branches, touching all manner of poor children, by means of which the Society has received and dealt with during the past year a total number of 3113 children. In addition, the number of cases investigated and children protected by the prevention of cruelty to children branch, was 705, involving the welfare of 2542 children. At the Prison Gate Mission, the number of discharged prisoners who accepted the invitation given each morning at the gate, and came to the Mission-room, was 12,384. The fresh applicants for admission to the Homes numbered 552, of whom 437 were boys, 105 girls. Adding 317 cases permanently admitted to the 425 in the Refuges and Homes when the year began, there is a total of 742 under care and training during the year.

THE CENTRAL REFUGE, STRANGEWAYS, which for so many years was the scene of frequent alterations, rendered necessary by the growing needs of the work, is now complete, and with its new workshops, dining-hall, reading-room, dormitories, infirmary, play room and ground, steam laundry, etc., is in all respects fitted for carrying on the important work of which it is the centre, has continued full and active throughout the year. No day passes without some cases of sorrow, suffering, or need, seeking its ever-ready aid.

The workshops—joinering, shoemaking, tailoring, letterpress printing, and firewood making—giving employment to seventy boys, have been active throughout the year, and after paying boys and foremen's wages, and bearing their share of working expenses, have added no less than £523 8s. 7d. as net profit to the funds of the institution! The boys in the various shops (except the firewood) are regularly apprenticed, and learn their trade under the teaching of efficient foremen.

THE CHEETHAM HILL GROUP.

Here is quite a colony of homes, situated in George-street, Cheetham Hill, and comprising six Orphan Homes, for fatherless and motherless children, boys and girls. Eighteen children, the mother, and young helper, constitute each household, wherein a very real family life is lived. The Rosen Hallas Training Home and Laundry for girls, both for emigration and home domestic service. The elder girls at this house do all the washing and laundry work for all the Cheetham Hill Homes. The convalescent cottage in Rosen Hallas ground, which has been well-filled during the year with weak and ailing children from the adjoining homes. And, finally, the Bethesda Home for Crippled and Incurable Children, whose beneficent object is—"To provide for crippled, maimed, paralysed, and generally incurable poor children, whose cases are unsuitable for the ordinary hospitals of the district." With such this beautiful home has been well filled throughout the year.

Details follow of many other branches of this greatly diversified work, which must commend itself to all who know how pressing is the need for such Christ-like helpers in dense manufacturing centres, where so often, in the rush and hurry of life, the weakest go to the wall and the innocent children are left to perish, if no loving hand be outstretched to save. The report may be had of Mr. L. K. Shaw, Strangeways, Manchester.

MAY MEETINGS.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

The sixty-fourth annual meeting of the Trinitarian Bible Society was held on Tuesday evening last week at Exeter Hall. The chair was occupied by Sir Robert Phayre, who, in opening the proceedings, denounced the fashionable destructive criticism of the Scriptures. He maintained that as God's Word spoken was called in question in Eden, so also has God's Word written been dealt with. The same treatment was extended to the Living Word; the tempter of our first parents appeared to Him, and was answered by God's Word written. Sir Robert referred with sorrow to the "galloping pace" at which nominal Christians are accepting the conclusions of such as virtually "make God a liar."

The report, an abstract of which was read by the secretary, Rev. Dr. Bullinger, set forth the essentially Protestant character of the Society's operations. During the year some new auxiliaries had been formed; and though the receipts from regular and permanent sources of income showed in some instances a falling off, on the whole substantial advance had taken place in the position occupied by the Society. The balance-sheet showed the total receipts to have been £5563. The circulation of Bibles, New Testaments, and portions reached the total of eighty thousand, and free grants were made to some sixty societies, institutions, missionaries, and Christian workers in various parts of the world. The removal of the headquarters to 25, New Oxford-street, W.C., was referred to, and a hope was expressed that the future would confirm the faith of the committee in this matter.

Referring to the new edition of the Hebrew Bible brought out by the Society, the report said that it was the outcome of life-long labour on the part of Dr. Ginsburg, and is practically the third great edition of the sacred text, the first being that published at Soncino in 1488, and the second that issued at Venice in 1524-25. An edition embodying the text so jealously preserved by the Jewish scribes and copyists has long been needed; and it is safe to say that the Ginsburg Bible is indispensable to Hebrew students, critics, and commentators. An "Introduction," explaining the text and the sources of Massoretic information, will shortly be published to accompany the work. Another important undertaking, the Hebrew-German Bible, is also making progress. The Pentateuch has been completed, and two editions printed. The New Testament, the work of Rev. J. A. Adler, also has been further advanced. Again, the Hebrew New Testament which has been so widely circulated by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, is still in continuous demand.

Rev. Sydney Thelwall, vicar of Radford, Leamington, showed that the way of Satan has ever been to corrupt that which he could not destroy. This has been his plan with the Church as well as with Holy Scripture. He desiderated a positive Protestantism, not political merely, but Biblical. Rev. F. B. Monti, of Shepherd's Bush, spoke of the Society as a platform on which true Protestants can unite without disloyalty. God's Word is the standard around which conflict is thickening; and by-and-by Christians will have to take their stand for or against Divine revelation. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. J. A. Adler, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews; E. H. Soper, from Brazil; J. S. Pawlyn, of Lambeth; Pasteur Lecoat, of Brittany, and Mr. F. W. Smith. Mr. Adler expressed a hope that generous friends would make it possible for the Society to supply the new Hebrew Bible at a cheap rate to students and ministers of the Gospel.

Drift Children and Cripples.

On Tuesday week the second annual meeting of Mr. Boyer's Drift Children's Mission and Home Cripples' Band was held in the East London Tabernacle, Burdett-road. Pastor Archibald G. Brown occupied the chair. The report showed a greatly enlarged work of reformation going on amongst the drift and crippled children of London, the total figures mentioned as attendances at meetings and for recreation being close upon 150,000. The Cripples' Band has a membership of 550 well visited and cared for. A seaside home has been taken at Cecil-square, Margate, and an earnest appeal was made for help.

A large display of baskets of all shapes were on view and for sale in the lower hall of the Tabernacle. They were made, under special instruction, by the cripples who are being taught, so as to enable them to have a means of livelihood. A thoroughly efficient system of education has been commenced at 29, Cottage-grove, Bow, by a qualified teacher; the cripples are called for and taken home daily by conveyance.

A choir of cripples and drifts sang several selections during the evening. The speeches were stirring, interesting, and profitable; each speaker had a thorough personal knowledge of the work and its claims, and testified to Mr. Boyer's self-denial and his strict system of economy in all departments. Madame Antoinette Sterling rendered very valuable assistance by singing four selections, and by earnest appeals in speech.

At the close of the meeting Mr. C. L. Boyer left for six weeks' trip to America, the friends on that side of the ocean having sent his boat-ticket to ensure his visit. A hearty farewell was accorded him, many friends accompanying him as far as Euston.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

Many and varied are the claims upon us, as the noble work of different societies is brought into prominence at the annual meetings; but amongst these this, one of the first Zenana missions, takes a high and honoured place. At the annual meeting at St. Martin's Town Hall on Tuesday last, when Lord Kinnaird, that true friend of the women of India, presided, a most encouraging account was given of the year's operations. These have been full of progress and blessing, while fresh opportunities are being found on every hand, if only the Society had means to enter in.

The brief extract of the report given by the secretary, Rev. A. R. Cavalier, stated that the medical work at Lucknow, Benares, and Patna all show increased numbers of patients. Another wing added to Benares Hospital makes room for fifty beds there; Lucknow sadly needs another wing, for which £600 is required. Patna Hospital is just completed. Turning to the general work, the secretary was able to report signs of blessing all round. Converts have been baptized at Nasik, Patna, and other places, while from the Zenana visitors come tidings of interest and blessing amongst the women secluded in these Zenanas. The educational work, at both the general schools and those for training native Christians, shows advance all round, and the Government inspector's reports are most satisfactory.

The Dean of Norwich, said they had cause for gratitude to God, yet he reflected with regret that this was only their forty-third anniversary; how many generations and centuries passed away ere any endeavour was made to raise the women of India from the degradation and darkness associated with that word Zenana! This was about the first society to attempt such work, and for what it has done all must be thankful. The speaker showed the great expansion of the work between 1889 and 1894; but that again must stimulate to still greater effort. Organisation, however good, must never be allowed to take the place of faith and prayer. This society's work had been blessed because it had a good and efficient organisation, sustained by faith and sweetened by believing prayer.

In India the men did come into contact with other peoples and diverse modes of thought; but the women, shut up, what had they? What contact or knowledge with the outer world to enlarge their minds or brighten their lot? Only lady missionaries could reach them, and so he urged upon Christians the claims of these inmates of the Zenanas upon their sympathy and substance. He asked if all present gave a tenth? That would on be to keep to the Jewish level, but even that wou be a vast help. Such an amount is really not give however, so the societies have to plead and struggl instead of going forward freely with the work bringing saving knowledge to thousands of da hearts and homes.

Mrs. Nikambe spoke of the condition of her countr women, and read extracts from their own sacred boo proving the low estimate in which women are he in her own land. She spoke of herself as havi been a pupil in one of the Normal Schools, a showed how Christian teaching is raising the wom who receive it, and brightening homes here a there throughout the land. Now there is even native Christian lady doctor, a harbinger of ho and promise. By Christian training native pasto will be raised, and native Christian church formed, and so the work will become more a more deeply rooted in India.

Mr. W. T. Paton, in his own cheery and geni way, gave the financial statement. He wanted se timent and emotion put into practical shape. La year there was a suggestion that some should de themselves a shilling a day; a lady had done s and sent in the result, 365 shillings—that was pra tical. For years they had asked God for an incon of £20,000 a year, and now, with thankfulness, t society had to record having reached that inco last year. Twenty-four new missionaries have be added to the staff during the last eighteen month and for these increased funds are required.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor could not understa apathy regarding missions in anyone who p fessed Christianity; a Christian not interested the work of missions is surely disloyal to Him w is the Chief of Missions. Further, the Maste command, "Go ye into all the world," is a law Christianity. Christians are bound to witness f Christ. As long as "go" means go, the Christi will be answerable, and must ask why he does n go? People get their daily newspaper, but do th read the news of mission work throughout t world. These are most interesting, yet in sco of Christian homes no missionary news is rea God wants three things: Our persons, prayers, a purses, all to be consecrated for this work. T proportion of giving to missions is a third of farthing in the pound! What sort of consecrati is that for the work of the Church?

Miss Fallon gave interesting personal experienc of village mission work in India, and spoke strong in support of its extension.

Baptist Missionary Society.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Missiona Society was held on Thursday evening, in Exet Hall, which was filled with an audience whi evinced an enthusiastic interest in the great subje of world-wide evangelisation. In the course of a fe remarks on the year's work, the secretary, Mr. A. Baynes, said the Society had never been privileg to present such an encouraging report to its s porters. Though unusual anxiety had been the of the directors, especially with regard to finance there had been remarkable and signal succe abroad. Alike from India, China, and Africa, t missionaries report manifest tokens of the Divi blessing—numerous conversions, notwithstanding some cases bitter persecution. Also they tell o more widespread appreciation of individual respo sibility to spread the Gospel on the part of tho who have received it; a growing spirit of self-su port and independence; the opening up and t evangelisation of new fields by native Christians their own cost; a large increase in the number scholars in Christian day and Sunday schools; widespread inquiry for copies of the Holy Scriptur and Christian literature; and a growing disbelief the heathen systems. Hence there is abunda reason to thank God and take courage.

Mr. W. R. Rickett made a financial statemer which was, on the whole satisfactory. The defi of the past and preceding years made a to debt of £22,875. This had been reduced by t sum of £15,000, the surplus over the £100,0 raised as a Centenary Fund, and by special cont butions; a little effort on the part of friends of t work would now entirely wipe out the debt. present the expenditure stands at £9000 over t income, which averages about £60,000, and t directors hesitate to curtail operations. Increas contributions would prevent anxiety, and enable t work to proceed without hindrance.

From this point the meeting was as much concerned with the work of a sister society as with Baptist missionary affairs. The London Missionary Society is celebrating its centenary, and it was fitting that words of congratulation should be spoken on such an occasion as this. Accordingly, Dr. Glover moved a resolution in this sense, in which also God was thanked for "the marvellous blessing that has attended the labours of their missionaries during the past hundred years in so many different parts of the world," and an earnest prayer was offered that the new century of missionary achievement may be marked by even still larger blessing and richer success. In the course of a vigorous address, Dr. Glover referred to the work of the L.M.S. in the South Seas, New Guinea, West Indies, British Guiana, Madagascar, China, India, and Central Africa. No society has had so many martyrs as the L.M.S. in the ranks of its missionaries, and from among its native converts and preachers. The address was sympathetic in a high degree. Mr. Edward Rawlings, of Wimbledon Common, seconded the resolution, which was carried with much heartiness.

Lord Overtoun, who presided, followed with a capital address on the obligation and urgency of missions. He maintained that we have reason to look backward with thankfulness, forward with expectancy, and upward with trustfulness. Many are accustomed to say, "To what purpose is this waste?" The lives laid down are not lost lives. There is a harvest coming that will gladden the hearts of those who see it, and also the heart of the risen Lord Himself, as He sees of the travail of his soul and is satisfied. Reviewing the work of the Baptist Missionary Society, the speaker said that one of the best tokens of success in India is the formation of native churches and centres where native pastors may be trained; and he rejoiced to learn that at Serampore, Cuttack, and Delhi there are institutions for this training work. In some earnest words on the privilege of having a part in the conflict against sin and darkness, he emphasised the importance of preaching a definite Gospel, in the spirit of the Apostle, who said, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." In conclusion, urging a due support of the work, Lord Overtoun said it is time that Christians not only prayed God to send the money, but began themselves to give it. There is indeed a command, "Ask and it shall be given you"; but there is also another, "Give, and it shall be given you." God is able to do now as great things as He did in the early Church, and He is waiting for us to put ourselves in his hands for his service.

Rev. Dr. Berry, of Wolverhampton, after acknowledging the gracious resolution regarding the L.M.S., enlarged upon reasons which should move Christians to go on with the work. First of all, there is the ultimate, abiding, and all-sufficient reason, that the Lord said "Go." The genius of the Gospel is in perfect accord with the command; and nothing but the Gospel is capable of inspiring men to nobility of life or comforting them in their distresses. In addition, also, to the need of the inhabitants of the earth, there are reasons which lie near at home. The churches at home have got incalculably more from the mission field than they have sent there. Missions have given us a new apologetic, promoted Christian reunion, and should exert a powerful influence at the present time, when in the name of decadent art and decadent literature, corruption is being sown in our land.

An address was also delivered by Rev. Daniel Jones, of Patna City, North-West Provinces.

The Railway Mission.

Delegates from all parts of the land came up last week in strong force for the annual conference of this Mission, which now numbers about 400 branches. Many of these Christian railway men spoke at one or other of these conference meetings, and most encouraging details transpired of the progress of the work in and around London, and in the provinces, as well as in Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. It was delightful to hear one after another—in curious variations of tone and dialect—witness to the grace of God among the men on the line.

One who spoke on Wednesday afternoon stirred many hearts as he testified to the work now going on in Switzerland and South Germany among the employés on the railway lines. So, again, another had much to say of Glasgow, while other great centres, such as Crewe, Brighton, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Dublin, and Bristol were shown to be in full activity.

At the public evening meeting Exeter Hall was crowded by an enthusiastic assembly. Col. Williams, director of the London and South-Western Railway, presided. Mr. Nixon presented a summary of the report, showing that during the year twenty new branches had been opened, bringing up the total to over four hundred. Five new halls had also been opened, and there was an "Inner Circle" of 8517 converted men in connection with the Mission. Railway men, it was pointed out, had splendid opportunities for doing evangelistic work, as they travelled all over the country for nothing. In addition to the home work they had a missionary in Cape Colony, and for several years past a lady had been doing the same sort of work in Egypt. The authorities who controlled the railways in Japan had permitted the missionary there to place a Testament in every station, and a circular letter had been addressed to every official requesting him to give his subordinates opportunities to study the Scriptures. At the Hastings Convalescent Home 154 patients had been under care, and satisfaction was expressed that thirty-eight of them had professed to be converted. The debt with which they had started the year had been cleared off, and there was a balance on the right side.

Mr. Gurney Sheppard, in presenting the accounts, made a very strong plea for increased funds. He should like to see the present £3000 annually become £30,000. He also warmly urged the need of £5000 for a new Convalescent Home at Hastings, the house now used being far too small. Miss Ada Rose having sung a solo, the chairman, Colonel Williams, gave reasons why he, as a railway director, should take a deep interest in all that aimed at the well-being of the men. Madame Antoinette Sterling sang at this point two beautiful solos, filling the great hall with her full-voiced message in song.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon followed with a racy and sympathetic address. One of his stories from an Australian bush station told with great effect. He had travelled thither to see an old one-legged porter. It was far out of the way, and the trains numbered about three a day, so he was not surprised to find no one about. He went, however, to the porter's box, and knocked again and again. After long waiting, the old man appeared. "Why have you kept me so long?" "Well you see, sir, I had a beautiful cork leg sent me, but when I walked, it had a queer squeak at the knee, and I had unscrewed it to oil it, and get the squeak out." So the speaker felt that a lot of us need the squeak taken out of us. We can go, and we can work, but we have our peculiarities and these often hinder sadly our usefulness. Like John Newton, he felt that heaven would have for us three wonders. First, to find some we never expected to see there; second, to miss some we counted on seeing there; and, lastly, that we should be there ourselves. On this Mr. Spurgeon based an earnest Gospel address.

Rev. Henry Dening spoke in his wonted epigrammatic style on four lessons from a railway lamp. It must be a light to give light; it must shine where it is placed; nothing must be allowed to dim it; it must shine till the day dawn.

After a few words from Mr. T. A. Denny came the surprise of the evening; Madame Sterling, who had already sung, and who had sent in (as announced) a donation for £10 10s., rose and said that no one had asked her to speak, but she was led to say why she had come that evening, and why she loved railway men. In her own charming way she recalled the kind attention shown her all over the land by porters, guards, and so on; she was there that night to show her gratitude. In conclusion she sang "The Lord is my Shepherd: He leadeth me."

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

The annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society is always warm-hearted, and Monday's gathering in Exeter Hall was no exception to the rule. Friends from all parts assembled in large numbers, joined in earnest prayer for the progress of the kingdom of Christ; sang with characteristic ardour of the world-wide victory which shall in due course be ascribed to Christ the Lord; and listened with rapt attention to earnest addresses on the work abroad and administration at home.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald read an abstract of the report, which opened with a hopeful note. In whatever quarter there may be doubt or despondency, there is none among those labouring in the mission-field. The brethren of the Jaffna district fairly voiced the feelings of others when they wrote: "God has so blessed our work that praise must be the prevailing note in our report of the past, and glad anticipation the attitude of our minds towards the future." Evangelisation was spoken of as the primary and central duty of the missionary, and the number of those engaged in it increases year by year. Native ministers and evangelists, lay preachers from England, form a great "company of preachers," who preach the Gospel day by day in a score of languages to thousands of people. Then comes the great and truly missionary agency of education, ranging from the village school, taught in a hut or in the open air, to high schools and theological institutions. In Asia and Africa 65,500 boys and girls, youths and maidens, are under instruction. The development of women's work among women is a notable and encouraging feature of the Society's operations. Every year adds to the number of women engaged in educational, evangelistic, and medical work. On an increasingly large scale, native Indian women are being employed to interest themselves in the people in a way which only women can do.

Among other mission institutions are the orphanage and the children's Home, the hospital, the blind school, and the Home for lepers. A deeply important section of the report dealt with the growth of the native ministry. At the present time more than half the missionaries on the roll are natives of the countries in which they are working. It is obvious that the Gospel can never be spread through the thickly-populated East and over the vast regions of the South except by men of the race and language of those to whom they preach. Christianity is unacclimatised and foreign in any country until it has raised up its own witnesses and workers; and churches have but a conditional existence until they possess a native pastorate. After recording progress in various lands, the report concluded with some speaking figures, an increase in the return of church membership, and also in the amount of the society's income. Although the balance-sheet was thus encouraging, showing an income of six figures, the society has an accumulation of deficits amounting in the aggregate to £30,478, and towards the reduction of this generous supporters of the Society are now being invited to show their charity.

The chairman, Alderman William H. Stephenson, Mayor of Newcastle on-Tyne, while acknowledging with pleasure the improved financial situation of the society, pointed out that giving had not advanced with the increase of membership. He had never known a Methodist to come to grief by what he gave to God's cause, but he had known many come to grief by what they kept back. The people require to be brought under a deep sense of stewardship and accountability to God. He had come to the conclusion that there was too much money in Methodism, and he remembered a sentiment by Juvenal, that as money increases the love of money increases also. He called upon his brethren to give more liberally, and asked that the interest of children should be more generally engaged in missions, and their co-operation secured in raising funds.

Rev. Walford Green, president of the Conference, delivered a rousing address; and was followed by Rev. James Lewis, from Karur, South India, who reported very cheering results of work in Negapatam, where high-caste Hindus are educated and instructed in the Gospel. The Karur Christians, among whom he has laboured as a vernacular preacher, are, he said, consistent and generous, and are doing their part to spread the Gospel. When the cholera visited the district, the native Christians did not forsake their friends as the Hindus did, but stood by them and nursed them with loving care. What with this malady, and fever, and burying the dead in haste, even into the middle of the night, with jackals howling around; and what with the bursting of a monsoon and twenty-six hours' ceaseless raining, Mr. Lewis had some terrible experiences. His "plain talk" was listened to with intense interest. Notwithstanding many cares and hard toils, he had joy in his work; only it was, he said, impossible to carry on at such a rate. He asked his hearers to put their hearts into missions, and to send out more labourers into the harvest-field. Referring to the work of the native catechists, he said that the example of the Christian man is more powerful than the cogency of the missionary's logic.

Other speakers were Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, of London; W. West Houldsworth, from the Mysore; and A. Spring Sharp, from the Transvaal. Several substantial contributions in aid of the Society's funds were announced.

Postal and Telegraph Employes.

The annual conference of the P.T.C.A. (senior), held in the City Temple on April 22 and 23, affords a clear proof of the great value of these periodical gatherings. The quiet hour of prayer from 10 to 11 o'clock was a fitting preparation for the consideration of the first subject, "The extension of the work." One rose after another to give an account of the working of the branches to which they belonged, showing that God is using the weak things of this world to the extension of his kingdom. Cambridge reported the formation of sixteen sub-branches. The Brighton, Durham, Edinburgh, Kingston, and N.W. District Office delegates also spoke of aggressive work. In the prayer-meeting which followed, Mr. Bevan showed that the sole source of power for service is Christ revealed in the worker (Gal. i. 16).

The conference on missionary work was rendered particularly interesting by the presence of Dr. Whitney from Japan. He spoke of the good work done in that country by means of the P.T.C.A. and Railway Mission journal, Light on the Pathway, which is circulated in four thousand places. There is probably no way in which more good is being done than by the members employing their annual leave in visiting other centres of P.T.C.A. work, and starting branches in towns where there are none. By this means some of the best branches have been formed. The testimony of those who took part in this holiday work conference was to the effect that not only had they received spiritual blessings while thus employed, but that God had looked after their bodies, and that they returned to their offices fresh and fit for work. The addresses given on April 22, by Rev. J. G. Mantle, and on 23rd, by Rev. E. L. Hamilton, will long be remembered.

P.T.C.A. MESSENGERS.

This meeting was held on April 26 at the Memorial Hall. Tea was followed by the messengers' conference. The chairman was Colonel Russell. The delegates, fifty in number, gave brief reports of the work in their various centres. One messenger told of their monthly missionary meeting, taken by the boys themselves; another of their monthly teas, when the elder boys do all the washing up, &c., while their guests listen to the Gospel message in another room.

In the evening, Rev. W. R. Mowll (Brixton) gave a powerful address on the eight "musts" in St. John's Gospel. The work among messengers is developing on all sides, and fresh workers are much needed. Any friends who would care to help in this work are invited to communicate with hon. sec., Miss A. F. Synge, 4, Vanbrugh-park-road, Blackheath, S.E.

Lord's Day Rest Association.

The Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association held last week in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, its thirty-eighth annual meeting.

Mr. S. D. Waddy, Q.C., who presided, vindicated in the course of an able opening address the ground he and others who thought with him take in regard to the Lord's Day. To his mind his question lay at the foundation of all national religion, for if the day devoted to Christian worship be abandoned, the worship itself must soon follow. To him the Lord's Day came with Divine sanction; but in appealing to the public at large he was content to base his claim on the value of the Sunday as a day of rest, on the need of a weekly rest for body and mind. Of course, it was easy to say, "Oh, you want to introduce a Scotch Sabbath"—although for his part he envied the Scotch people—and to remark upon Puritanical action and Puritanical modes of thought. He never was much afraid of a name. He did not mind being called Puritanical, for he did not associate Puritanism with weakness but with strength. To his mind it was the expression not of a shallow but of a deep state of thought, and he looked back upon what was sometimes called the Puritanical time in England with admiration, reverence, and respect. After dealing with postal and other difficulties, the chairman concluded by maintaining that the Sabbath is one of the most precious boons to humanity, and to all who would destroy it he would say, "Hands off."

An abstract of the report, read by Mr. Charles Hill, the secretary, said, from Parliamentary returns as to Sunday postal labour obtained by the Association in 1867 and 1894, it appeared that in 1867 four-fifths of the whole staff of postal employees worked on Sundays. In 1894 less than two-thirds of the staff worked on Sundays. In 1867 the postmen in towns had to work every day in the year except when they had about eight days' holiday, and rural postmen who worked on Sundays had to work on every day of the year for years together. Now all town postmen and rural postmen who do a full day's work on week-days, and who have to do any work on Sundays, are provided with a substitute every alternate Sunday. The auxiliary postmen are still liable to work every Sunday. In conclusion it was stated that eighty-three meetings had been held, and eleven lectures on Sunday observance had been given, 470 sermons had been preached or promised, 185,556 publications had been issued. Both railway servants and newsagents are making earnest efforts to secure a reduction of their Sunday work. The total income of the Association had been £1449 7s. 9d., and the expenditure £1285 19s. 9d.

Rev. J. F. Kitto, in the course of a vigorous speech, advocated the need for pegging away until they got a great body of public opinion united in upholding the Lord's Day. If it was to be preserved as a day of rest, it could only be by its being kept holy. He earnestly ask them to support the cause which the Society had at heart; let them spend the day as a holy day, and not in buying and selling. Working-men should have a clear and definite conviction that the Lord's Day was a glorious gift to man, and because it is the Lord's Day they should keep it.

Rev. F. B. Cowl, who followed, dealt largely with the modern revival of pleasuring on Sunday, with the opening of museums and so on. He was far from wishing to make it a dull day; indeed, rightly spent, it is the best and brightest of all the days of the week.

Further addresses followed by Messrs. J. M. Weylland, J. Halford, King, and others; while the Pennsylvania Jubilee Singers made sweet melody at intervals.

The Open-Air Mission.

A large company of the earnest and enthusiastic evangelists who give themselves to the publication of the Gospel in the parks and at street corners, mustered on Wednesday-week, in Exeter Hall (lower), for the annual meeting of the Open Air Mission. The Male Choir lately formed amongst musical members lent brightness to the proceedings by singing various sacred songs, while Miss Ada Rose kindly sang two solos.

Major Mackinlay read the report, which showed that, though greatly tried through lack of funds, the work has been carried on vigorously, and with the strictest economy. The members now number 1114. During 1894 its preachers conducted 2088 Gospel services, attended by about 235,577 persons. The Open-Air Mission appoints special agents to labour at the races, fairs, fêtes, galas, encampments, hop gardens, and other concourses of the people. Several agents are occupied in this work, and often bands of helpers assist. Gospel preaching, the distribution of suitable tracts and books, and personal conversation, are the means employed. During 1894 no less than 743 such assemblies were visited, at which 650,965 tracts and books were distributed. The Mission seeks the salvation of the villagers of the land by sending itinerant preachers to rural districts, where, in many cases, the sound of the Gospel is but seldom heard. Books and tracts are given from door to door, and the people are gathered in the open air. During 1894 its operations extended to 484 towns, villages, and hamlets. The report, shortly to be published, abounds with instances illustrating the value of such open-air testimony, race and regatta work, and village visitation.

Sir Douglas Fox, who presided, introduced himself as one of the oldest members of the committee, and one who feels its importance more and more. Some grand old veterans are missed sorely, but the work has got to be done, and God is able to empower his willing servants to do it. He wished heartily that larger funds were placed at the disposal of the Open-Air Mission, for its operations ought to be largely extended. It is a noble work, it is the Lord's work, and God will prosper it. The fact that the annual meeting was being held on the evening of the first day of the Epsom races afforded the chairman an admirable opportunity of enlarging on the good work being done by men courageous enough to stand, in the name of the Lord and in his power, as witnesses for the Gospel amid scenes of vice, sin, and insane excitement. There was no way to stem the terrible and growing evil of betting and gambling but by making men Christians. He knew of no other society which set such an example of economy as this, with its 1114 members at work and an income of only £1500.

Archdeacon Sinclair, who evidently regards the Open-air Mission with peculiar interest, spoke with the deepest earnestness and fervour. The Mission set an example of Christian unity. Denominational differences were forgotten in the preaching of repentance and faith. It was time for them to unite, not only in this sense, but against the intrigues and conspiracies of Rome and her auxiliaries. The labours of the Mission at races and similar great gatherings of the people were, in the words of Mr. Kirkham's memoir, "almost unique, and as a systematic effort unexampled. Here, in the midst of ribaldry and riot, surrounded by thousands having no fear of God before their eyes, and often exposed to insult and contumely, these brave and devoted open-air preachers stood as undaunted witnesses for truth and righteousness — warning, pleading, inviting, proclaiming and rescuing wherever their glorious errand led them. Gospel publications were scattered by scores of thousands, and the great Evangel was proclaimed in the very midst of Satan's chosen seats." They had been called to a great work. Might God abundantly bless and encourage them in it!

The address by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, which followed, was equally helpful, and some racy remarks by Mr. Powell, one of the agents who had that afternoon returned from labouring at Epsom Spring Races, and whose descriptions of the work there were very striking, brought the meeting to a fitting close.

Miss Weston's Bluejackets.

Whatever else "a life on the ocean wave" may do for Jack, it certainly gives him strength of lung. It was with a feeling of envy that our reporter sat at the table and listened to the strenuous, hearty song of the sailors on the platform of the lower Exeter Hall on Tuesday afternoon, as the people gathered for Miss Weston's anniversary, This most pleasing and fitting preliminary to the meeting proper was closed by a splendid recitation by an ex-officer of H.M. yacht Victoria and Albert; it was entitled "The Sailors' Friend," and set forth in vivid words the work of Miss Weston in saving the sailors from the dreadful drink.

Though Miss Weston presided over the meeting, she gave her "dear naval friends" every chance of sharing in the proceedings. A bombardier in the Royal Marines offered the opening prayer, which was earnest and to the point. "There is no sham in the navy," he said in his petition; "let us be real in this service." Miss Weston's account of the year's work came out of a full heart, and out of the fullest knowledge of its manifold branches. She told of the Sailors' Rests (now by Her Majesty designated "Royal"); the temperance work; the work among the wives, families, and widows; among the boys of the training ships. A quotation from a letter by a sailor's mother, who said "the navy has been the making of him," was warmly greeted, as also was a letter from a bluejacket on one of H.M.'s battleships. It was telling of the death of a lad on board the ship who had been a good Christian and temperance boy, and whose death was deeply regretted. The growing interest of commanding officers in the service, shown by their personal interest in the temperance work in the navy, was quoted as an encouraging feature. Miss Weston hinted that by and by these naval commanders might go a step further, and become total abstainers themselves as an example to those under them. There are 1000 seamen in the navy serving on committees alone in the work of the Royal Naval Temperance Society. At Devonport and Portsmouth alone last year 6021 pledges were taken. Many other delightful statistics mixed with orthodox nautical phrases came from Miss Weston, who acquitted herself splendidly in the double capacity of chairwoman and secretary. Every year, she said, she wanted to do something more; she hoped she would never be like a ship "lying at anchor with her ropes coiled up." A much-desired reform has been brought about—the paying of the seamen's half-pay to the wives at post-offices instead of the dockyards. Other important reforms are on the tapis. Miss Weston wants a thousand more annual subscribers to put work on a proper financial footing. e Queen lately sent money to found and endow Cabin in the Rest, and other lady members of Royal House are showing a keen interest in good work. Let those in humbler walks of follow their example.

After such a full and interesting statement, ditional testimony was almost needless. But the ces of Miss Vince (Miss Weston's "flag-captain"), Canon Fleming, and some bluejackets besides, re heard, either in describing the details of the rk or in advocating its claims. Few of the May etings of the year have had or will have more uine living interest than this muster of the blue-kets of the Royal Navy.

The Church Missionary Society.

The great "May week" of the Church of England ieties was inaugurated on Monday night by a sterly sermon by the Bishop of Durham before an mense congregation at St. Bride's, Fleet-street. e special occasion was the anniversary of the urch Missionary Society, and this always raws"; but the oldest friends of the Society ee that Monday's congregation exceeded in num-s all previous years. In the congregation were Bishop of Exeter, the Bishop of Sierra Leone io has just arrived in England), Bishop Royston, John Kennaway, M.P., Sir T. Fowell Buxton e new Governor of South Australia), and many ers. The Bishop of Durham evidently felt the ponsibility of the occasion, and preached for arly an hour.

Friends of foreign missions must feel that the re fact that the C.M.S. held on Tuesday no fewer n eight large meetings in Exeter, St. James's, and ner halls, affords encouraging evidence of the althy condition of this great Society and of a de-spread and genuine interest in the evangelisa-n of the heathen.

The morning meeting in Exeter Hall was densely wded, while at the same time St. James's Hall s also filled. The report laid before the meet-abounded in themes for praise. The staff has ubled since 1887, the total missionaries being now 7. The receipts for the year have amounted to 72,000, or an increase of £20,000 on any vious year. As an indication of God's blessing, was pointed out that the adult baptisms had mbered 4,200. Special mention was made the awakening among Christian native mmunities and of the raising of many and uable native labourers. Fresh developments in direction of medical and women's missions were cially mentioned. While all this calls for nkfulness, the committee feel that, instead of sting of a "great Society" and a "magnificent come," Christian people need to humble them-ves before the Lord, to repent of their half-artedness, and, though the privilege be not given em in this dispensation of bringing the world to rist, to resolve, in dependence on the Spirit of d, to bring Christ to the world. A new mission-y crusade needs to be preached throughout the nd, as it was preached eighty years ago by men e Pratt, and Marsh, and Bickersteth, and Legh chmond, and Haldane Stewart, and in this usade all those clergymen and laymen should take eir part who have their own eyes opened to the lities of the case, namely, that hundreds of mil-ns have never heard of Christ, and that not one r cent. of those who do know Him go forth to ch them.

Sir John H. Kennaway reviewed, in a compre-nsive and statesmanlike speech, the general ssionary outlook. While thanking God for what s been done, we are called to fresh enthusiasm d consecration; girding ourselves to a new usade in the name of our God. The dry bones are rring; the Spirit of God is moving in many nds; but are we found co-workers with Him?

The Archbishop of Dublin, who was enthu-stically received, spoke of the English and Irish urches working together heart to heart in the eat cause of missions. After recalling the story St. Columba and other early Irish missionaries, closed with a fervent prayer that the C.M.S. ght grow and flourish; and as a great Evan-ical Society be honoured of God to do a mighty rk among the heathen who sit in darkness and e shadow of death.

Rev. H. E. Perkins, of the Punjaub, in speaking India, said that there the missionaries have to et not only sin, but sin entrenched behind system. Proceeding, he gave a sketch of work at an Indian fair, showing the curious objections and questions raised by Hindus, Moslems, Pantheists, Brahmo Somaj, and latitudinarians—not with dry-as-dust philosophical views, but with the popular conceptions which sway and animate men. On the other hand, he told of village service among the low caste, the poor, the degraded, many of whom received the Gospel with joy. Some remarkable stories, from his own experience, followed, showing how men who seemed most sunken had been laid hold of by God and transformed into new beings and made useful and devoted witnesses to his Gospel.

The Bishop of Salisbury had, as he told us, just returned from a journey of thirty thousand miles round the globe, finding everywhere men speaking the same tongue and inspired by the same faith and hope. Although he had gone primarily for the sake of health, he sought opportunity for work, and cheering labourers as God enabled him. Hence he had come back with a fresh idea of what mission work really means. Verily there is much to do; and the forces of heathenism, hoary with age and heavy with superstitious darkness, show few signs of yielding; but God is working, and He knows no defeat. En passant he mentioned that in Fiji alone he found twelve thousand Indian coolies wholly without the Gospel, yet they are likely ere long to become the dominant power in these islands. In Japan he had observed how marvellously the Word of God was penetrating army and navy. In these and similar instances God had been calling his people to fresh and hopeful effort. His hand is in the work, and He must prevail.

Col. Robert Williams, the new treasurer, vice Sir T. Fowell Buxton, appointed Governor of South Australia, briefly spoke, accepting the responsibility as laid upon him by God.

Chancellor P. V. Smith, in moving a resolution to the effect, "That this meeting, in reviewing the experiences of the past year, is devoutly thankful to Almighty God for the many and manifest tokens of his good hand having rested on the work entrusted to the Society; but recognising the appalling fact that hundreds of millions in the world have never heard the name of Christ, the urgent call for reinforcements for East, West, and Central Africa, and for India, and the comparative supineness of the Church of Christ to the claims of the risen Lord on each individual to engage directly or indirectly in the evangelisation of the world, would to this end unite in earnest prayer for the outpouring in an increased measure of the Holy Spirit upon the Church at home." Drawing an analogy from the sun, the speaker said that if the Church was to influence the cold mass of heathendom, she herself must be heated to a white heat of enthusiasm, faith, and devotion. After reviewing the progress of the Gospel in various lands, he closed by asking earnest and loving prayer, not only for the missionaries, but also for the native churches, the native Christians to whom God has entrusted the task of completing the work we have begun of evangelising their countrymen.

Rev. G. F. Head dwelt on the appalling fact that hundreds of millions of men have never even heard the name of Christ; and on the urgent call for reinforcements in many fields. Whence that call? Who utters it? Death has a voice, and the deadness and corruption of China, India, and Africa cries aloud for those who bring life and light. There is a cry of need, and it rings in our hearts to-day. There is a call from God Himself. Who will go? And when our sons and daughters respond to the call, who will support them? God wants the workers. Who will give themselves? He felt astounded in contemplating the supineness of the Church of Christ to the claims of her Lord on each individual member. He would have us look not to human mechanism and organisation, but to the Great Head of the Church in constant touch with his body in which his life flows forth. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is as mighty to-day as ever it was, but we need to be filled with the power of the Holy Ghost in setting it forth. Mr. Head summed up his thoughts thus: that which appals us—the number of the heathen; that which stirs us—the call; that which astounds us—the supineness of many; and that which cheers us—the triumphs God has already vouchsafed in many lands. Let the Spirit of God flow in and take possession of us, and his work shall be done.

Rev. W. P. Buncombe, of Japan, and the Bishop of Sierra Leone having briefly spoken, the proceedings were brought to a conclusion.

National Temperance League.

The annual meeting of the National Temperance League was held on Monday night at Exeter Hall. Mr. Alexander Guthrie (vice-president) occupied the chair. The report, which was read by Mr. Robert Rae, stated that a great pledge-signing crusade was initiated by the committee in October last, and so far had been very successful. The League's work in the Royal Navy had been carried on successfully, 19,394 pledge cards and 1037 cards of honour having been issued. The general receipts for the year were £2809, of which £2457 were subscriptions and donations, and £120 legacies. The report concluded with a call to earnest work on the old lines of personal persuasion to total abstinence.

The Chairman said the League had worked gratifying changes in the Church, the Army, and the Navy; and it was pleasing to know that since its formation medical opinion had so changed that now the profession generally condemned the use of alcohol. Even lawyers were being reached through the Royal Courts Temperance Society. It was time that the power of granting licences was taken out of the hands of the magistrates, and the traffic placed under the control of the people.

Mr. J. Barnsley (Birmingham) spoke of the change which had come over public opinion, and of the great advantage it was to working men to be abstainers. Dr. E. L. Fox said although there were only about 1000 medical practitioners who were total abstainers, a much larger number believed that alcohol was of no use as food, and not much as a medicine. Viscount Morpeth dwelt upon the need of spreading information on temperance questions, and promised to do all he could on the London School Board to forward the cause.

Army and Navy Missionary Union.

The annual meeting was held in the London Soldiers' Home, Westminster, on Monday afternoon. Prebendary Webb-Peploe opened the meeting with a devotional address on the qualities of obedience and sacrifice, which were the characteristic soldierly virtues, as the true spirit in which missionary service should be undertaken.

Miss Weston followed with a stirring speech on the duty of Christian officers to promote missionary work at their foreign stations. What they wanted to see was the men seeking out the missionaries, not the missionaries the men.

Mr. C. T. Studd, who had a hearty welcome, said that in China, when he first went there, he appropriated a whole country, with all its towns and villages and teeming population. One or two cases he (Mr. Studd) gave of the obstinacy of the Chinese in sticking to their idols, and the pathetic fidelity of some of his converts. In conclusion, Mr. Studd warmly welcomed the Army and Navy Missionary Union as being likely to bring officers and men on foreign service into touch with the missionaries.

Major-General Hutchinson added a few words on England's duty in India, Egypt, Uganda, and elsewhere.

Hackney Y.M.C.A.

In connection with the eleventh anniversary, special meetings were held on Thursday last week. Alderman Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Bart., presided in the afternoon at a public tea in the Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium. The secretary reported that good work had been done during the year by the Bible-classes, evangelistic meetings, open-air services, P.S.A. for men and youths, village mission, foreign missionary society, S.S. teachers' preparation class, Bible-reading union, educational classes, library, etc., etc. A ten days' mission, conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness, resulted in blessing to many. Two members left during the year for the foreign mission field. Good work was done by the village mission. There was an increase of members and decrease of associates during the year.

Brief testimonies to the value of the Association work were given by the ministers present.

In the evening a largely-attended meeting was held in the Morley Hall, Mr. J. E. Vanner presiding. Addresses were delivered by Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Mr. Robinson Souttar, Oxford, and Dr. Harry Guinness. Members of the Association gave a gymnastic display during the evening, whilst musical selections from the oratorios were rendered by a large choir and orchestra from the Great Assembly Hall.

MISSIONS IN MADAGASCAR.

At a meeting of the directors of the London Missionary Society on Tuesday week, a communication was read from their committee of missionaries at Antananarivo, urging them to make renewed and special efforts, in conjunction with the leaders of Nonconformity in England, to induce the British Government to use its influence with France to withdraw from its policy of annexation. In response to this appeal the directors adopted the following minute:—

"The directors desire to assure the missionaries afresh that the present very serious political difficulties in Madagascar have not escaped their attention, and that to the best of their ability they have already used all the means which they deemed wise, or within the sphere of their duty, to call the attention of H. M. Government to the matter. They have reason to believe that no good end would be served, but rather that injury might be done by any attempt at public agitation on this subject, nor do they consider it advisable to make any claim to the sympathy or help of the Government, with reference to the clauses of the Anglo-French Convention of 1890, which provide for religious liberty and freedom of work, until there is evidence to show that the French Government have violated those conditions. They desire to assure the churches in Madagascar through the Imerina District committee that very many warm sympathisers in England are constantly committing their cause to God in prayer, and that if the way were made plain to them for other action in their interests, they would not be slow to do whatever lay in their power to help them."

As to the safety of the European missionaries, the directors have given them full liberty to leave the country, or take any other course which they deem best.

MILITARY CHURCH AT ROME.

The mission to soldiers in Rome has now been in existence for twenty-two years. The Military Church began its life amidst conflicts with priests and Jesuitism; and although the Church of Rome has never ceased its persecution, yet every year greater progress has been made.

At this year's celebration, on April 11, a good number of new brethren were present. Before the Communion Service began everyone present received a copy of the "Memoir of the Military Church," written by Pastor Capellini, of which a fifth edition, corrected up to date, has just been published. Rev. H. J. Piggott, who presided, gave an impressive address. Many foreigners participated, and this was a pleasure to us, for the Military Church has friends in England, in America, in Germany, all which countries were represented. The pastor followed with the names of those from whom he had received letters (the letters themselves could not be read for want of time). The churches of Viterbo, Spoleto, Perugia, Civita Vecchia, and Caserto sent their remembrances. Many brethren on furlough also wrote, and Brother Carlo Musi, who is now in America, begged our prayers to help him through the trials and difficulties he is now undergoing, before he can be admitted in the Theological College at Bloomfield. Each new catechumen received as a gift a beautiful copy of the Holy Scriptures.

Thanks to the Lord for all his benefits poured upon us in his infinite mercy. We beg all Christian people to pray for us, that our faith fail not; and also that the health of our dear pastor, Cav. Capellini, may be preserved.

Rome, April 13, 1895.

EDITH-ROAD MISSION, STRATFORD, E.—Work which has been carried on since 1882 in inadequate and unsanitary premises in Chandos-road, Stratford, is about to be transferred to Edith-road, in the same locality, where a new hall, with class-rooms, to seat 250 persons, is now in course of erection. The total cost will be about £600, of which £200 has been raised. The mission is affiliated with the Baptist Church, Cann Hall-road, Leytonstone, and during the last three years much useful and encouraging spiritual work has been accomplished. The mission is self-supporting, and great willingness has been shown by the people to contribute to their utmost to the cost of the new hall. The help, however, of outside friends who are interested in the evangelisation of East London, is urgently needed. The treasurer is Mr. C. H. Lake, Aldersbrook, Wanstead, E.

EPSOM RACES.

Sir,—It was my privilege to visit Epsom Spring Races with the earnest band of Christian workers sent by the Open-air Mission on Tuesday and Wednesday last week. In conversation with a man of the racing fraternity, he said he had visited Epsom races for over thirty years, and he had not seen such a large attendance as on that day (Wednesday). This is evidence that the evil is growing. It was estimated that on the second day there were 120,000 present. The little band of less than twenty workers did grand service, but their number should be largely increased. If your readers could read the records of work done by this society, they would be inspired to come to their help, and to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Thousands on the course heard the Gospel, and many were moved to tears by the singing and preaching. At one of the services a man said to me, "I like that singing. I have been gambling, but will throw my 'book' away and do no more of it."

Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary, 11, Adam-street, Strand, will be pleased to furnish any of your readers with further information concerning its work. I am informed that a much larger band of workers will be sent by the Mission to the Epsom Summer Races, soon to take place.—Yours respectfully,

Levi Powell.

Torquay.

WHAT MR. NIX WANTS.

Dear Sir,—The work of the Racecourse Mission has been abundantly owned and blessed by God in the past; much good seed has been sown, and some has brought forth good fruit. I had the joy of hearing a London minister say only this week that the grandest trophy for Christ he had known this year in his own church was the result of our work on Epsom Downs. We are encouraged by God's blessing to look to Him again for blessing at the coming summer races, and to your readers for their prayer, sympathy, and help.

We want, first, one hundred men, full of God's Holy Spirit and love for the perishing.

Second, we want about £70 in money for the hire of tent, food, printing, and many other things. We also want 10,000 Gospels and 250,000 tracts of all sorts. I suppose that during the week at least two million persons will visit the Downs.

Then we must have something to eat, as we are on Epsom Downs from Monday till Friday night. Those who cannot send cash might send beef, hams, cheese, butter, eggs, tea, sugar, coffee, cocoa, and cakes; in fact, anything that is good.

Above all, pray that God's blessing may rest upon the workers and upon the work, and that we may have a time of great refreshing from Him. All communications and parcels should be addressed to me at the Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, London.

NEW SURREY CHAPEL.

Under the title, "Toils and Triumphs in Darkest London," Rev. J. Tolefree Parr describes the many-sided and successful work at the New Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, during the past year. The membership of the church has increased by twenty, and now numbers 271; 1200 children are being cared for in the Sunday-school and Poor Children's Mission; 24,000 visits have been made to the homes of the people. A Lodging House Mission has proved very successful, and the Temperance and Open-air Missions have been greatly blessed of the Lord.

Since the new year came in a great quickening of spiritual life has been realised; on the first Sunday in March thirty-eight adults were welcomed into the church, including converts from the P.S.A., the mothers' meeting, the lodging houses, the Christian Endeavour, and the ordinary services. Several pleasing cases of conversion are given.

The work, however, has been seriously burdened with a debt of £6000 upon the premises. The connectional committees have promised £1200 towards the extinction of this debt, or proportionate grants for sums paid off. The minister is very desirous that the debt should be reduced, so as to free his hands for the real work of evangelisation. The report affords striking evidence that, though the church is poor, by earnest, self-sacrificing, and sagacious efforts, it is reaching and winning to Christ the degraded population around the chapel.

Letters to the Editor.

DARWIN AND "THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES"

Sir,—In The Christian of April 25, Dr. Butle Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, is reported have said, at the meeting of the Christian Eviden Society, that one of the "things that manufactu unbelievers" is "the cry that Darwin's epoc making book, 'The Origin of Species,' involved a attack on Christian truth."

It is highly important that there should be mistake about the author of "The Origin of Species and his opinions. Darwin has himself said:—" gradually came to disbelieve in Christianity as Divine revelation"; "I do not believe that a revelation has ever been made." The forei followers of Darwin say:—"Darwin's theory tur the Creator out of doors, and leaves no room f the agency of such a Being" (Vögt). "The evol tion theory is perfectly irreconcilable with the idea a personal Almighty Creator" (Büchner).

Darwin attacks Christian truth, inasmuch as contradicts the opening page of Holy Scriptu The Bible tells us that God made all the vegetab creation "after his kind, whose seed is in itse upon the earth"; that God made all the anim creation, "every living creature," "after their kind and "blessed them, saying, Be fruitful and mul ply"; that, finally, God made man "in his ow image, in the image of God created He him"- thus rendering possible the Incarnation of th Redeemer (Gen. i. 11, 21, 22, 27). "Christi truth bids us look upward and onward to the Go man; Darwin points backward and downward the man-beast. He has even had the effronte to write: "Man is descended from a hairy qua ruped, furnished with a tail and pointed ears, pr bably arboreal in its habits." The revered an renowned Professor Sedgwick penned a long lett of remonstrance, and that eminent man of scienc Sir John Herschel, gave Darwin's theory its rig name—"The Law of Higgledy Piggledy."

It seems impossible not to agree with The Edi burgh Review: "Darwin's influence has been mo hostile to Theism (and, therefore, necessarily 'Christian truth') than that of any other writ since the foundation of Christianity itself. He r repudiated creation, abjured design, and enthron unreason as the Lord of the Universe. He violat the deepest instincts of humanity, and opened door to atheism." "That Darwin should ha swayed opinion for thirty years is a reproach to th age; but the system has had its day, and men a rising up who will destroy it."

SOHO AND ST. GILES' MISSION.

Dear Sir,—It is amongst the very poor that carry on our mission work. We visit the sick an try to cheer the sad and depressed. Many atte the Gospel services in Bloomsbury Hall, Mear street, Soho. The poor from all European natio are gathered about us. It is common to find thr or four languages spoken in one house, while habi and religions are equally varied. This necessitat a variety of plan and method in presenting Gosp truth.

One of the most acceptable is that of distributi flowers, with a text or portion of God's Word tached. Will the readers of The Christian wh have gardens kindly send us, occasionally, flowe freshly cut, so that we may cheer the sick and e liven the rooms of the sad?—Yours truly,

Alice Annie Harrison.

AT LIVESEY HALL, SHROPSHIRE, a well-attend experience meeting was held, when twenty-o persons gave their testimony in favour of abstinen

AN EVANGELICAL OPENING.—For more th four years Divine service has been held for Evange cal members of the Church of England in a han somely-fitted little church at Westbourne, Bourn mouth, by Rev. George Morris. It was provided meet a greatly-felt want in the locality, and althou the Bishop's licence was withheld, the clergyman w earnestly petitioned to give the means of grace acco ing to the Church of England. Advanced age, howev necessitating his retirement, the church, which freehold property, will be sold by auction on May 7, the Central Hotel, Bournemouth, at 3.30 p.m. would be a pity for the work to lapse or the buildi fall into hostile hands. Some of our readers m like to interest themselves in the matter.

THE Y.M.C.A.

WELCOME TO SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS.

A social réunion of a very interesting character took place at 13, Russell-square, W.C., on the evening of Thursday, April 25, when a large number of Y.M.C.A. and other friends assembled to welcome Sir George and Lady Williams on their return home from Mentone. Mr. Hugh Matheson, on behalf of those present and many others who were unable to attend, gave suitable expression to the joy that was felt at the return of Sir George and Lady Williams. They had been greatly missed, he said, during their three months' stay in the south of France; but compensation was found for this in the fact that Sir George's health had been much improved, and it was hoped that, by somewhat curtailing the number of his engagements, his strength, in the goodness of God, might be maintained for many years.

Dr. Newman Hall having in earnest prayer commended Sir George and Lady Williams to the continued blessing of God, Sir George briefly acknowledged the kind words that had been spoken, and the love which had prompted this gathering. Lady Williams and himself were glad once more to be in London, the great heart and centre of the universe. They had been most refreshed and encouraged by what they had seen of Y.M.C.A. work in France, where there were now 120 Associations, all free to carry on their efforts as they chose. In Paris from 600 to 700 young men had been got together at a day's notice to meet them, and they had a delightful time. They were rejoiced also to have learnt while away of the progress of Y.M.C.A. work in Italy. Here the centre of operations is shortly to be transferred from Spezia to Rome, and Mr. James Stokes, of New York, who is doing so much for young men on the Continent, has a very earnest, consecrated young Italian now in training in America, with a view to his becoming the national Y.M.C.A. secretary for Italy.

Mr. David McConaughy, of Madras, secretary of the Indian National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, who was present en route for the American Convention, gave a most encouraging account of the work in India. Five trained men from England and America are now in charge of the work, and five native helpers are in training. Not only at the centre of the universe, but at the circumference, is this blessed power at work, which led to the establishment of the Y.M.C.A. so many years ago.

BRIEF NOTES.

The members of the Hetton (Durham) Association were entertained to a social evening on Wednesday, by Mr. and Mrs. John Todd, Holly House. There was a numerous attendance. Short addresses were given by Mr. J. C. Moor, and Mr. A. Turnbull.

The educational classes in connection with the Glasgow Association and the general secretary's Bible-class have had most successful winter sessions. At the former, 2500 pupils were enrolled, and at the latter 118 young men were on the roll, with an average attendance of about seventy.

Encouraging news is just to hand from the Association in Jamaica. The Port Antonio Association has increased its membership to seventy, and has taken convenient premises. The Kingston Y.M.C.A. is also doing well; and a new Association has been recently formed at Brown's Town.

The Southern District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, embracing seventeen Associations in Hampshire and Dorset, held its Spring Conference at Dorchester on April 25. The Conference sessions were followed by a crowded public meeting, held at the Town Hall in the evening, at which addresses were delivered by Bishop Moule, Rev. E. N. Thwaites, Mr. W. H. Mills, and Mr. A. H. Wheeler.

Professor Aladar Szabo, of Budapest, sends an interesting account of the progress of Association work in Hungary. "We have," he says, "no powerful Associations as yet, neither have we any suitable buildings, but the Lord has begun this work among us, and He will continue it." The Budapest Association has a variety of agencies at work with a special branch for German-speaking young men; and small Associations exist in half a dozen other Hungarian towns.

Special efforts are being made by the Associations in Germany to reach the 500,000 young men in the army of that country. The results are as yet comparatively small, but are nevertheless encouraging. The National committee publishes a list of the members serving in the army, to make them known to each other, and to enable the Associations in towns with garrisons to invite such members to their rooms. The last list contains 1263 names, representing 202 garrisons.

The Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. Missionary Prayer Band has been in existence for about three and a-half years, and has an average attendance of thirty to thirty-five. Largely through its influence thirteen missionaries have left the Edinburgh Association during the last three and a-half years for work in China, Ceylon, and Africa. The members correspond with over thirty missionaries in different parts of the "regions beyond," informing them of work being done at home, and sending out papers and magazines.

The Spring Conference of the Western District Union of the Young Men's Christian Associations took place at Swindon on the 24th ult. Delegates were present from most of the Associations in the district, and encouraging reports were presented from several centres, while from others the information was not so cheering, the need for a district travelling secretary being keenly felt. Papers were read by Messrs. Albert White and J. H. Putterill on the "Privilege and Responsibility of Membership" and the "Future Work of the Y.M.C.A." A public meeting took place at the Town Hall in the evening, and addresses were given by Messrs. Putterill and Holmes, and E. E. Evans.

The work of the Shoreditch Y.M.C.A. for the past year is thus summarised:—"We have increased our numbers; we have improved our provision for the comfort of both seniors and juniors; we have not only paid our way, but have during the year done something towards the reduction of the heavy debt which has oppressed us ever since we had to spend such a large sum in renovating and rendering habitable our present premises; our various social, educational, and other agencies have been in continuous operation for the benefit of our members and associates; and last, but beyond all, the spiritual and distinctively Christian work of our Association has been real, honest, and we may confidently say has been sealed with the blessing of God.

At the annual meeting of the New Cross and Brockley Y.M.C.A., held on Monday evening, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Mills, the Archdeacon of London was the principal speaker, and in the course of his address said:—"It is a delightful feature of this Association that clergymen and ministers who are unfortunately now divided by mistakes that we have made in past generations, can on its platform join hands, forgetting, for the time being, their small differences, and remembering that they are one in Christ Jesus. Our Association is not in any sense itself a church. It is not the desire of the Y.M.C.A. to found a new denomination or sect; it has no ambition to supply that which can only properly be supplied by the recognised pastor and the regular church organisation. Nor have I observed any tendency on the part of the members to become 'a set of young Pharisees,' though they do very properly feel that as soon as they become servants of the Lord Jesus Christ they have a mission to fulfil on behalf of their fellow young men—that of doing their utmost to bring them to a knowledge of the truth which has proved so great a blessing to their own souls." Rev. A. J. Waldron, of Camberwell, also spoke, and an encouraging report was adopted on the motion of Revs. F. A. Pring and John Lewis.

LONDON-STREET MISSION, DOCKHEAD.

The thirty-first annual report of this Mission is interesting reading. We make a few excerpts:—

No neighbourhood in London affords more scope for real Christ-like effort than that in the immediate vicinity of Dockhead. The extent to which such work can be carried on, however, is distinctly circumscribed by the funds at our command, and we cannot too strongly urge the needs of this neighbourhood, and the necessity, not alone of maintaining, but of extending our operations. During the year over 700 meetings have been held, and on very many occasions the converting grace of God has been manifested both indoors and out; over thirty have professed conversion. Among our chief joys is the steady progress in the spiritual life made by the greater proportion of the large number of young men and women who attend the Mission, of whom there are at least sixty. Among the children we have been very busy, and, sorely as it grieves us, we must refuse to admit any more scholars until we can have more accommodation. A new feature has been introduced in the shape of a girls' dressmaking circle.

A week of special services held in November resulted in thirteen professions of faith in Jesus, in addition to which a number of total abstinence pledges were taken. At the Sunday evening Gospel meetings the room is often over-crowded by an adult congregation. Open-air work, mothers' meetings. Bible-classes, and other efforts are full of interest, The early part of 1894 was marked by a series of exceptionally painful cases of destitution which came under our notice. The most important feature of our social work in some respects was the fourteen days' country or seaside holiday for the children. In this we co-operate with the Ragged School Union. Eighty-one children were sent to the Holiday Homes of the Union. Some of these children have to be supplied with clothing before they can go even to Ragged School Homes. The secretary is Mr. W. Bustin, 13, Prior-road, Bermondsey.

THE Y.W.C.A.

HOLIDAY FUND.

Writing on the Convalescent Sick Aid and Holiday Fund Report for 1894, the hon. secretary says:—Whilst some are privileged to drink in the beauty of nature in her loveliest aspects summer after summer, there are others living in dingy London courts and back streets who have never had one glimpse of the sea! For these we would plead—for these we earnestly ask help to procure them two or three weeks' liberty, rest, and pure enjoyment during their twelvemonth's toil.

A lady who manages a club for working girls in a very poor district, lately wrote as follows:—"All our workers think that the time spent in the country does the girls more good, both morally and physically, than anything else in their lives. They talk of the wonderful things they saw and did all the winter long, and now those who have been away with us before are counting the days till August 28, when we hope to take our first detachment. Some girls have saved all the winter through, so as to be able to stay a fortnight this time. I hope you will be as kind as you have been the last two years, and give us a grant from the holiday fund... We want to take some of our club girls free. All those whose names are down on my paper are most deserving, and very poor. Two of them have had rheumatic fever during the winter. Some have had chest ailments, and the others are simply overdone with the long hours and heat in the laundries, and they are all very poor." Communications should be made to Mrs. Smurthwaite, care of Miss F. E. Cole, 25, Redburn-street, Tedworth-square, S.W.

Taking "Treasure" as a key-word of their report for 1894, the committee of the Belgravian Institute state that the Bible-classes are ever to the forefront of the work. Among our Prayer Union members there is the spirit of humble desire to make known "the riches of Christ" among others in various way—sometimes by getting strangers to the Bible-classes, by distribution of notices, by visiting the absent or sick members. Several are teachers in a Sunday-school among some of the poorest of Westminster.

The County Dublin Y.W.C.A. quarterly conference, held in the Gregg Memorial Hall, on April 23, was of real interest. Miss Wallace presided. Miss Alcock gave an eloquent and instructive address on Rev. iii. 4, 5, "The White Raiment, and the Book of Life." Mrs. Burroughs spoke on 1 Cor. vii. 7-29, "The time is short," let us redeem it. Mrs. Goodbody, who has lately returned from a visit to India, gave information about the new home in Calcutta, and other centres of Christian life. Miss Marrable gave a short account of Y.W.C.A. progress in Ireland. There are now 326 branches, seventy junior branches, about 18000 members in all. Mrs. Millard also spoke.

HOME OF REST FOR CHILDREN.

The "Ruth Elliott" Home of Rest for Poor Children, Enfield, which was commenced three years ago as an experiment, has now proved itself a real success. The term of tenancy has almost expired, and we feel that a change is necessary. A house, in every way adapted for our enlarged work, has presented itself. Good rooms, beautiful garden, a splendid playroom, every convenience, and a constant supply of water. We could take twice the number of children, and add to the Home that which I have wanted from the first, a few permanent cases, whom we could train for respectable, honest life.

I have in the Home, at this moment, a girl, who, on account of a "bad back," had to leave her situation and go home to her starving widowed mother. A doctor told her she had a diseased spine and must go into the hospital to have it "scraped." This she objected to, and came to Enfield instead. There is another girl who wants to be a "good servant," almost everything in her home has been pawned for bread, and the child has been many days without any food but the "free breakfasts." The father is dead, and the mother ill and unutterably poor. As the girl is but twelve years old, I fear it will be some time before she can go to service. Can I help her? or must I send her home? I have a baby girl, a dear little pet, but her life, so short, only eighteen months, has had much suffering and sadness in it. When she came to me at the age of thirteen months, she weighed, with all her clothes on, exactly 12lbs. Now she has but two teeth and "rickets." As you nurse your own dearly-loved little ones during sickness, and see them in their spotless cots, surrounded by every comfort, no expressed wish ungratified, every want anticipated, do you think of other children less favoured than your own, alone in their weakness, alone in their want, without a loving voice near, or a tender hand to caress? (Miss) Annie Priest Peck, Hon. Sec.

Chaseside, Enfield.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

During the past week conferences on the Second Advent, the Jews, and Scripture inspiration have been held in Aberdeen.

The annual inspection of the Glasgow Boys' Brigade took place on Saturday, April 20. 3680 boys and officers were present.

Rev. John McNeill has been declining many requests for work since his return home. He wishes to secure a few months of rest before entering on fresh engagements.

Considerable additions have been built to Grove-street Home Mission Institute, Glasgow, and the new wing is to be opened on May 7 by the Duchess of Sutherland. Lord Overtoun and other friends will take part on the occasion.

Fifty-four ministers, eighteen from each of the three Presbyterian bodies in Scotland, have for some time been engaged in drawing up a scheme for Presbyterian union in Scotland. Rev. J. R. Stowie, of the Free Church, reports that very satisfactory progress has been made.

The Helensburgh Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society celebrated its twenty-first anniversary on Monday, April 22. A conference was also held on the preceding Saturday, and a special meeting for young people on the afternoon of Sunday. The latter service was attended by the boys from the Clyde training-ship Empress, stationed in the Gareloch. A social meeting for children concluded the commemoration services.

The annual meetings of the Scottish Temperance League were begun in Glasgow on Saturday, with the usual Band of Hope demonstrations. Sermons were preached on Sabbath in Glasgow churches and the country during the day, and the annual sermon was delivered by Canon Barker, London, in St. Andrews Hall, in the evening. On Monday evening the public meeting was held in the City Hall, at which Mr. James Guthrie, J.P., Brechin, presided.

A public meeting, to discuss the subject "How Best to Deal with the Liquor Traffic," was held on April 26 in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. Preceptor J. H. Dickson presided over a large audience. The Scandinavian system, municipalisation, and local veto were advocated by various speakers, Rev. Robert Primrose speaking in favour of the first, Mr. James Alston the second, and Rev. Dr. Stalker and Rev. Jas. Paton the last-named. After the discussion which followed, a vote was taken. The majority were in favour of local veto, a large number supported municipalisation, but only a few voted for the Scandinavian system.

The public meeting of the first Scottish Convention of the Society of Christian Endeavour was a memorable and impressive occasion. St. Andrews Hall, Glasgow, was crowded to its utmost capacity by an audience of 4000, chiefly young people, and hundreds could not obtain admission. An overflow meeting was held in the church opposite. Lord Overtoun presided for the first hour-and-a-half, and then gave place to Rev. E. R. Hassé (Bedford), who conducted the "national consecration service." The sight of so many eager, earnest, and enthusiastic young people professing to be followers of the Lord Jesus, and boldly avowing it, was a sight which carried hope and expectation to the hearts of older workers, and sent many away to look forward with confidence to the future.

SAILORS IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers are acquainted with the name and work of Miss Green-Armytage at Constantinople. I can emphatically testify that it affords all the comforts of a home to sailors. Miss Green-Armytage is compelled by the migration of the shipping interests to the New Quay to seek other quarters, and as the work has been hitherto carried on mainly by herself and her personal friends, it has become absolutely necessary to excite more widespread interest.

The old place has been abundantly blessed, and I pray that the new may receive like manifestations of the Lord's approval.—Yours sincerely,

Liss, Hants. Henry D. Grant, Admiral.

THE ANTI-OPIUM CRUSADE.—Rev. A. W. Prautch continues to have successful anti-opium meetings in the Midland counties. He and Professor Thoumaian have addressed several joint meetings on the iniquities of Turkish rule in Armenia and British rule in India. At one of these meetings at Wolverhampton over one thousand persons were present; and a meeting in the Town Hall, Birmingham, was attended by over three thousand. Mr. Prautch created much feeling at these and other meetings by his revelations in connection with the proceedings of the Royal Commission on Opium. Mr. Prautch will shortly be returning to London to speak at some large meetings, and will be glad to receive offers of hospitality from friends of the cause.

IRISH NOTES.

The Presbyterians of Belfast, in order to meet the rapid growth of the city, have resolved to raise a fund of £20,000 towards the erection of ten new churches.

A notable figure has been removed from the religious life of Dublin in the person of Rev. H. M. Waddell, who lately passed away, aged ninety years. Deceased was a minister of the United Presbyterian Church, and formerly was a missionary in the West Indies. Since settling in Dublin he took a deep interest in the work carried on in the Christian Union Buildings.

The report presented to the annual meeting of the General Synod of the Irish Church, held in Dublin last week, was on the whole of an encouraging character. A determined effort was made in the Synod to stem the incoming tide of Ritualism. A motion disapproving of the setting up of a material cross anywhere in the chancels of churches was lost by 198 votes to 120, and a two days' discussion took place in reference to the forthcoming congress in Derry. The matter was settled, however, by Dr. Alexander, Bishop of Derry, promising to reconsider the list of speakers, and undertaking, in conjunction with a committee, to hold himself responsible for the persons invited to address the congress.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

A C.E. Society has been formed by the Bromley Primitive Methodists as a result of the recent successful mission.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour still grows, nearly 2500 British branches having now been enrolled, of which seventy are in Birmingham and District Union. In a few weeks' time the National Convention is to be held in the capital of the Midlands, when free hospitality is to be offered to the whole of the representatives, and as it is thought these will number 3,000 the resources of Birmingham liberality will be taxed. As the Town Hall will be too small for the meetings, the large Curzon Hall has also been secured, and in this way about 8,000 persons will be able to attend the public gatherings.

The first half-yearly meeting of the North London C.E. Union was held at Corbin Hall, Crouch End, on April 23, the chair being taken by Rev. Alfred Rowland. The secretary reported that ten societies had joined the Union since its formation in September last, making a total of twenty-five, two being junior. In addition three senior and two junior societies had recently been formed in this district. The aggregate membership (in December last) was 871 active, 241 associate, 101 honorary, total 1213. Brief reports were also given by the treasurer (Mr. R. Howe) and the pioneer and visiting committees. Addresses were given by Revs. W. Knight Chaplin and G. Hay Morgan.

At a recent meeting in Boston, Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., delivered an important address on "Christian Endeavour and its Relation to Higher Education." In the year 1880 there were 3594 students in the colleges of New England. That was one year prior to the advent of Christian Endeavour. Ten years later, in 1890, the number had grown to 5289. "More than one college president," said Dr. Clark, "has told me that this increase was due directly to the Christian Endeavour movement, and that tens of thousands of young men and women were seeking a higher education who can trace their first impulse for fuller knowledge to the Christian Endeavour meetings, the great conventions, or to some other form of the society's workings."

President Clark referred to the reproaches that are constantly being brought, that the young Endeavourers are not faithful in their attendance upon the regular services of the church. "I sent out," he said, "a few weeks ago, a list of questions to more than five hundred pastors and workers in different parts of the country, representing thirteen denominations." These questions were intended to discover whether the Endeavourers were active in other lines of church work than their own society, and whether they were faithful in their attendance upon the Sunday evening and mid-week services. More than five hundred replies have been received, representing Endeavour societies with perhaps, 30,000 members, and churches with 100,000 members. These show that the average attendance of the active members of the Christian Endeavour Society at the Sunday evening service is seventy-six per cent., and at the mid-week service fifty-seven per cent.

A PRESS PRAYER UNION, to associate in Christian interest persons connected with the Press, has been formed in London; and it is hoped that similar organisations for promoting the spiritual well-being of those who are engaged on the Press, will be formed in other large centres.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A temperance mission held in Watford has proved very successful.

The Hackney and East Middlesex Band of Hope Union held an industrial exhibition on Easter Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, which proved a great success.

Sir B. W. Richardson spoke well when, addressing last week the National Union of Teachers, he said:—"Most certainly when you are teaching the young you hold in your hand the key to temperance reform."

The official Moniteur of Brussels published last week a Royal warrant, nominating a commission to inquire into the ravages caused in Belgium by alcoholism, and to consider the proper measures to be taken to combat the evil.

At Desborough, in Northamptonshire, a Band of Hope was formed six years ago by friends from Kettering. The success was so marked that an adult society was formed. The two societies now number 1015 members, out of a population of 3000.

It having transpired that the temperance instruction laws passed in different States of America have not been enforced, a bill has now been introduced into the New York Legislature at Albany, which, if carried, will enforce by penalties the law passed in New York State in 1884.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler says that he made his maiden speech on temperance in 1842, at Glasgow. It was at one of Father Mathew's great meetings, where he was called out as the only American present. "Father Mathew," says Dr. Cuyler, "gave me his benediction and kissed me, which I have looked back upon as my ordination to the service of the temperance cause."

The Monmouthshire Band of Hope Union, which now embraces 115 Bands of Hope in different parts of the county of Monmouth, was held at Wesley Chapel, Newport, on Thursday afternoon. Mr. M. Mordey, president of the Union, was in the chair. The annual report showed that there had been an increase in the year of thirty-six societies affiliated to the Union, and that the number of members was now 12,161.

Mr. Froome Talfourd, now in his eighty-eighth year, states that from a record kept by him up till the year 1868 he found that not fewer than twenty personal friends and acquaintances had come to an untimely end through indulgence in strong drink. Of these five committed suicide, three were frozen to death when drunk, four were drowned while drunk, two died in delirium tremens, three who drank hard died young, and three who drank hard died at home. Mr. Talfourd sometimes recites these facts to friends who ask him why he is such a strong teetotaler.

Sir J. Hibbert maintains that the Local Veto bill is no more than an extension of local government in giving the people the management of their own affairs. The fact that 130 millions of money are spent in liquors in this country in a single year, and that the proportion per head is not diminishing, is ample justification, if justification is needed, for the introduction of such a bill. He quotes a series of figures showing the consumption of drink from 1861 to 1893. If the enormous amount of money spent in this way were otherwise distributed, he could not but think there would be fewer unemployed.

The City of London Total Abstainers' Union held a meeting last week, at 186, Aldersgate-street. Mr. W. W. Thompson presided, and there was a good attendance. The secretary (Mr. F. G. Toller) in his report stated that during the past year a considerable number of meetings had been held in various City warehouses, and much success had attended their efforts in presenting temperance truth. But there were still many firms to which the society was appealing for permission to arrange similar gatherings in their establishments. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., addressed the meeting, and said he knew no other organisation which did more solid or lasting work in the reformation of the people than had been done by that union. Mr. J. Y. Henderson and Mr. G. E. Power also addressed the meeting.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on a fortnight's mission in Falkirk from June 9 to 24, to be conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz, the converted Jewess.—For a devoted Christian worker in Spain, who is threatened with blindness, that, if the Lord will, she may recover the use of her eyes.—For a mission, by James Neech, at Argyle Mission, Leeds, from May 4 to 17.—For evangelistic services by Rev. A. J. Jones, in Duckford-road Chapel, from May 5 to 12.—For blessing on Gospel Temperance Missions by Mr. E. Tennyson Smith, at Bristol May 3 to 9; Leeds, May 18 to 20; Stockton-on-Tees, May 22 to 29.—PRAISE.—For help and much blessing from God during the open-air work, Lincoln fair.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. John H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced his summer Tent Mission at Maidstone, on Sunday.

Kingswinford.—A special mission, conducted by Mr. Milton Brown, has proved a grand success. A large number of adults and most of the teachers and scholars have fully decided for Christ.

Mr. A. A. Harmer lately conducted a mission with much blessing at Alfreton, in connection with the Y.P.S.C.E. On Saturday, May 4, he will commence a mission at Gipsy-road Baptist Chapel.

Ireland.—Gospel meetings have been held in Cookstown Methodist Church by Miss Wakefield; in Ballina, by Rev. John Good; and at Curlough, co. Tyrone, by Mr. Crawford.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have closed a seven days' mission at Newcastle Hill Mission Hall, Ramsgate. Much blessing has attended their labours. Christians have been helped, and unconverted ones have decided for Christ.

Irish Evangelisation Society.—Messrs. Platt and Crozier are holding a most successful mission at Broomhedge, Lisburn, in a large movable wooden hall, which is frequently filled to overflowing, numbers standing outside during the service. A large number have professed conversion, and the work still goes on.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has been holding special missions in Scotland. The gracious hand of the Lord has been manifest, sinners have been saved, whilst Christians have entered into fuller blessing. Mr. Coultas is now holding a mission in Portsmouth, and asks the prayers of the Lord's people for much blessing.

Mr. J. H. Fearnsides, of Batley, has during the past winter conducted evangelistic missions at Pudsey, Cleckheaton, Staincliffe, Leeds, Hanging Heaton, New Wortley, and Dewsbury with much manifest blessing at each place. Mr. Fearnsides also has a mission hall in his native town, connected with which are various agencies at work for the salvation of the people.

Hants.—Messrs. Baker and Partington, of Manchester, with their Gipsy Gospel waggon, have visited the neighbourhood of Furzley and Bramshaw, and conducted a mission in a tent erected for the purpose. Many were attracted night after night, and much blessing has rested upon the services. One encouraging feature was the large number of gipsies who attended the services.

Mr. J. H. Crawford, Irish Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in Curlough Orange Hall, County Tyrone. A very blessed work has been done; souls have been saved, backsliders restored, and believers greatly refreshed. Prior to this the evangelist conducted a four weeks' mission in Minterburn Presbyterian Church, which was also used of God to the ingathering of souls.

Bromley-by-Bow. — Gipsy Smith's Mission at Bruce-road Congregational Church, Bromley-by-Bow (Rev. Henry J. Weatherhead), was attended by signal blessing. Those who were seeking spiritual direction and a new life thronged the inquiry-room, and not a few decided to accept the salvation and service of Christ. The good work continues though the missioner has withdrawn; there are large accessions to the prayer meetings, whilst the inquiry-room has been found necessary at the ordinary services.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has just concluded a ten days' mission at Heckmondwike. His vigorous eloquence in dealing with sin was rewarded on the second Monday by the surrender of many to God. Some who had withstood other appeals could not resist the persuasive power of the story of his conversion. The special meetings for men, and another for women were very effective. On several occasions the chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the second week witnessed a large ingathering.

Mr. Clement Palser has been evangelising in Ottawa, the capital city of the Dominion, holding a fortnight's mission to men only, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., which has proved a season of great blessing. Many souls have been led to Christ. Others have been awakened, and we are looking for their conversion, and Christians are testifying to the stimulus and help they have received during the services. It stirred our hearts in one of the solemn after-meetings to see a score of men, young and old, rise and confess their desire to be saved.

F. J. FEDARB.

Bristol.—A revival of unusual power is going on in the Stapleton-road Congregational Church. The mission, which began Sunday, April 21, is being conducted by Rev. E. P. Telford. The building, which holds 1200 people, is packed to the doors nightly, and on Sunday last the overflow filled the large schools, and still many had to leave, unable to get into either place. Hundreds are coming into the inquiry-rooms seeking salvation. Large numbers of young men are deciding for Christ. There is joy in many homes. Prayer is asked that the last week of the mission may be even more glorious in results.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has held, in connection with a Christian Workers' Convention in Philadelphia, mass meetings for children. At one such, when 2000 were present, it became evident at the close of Mr. Hammond's address that many hearts had been touched. The young people, and some of all ages, were convicted of sin, and many were melted to tears. It was a meeting never to be forgotten. The next day, when the reports of the workers were given in, one gentleman who had attended Mr. Hammond's services in the island of Guernsey, stated that he never was in such a wonderful meeting as the one in the Temple the day before. One of the leading officers in the Philadelphia National Bank stated to a friend on the platform that he was converted when a boy in one of Mr. Hammond's meetings in Dr. Andrew Bonar's church in Glasgow.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the month of May. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers.—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, May 12-27, Aspenden, Buntingford; Rev. W. St. Hill, Bourne, May 10-14, Chipstead, Redhill; Rev. W. Bryan Brown, May 3-7, St. Andrew's, North Kensington; May 8, Christ Church, North Kensington; 11-20, Langley, Burrell; May 25 to June 3, Berden, near Bishops Stortford; Rev. Joseph Morris, M.D., May 19-27, Middleton, Saxmundham; Rev. James Stephens, April 26 to May 10, Six Mile Bottom, Little Wilbraham.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. T. L. Johnson, who has again been unwell, was able last week to hold an eight days' mission, and this week he is evangelising at Hassocks, near Brighton. His address at present is Lyndhurst, Wickham-road, Boscombe.

Dr. Robert Kerr, medical missionary from Rabat, Morocco, is on a brief visit to London. The disturbed condition of Morocco makes Christian work difficult, but Mrs. Kerr and helpers are bravely holding on. The mission will shortly be reinforced by more workers.

Mr. Richard Weaver has been helping his sons in Edinburgh, speaking on Sunday week in the Circus, and for the four following nights in a church close by. He was compelled, however, to give up, owing to weakness. His address is now Moss Bank, Alderley Edge, near Manchester.

General Booth, it will be learned with regret, is not in such good health as might be desired. He has never quite shaken off the effects of the influenza from which he suffered during his visit to America. The statement recently circulated that he is engaged on a book dealing with America, as his "Darkest England" dealt with this country, is incorrect. He does not contemplate a distinct "Darkest America" scheme, his plans being simply to systematise and extend the social work already being carried on in connection with the Salvation Army in America.

BIBLE CONFERENCES IN U.S.A.

DURING the past fourteen weeks I have visited fifteen cities and towns holding five days' conferences in each place. Dr. W. J. Erdman and Mrs. Needham accompanied me. We were assisted by many prominent pastors and Bible teachers. More than 140 lectures were given bearing on Inspiration, the Holy Spirit, the Atonement, Regeneration, Growth, Experience, and Prophecy. The spiritual results can only be known in the eternal day. Many preachers seem more determined to preach the Word. Other towns now await us. We hope to be in London in June, and at Keswick in July. One hundred pastors have petitioned me to hold a ten days' Bible Conference on your side in August.

GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

POLICE ORPHANAGE, REDHILL.—An interesting dedicatory meeting was recently held at the house purchased by a generous friend (Miss Bell, of Tooting), and given to the friends of the Provincial Police Orphanage in connection with the International Christian Police Association. The orphanage is still in need of furniture, household linen, garden seeds and plants, and provisions of all kind. Gifts would be thankfully acknowledged by the hon. sec., Miss C. Gurney, if addressed to the Provincial Police Orphanage, Red Hill, Surrey.

NEWRY, IRELAND.—The great need of a home being opened in this town for the large number of soldiers stationed there has lately forced itself on the inhabitants. They made an effort last November to meet it by taking a house on the Sugar House Quay, and fitting it up just before the arrival of the Cornwalls. That regiment have shown their appreciation by using it freely, every evening seeing it well filled. God has given evident blessing on it. The workers are frustrated in their efforts by the very limited funds in hand. Any contributions sent in to the superintendent will be thankfully acknowledged.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. G. SMITH, BRIMSCOMBE, GLOS.

THIS faithful servant of the Lord fell asleep in Jesus on April 26th, after a short but distressing illness. He had previously laboured at Abergavenny and other places, but for more than eleven years he has been pastor to the Mission Chapel, Brimscombe. Here his gentle, gracious spirit has been a power for good among all who knew him. His fresh and instructive ministry generally drew many to the chapel, so that it was crowded. The membership has been more than doubled, and many have been added to the churches who were converted under his ministry, while his wise and truly pastoral visits proved a blessing to many.

DR. S. R. WEBB, CONGO MISSION.

With profound sorrow we hear that there has been another death among the Baptist missionaries on the Congo. Telegraphic information was received at the Mission House last week to the effect that Dr. Sydney Roberts Webb had passed away. Very early, it seems to us painfully and mysteriously early, in his life-work he has been translated from the ranks of the toilers to the fellowship of those who have entered into their reward. Dr. Webb, the son of Mr. C. E. Webb, of Wildwood, Hampstead, was a young man of very bright promise. He was a fully qualified medical practitioner, having taken his degree at the University of Edinburgh. He left England for the Congo two years ago last January, and on arriving at Wathen he at once began medical work with characteristic ardour and devotion. In six months he knew enough of the language to be able to teach a class in the school, and in twelve months he could take his part in public preaching. In his first report he says, "It is only eleven months since we reached this station, but I think there is a great deal more that might be reported than is possible to set down when one attempts the task." "I am looking forward to being able to take a full share in the spiritual part of the work, for I wish always to remember that I am a medical missionary, missionary being always written large."

REV. DR. EARLE.

The death is announced of Rev. A. B. Earle, D.D. well known in America as a Baptist pastor and evangelist. He preached the Gospel for sixty-four years, and his endeavours were fruitful of great results. He was the author of "Bringing in Sheaves," a volume of addresses and a record of work; and of "The Work of an Evangelist, a Review of Fifty Years' Labour" (Morgan & Scott). Dr. Earle, who was a preacher of exceptional ability and power, died at Newton, Massachusetts. Writing on him in the New York Independent, Dr. Joseph Cook says:—"It was my great good fortune to meet him at Vergennes, Vt., in 1868. He was then in the full maturity of his powers, and I studied his methods, convictions, and atmosphere with the keenest attention. A good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, was my instantaneous verdict when I first heard this consecrated evangelist. No wildfire, but the true flame of the Holy Spirit, was my second assured conviction. A Biblical preacher; a bold, sensible, and defensible theology, a scriptural tone in every syllable, was the next point on which I felt at rest. Every sermon reins the impenitent hearer up to the duty of immediate self-surrender to God. The advice given to the religiously irresolute is such as they might die following, and not die unsaved. This was my next and supreme conclusion. All Dr. Earle's books I have delighted to study, and have never failed to find in them spiritual refreshment and invigoration."

PASTOR MARDEROS KALOSDYAN, known as the "Gemerek Pastor," who was some time ago thrown into prison, presumably because he was an active Christian, has, we are glad to learn, been released. Those friends in England who interested themselves in the pastor and his family will rejoice at this intelligence.

SHIRLEY CONVENTION.—A spirit of true unity is realised in connection with the Shirley Convention. The circular of invitation contains the names of the vicar, the Baptist minister, the Wesleyan minister, and representatives of other denominations of Christians. Preparatory sermons were preached on Monday night, April 22, in the parish church and in the Baptist chapel. The speakers on Tuesday morning were Revs. S. A. Selwyn, of Boscombe, and Geo. Wainwright, of Bournemouth. Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, took the Bible-reading on Tuesday afternoon, and spoke in the evening, and both morning and evening on Wednesday. His address on "God is Love" was very greatly enjoyed. The Bible-reading on Wednesday was given by Captain Riley, and on Thursday by Rev. H. Newton. Rev. J. J. Luce spoke on Wednesday evening and on Thursday morning. The meetings were full of blessing, and in the evenings the hall was crowded.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. S. B. Summer, of Burnley, has been appointed to St. John's, Bolton.

St. Matthew's, Fulham, a new church (vested in Evangelical trustees) was opened on Saturday.

During the absence of Rev. D. B. Hankin in America, Rev. George Everard is preaching in St. Jude's, Mildmay.

The Bishop of Marlborough, who is at present staying at Torquay, is far from strong, and is taking complete rest.

At the annual meetings of the Liverpool auxiliary of the C.E.Z.M. Society, an increase was reported in the annual contributions from Liverpool.

The Bishop of St. David's has offered the Archdeaconry of Brecon, vacant by the death of Ven. H. de Winton, to Canon Hay, Vicar of Brecon, by whom it has been accepted.

The Bishop of Liverpool set apart a number of godly laymen as licensed diocesan readers at a special service in the Cathedral on Tuesday week. Archdeacon Taylor was the preacher.

The new church of St. John, Barmouth, which has been built mainly through the generosity of Mrs. Perrins, of Plasmynach, Barmouth, was consecrated last week by the Bishop of Bangor.

By the will of Miss Mary Hodges, of Cullompton, several Evangelical societies will benefit largely. To the Bible Society she left £2000; C.M.S., £1000; Dr. Barnardo and Müller's Orphanage, £1000; C.E.Y.M.S. and Jews' Society, £500 each, besides £4000 to Exeter hospitals.

During a period of fifty-four years, extending from 1840 to October 31 last, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have augmented and endowed upwards of 5700 benefices by annual payments charged on the fund by capital sums expended in the provision of parsonage-house, etc., and by the annexation of lands, tithe rent-charges, etc.

Much regret is felt in the North Tyne district at the serious condition of Rev. G. R. Hall, vicar of Birtley, who has been for long in ill-health. Mr. Hall is an enthusiastic supporter of the C.M.S. and the C.E.T.S., and Bishop Hornby, when doing the duty there, expressed his amazement at what the parish did for missionary work.

The Record says: "Rev. H. Foster Pegg is to be heartily congratulated on the excellent work he and his assistants are carrying on at St. Matthew's, St. Leonards-on-Sea. We are informed that on Easter Day the communicants at St. Matthew's numbered 685, the largest number that have ever communicated in the church in one day, and that the total number of communicants during the year was 6200. The offertories for the year have amounted to £1005, being an increase of £165 over the previous year, while the amount collected for the various missionary societies was as follows:—C.M.S., £185; C.E.Z.M.S., £162; and C.P.A., £59. The services at the church are crowded, and at the men's services seats are unable to be found for all those that attend.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. H. J. Stanton has been recognised as pastor at Lapford.

New chapels are being erected at Tong Moor, Bolton; and Fakenham.

Rev. J. H. Jowett has been elected president of Durham and Northumberland Union.

Rev. W. Tubb, late of Camberwell New-road Church, has been recognised as pastor of Odiham, Hants.

Rev. R. Caven, of Charles-street Chapel, Leicester, under the advice of his medical man, is about to take a three months' rest in the Isle of Wight.

Mr. W. Williams, of Pontypridd, a deacon and secretary of Sardis Church, has been drowned by the capsizing of a boat while on a visit to his native place at Cenarth.

The year-book of Park Chapel, Camden Town, shows a membership of 411. The number of scholars in the Sunday-school is 728, of whom 185 are above fifteen years of age and forty-nine are in church fellowship.

Since Rev. J. Gwilym Jones has undertaken the pastorate of Penarth Church, the congregation has so increased as to render necessary the erection of a larger chapel. Towards the £2000 required £950 has already been subscribed.

Rev. Thomas Rhondda Williams, of the Greenfield Chapel, Bradford, has commenced a series of short services for business men, to be held on Thursday, the market day, in each week. The first was attended by about 150 persons.

Princes-street Sunday-schools, Norwich (Rev. Dr. Barrett), report 1600 scholars and 170 officers and teachers. In the home school eighty-six scholars are in church membership, and £100 was raised for foreign missions in the past year. The Band of Hope numbers over 600 members.

It is refreshing to find fellow workers of different denominations recognising one another. Such an instance was afforded, at Bacup on Good Friday; Rev. A. F. Bartlett, the Congregational minister, gave an address, by invitation of the vicar, Rev. J. Phillips, at the afternoon service in the parish church.

Buckland Church, Portsmouth, reports a membership of 595, of whom forty-four have been received during the past year. During the six and a-half years of the present pastorate 427 members have been added to the church. In the Sunday-school there are 1085 scholars and sixty-four teachers; 400 of the scholars are over fifteen years of age; of these 223 are members of the church.

A good deal of interest naturally gathers round the vacant pulpit of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, and Nonconformists generally will be anxious that the traditions of John Angell James and Dr. Robert W. Dale should be well maintained. Rev. Dr. Amory H. Bradford, a descendant of the New England Governor Bradford, has been asked to supply the pulpit for part of the summer. Dr. Bradford is pastor of a large church at Montclair, New Jersey, and one of the editors of The Outlook.

Calls.—Rev. J. W. Bowman, of Newcastle, to Hanover Chapel, Peckham (accepted); Mr. W. Ridley, of Pemberton-street, Sunderland, to South Eston; Mr. T. J. Barker, to St. Stephen's, Rochdale (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion); Rev. Caradog Jones, of Ruthen, to Oswestry.

Resignations.—Rev. H. E. Arkell, of Trinity, Dewsbury; Rev. A. A. Munns, of Maryborough, Victoria.

BAPTIST.

Rev. W. Smith has been recognised as pastor at Kirton-in-Lindsey.

A series of encouraging mission services has been conducted at Shipston-on-Stour.

A new chapel has been opened at Westward Ho, as the outcome of cottage services started in 1887.

Rev. J. T. Briscoe, formerly of Rye-lane, Peckham, has been recognised as pastor of City-road Church, Bristol.

The heavy debt of £4,000 which has rested on the Chapel, High-street, Saffron Walden, has been at length cleared off.

The recognition of the Rev. Frank Russell as pastor of the Sharon Hall, Liverpool, took place on April 16. Mr. Alderman R. Cory, J.P., of Cardiff, presided.

Rev. D. W. Roberts, of Warrington, has had to resign his pastorate through breaking down in health. Although he had only been a comparatively short time in the town he had done noble service in the temperance cause.

A meeting was held at Lake-road Chapel, Portsmouth, under the presidency of Rev. C. Joseph, to bid farewell to Rev. A. E. and Mrs. Scrivener, shortly leaving England to resume their work at Lukolela on the Congo river.

We regret to hear of the serious illness of Principal Roberts, of Regent's-park College, who on Monday week was suddenly taken with faintness, which rapidly passed into unconsciousness. It is feared that one side is paralysed.

A baptismal service in connection with Edwin-street Church, Nottingham, was conducted by the pastors at Broad-street Church on Wednesday, 24th ult., when, as a result of the recent mission, eleven men and twelve women were baptized.

An unhappy dispute at the Peckham Rye Tabernacle has led to its sale by auction, the purchasers being the "majority of the deacons and ten of the twelve trustees." It has been closed for a time. Pastor F. M. Smith and a large party are holding services in the public hall.

A systematic visitation of the common lodging-houses in South St. Pancras, Marylebone, and district is made by a mission band in connection with Regent's-park Chapel (Rev. E. G. Gange). At a supper recently given to 400 of the inmates, 100 signed the Temperance pledge.

Calls.—Mr. W. Holyoak, of Pastors' College, to Bromley Common (accepted); Rev. J. P. Newman, of Ibstock, to Mount Pleasant, Burnley; Rev. C. Pates, of Bilston, to Priory-street, York; Rev. W. Griffith, of Blackmill, to Gilfach Goch, Glam.; Rev. E. S. Hadler, of Thorpe-le-Soken, Essex, to Fivehead and Isle Abbotts, Somerset.

Resignations.—Rev. L. H. Colls, of Beccles; Rev. T. Gardiner, to Penzance.

METHODIST.

A new chapel has been opened at Rhyl.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has concluded a successful mission at Heckmondwike.

The missionary day-school at Santa Isabel, West Africa, remains still closed by the Spanish authorities.

It is computed that the total of the debts on Methodist churches in the United States amounts to £453,400.

Mr. J. Moremon, the blind evangelist, has held a series of successful special services at Lower Wortley, Leeds.

New chapels are being built at Pusey, Alderman's Green (Coventry), Meersbrook (Sheffield), Royston, Terriers, Sudbury, and Stoughton.

Revs. James Chamberlain, of Hinckley, and Walter T. Goodwin, of King's Lynn, have been ordained prior to their departure for missionary work in South Africa.

At Aliwal North, South Africa, a new church has been built, also one at Zastron. The whole of the joinery work has been done by the youths at the Mission Training Institution.

The South Australian Primitive Methodist Conference has voted emphatically in favour of Methodist Union on the basis agreed to by the Wesleyan and other Churches in the colony.

At the last meeting of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee the report showed an increase on the Home Missions for the year of 221. On the African Missions it is seventy-four.

Rev. Thomas Mitchell, of Hull, has just entered upon the office of General Book Steward of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, in succession to the Rev. J. B. Knapp, who has retired after five years' service.

Rev. G. Graves announces that the whole of the Free Methodist circuits in Manchester and Salford have united with Lever-street Hall, Manchester, to raise £1000 in aid of the Forward Movement at the hall.

The following have been elected presidents of the Wesleyan Methodist Conferences in Australia and New Zealand:—Victoria and Tasmania, Rev. W. H. Fitchett; New South Wales, Rev. J. E. Carruthers; Queensland, Rev. E. Youngman; South Australia, Rev. H. H. Teague; New Zealand, Rev. J. H. Simmonds.

What is likely to prove an historic meeting took place last week at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street. For the first time in Methodist history the representatives of the different branches of Methodism met to consider what practical methods could be devised for bringing these branches more closely together, with a view to concerted action. Rev. Walford Green was in the chair, and there were present representatives, with one exception, through an oversight, of all the Methodist bodies. After free, full, and prolonged discussion, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted. (1) That a representative committee be annually appointed on the following basis:—Sixteen Wesleyans, eight Primitive Methodists, six Free Methodists, four New Connexion Methodists, four Bible Christians, one Reform Union Methodist, and one Independent Methodist. (2) That in every locality where practicable a meeting of ministers and representatives of the Methodist Churches be held annually for devotion, fellowship, and counsel. (3) That, wherever practicable, a united Methodist love feast be held once a year. (4) That the committee expresses the belief and hope that the better understanding which now prevails between the different Methodist bodies will issue in the avoidance of the unnecessary multiplication of chapels.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new chapel is being erected at Rhyddings, Swansea.

Rev. John Williams, late of Brynciencyn, has been inducted to the pastorate at Prince's-road, Liverpool.

Islington Church, Liverpool, has had an accession of fifty-one new members during the year, the total being now 370.

Last year, in the purely labour centre of Festiniog, on the borders of Merionethshire, the collections among the Calvinistic Methodists amounted to £4000.

The Welsh churches of Liverpool, Birkenhead, Southport and the district held their sixteenth annual psalmody gathering in Hengler's Circus, Liverpool, on Monday night. About 5000 people were present, including a choir of about 1500 voices.

The European ordained missionaries of the English Presbyterian Church in the foreign field, principally China, number 18, with 21 lady and 10 medical missionaries. This is exclusive of native agents. Thirteen native pastors are supported by their own congregations, and the total number of communicants in China exceeds 4460.

The annual meeting of the Brockley congregation (Rev. H. M'Intosh) gave evidence of a prosperous year. Over 80 new members were admitted, the Christian association numbered 198, the Sunday-school increased, and other agencies were in vigorous operation. The large mission in the People's Hall, Deptford, had been vigorously sustained, the Gospel services and Saturday evenings for the people being more largely attended than ever.

Reports presented to the Synod show that the debt on church property amounts to £58,572. The sittings available are 154,486, of which, exclusive of free sittings, 61,707 are let. The office-bearers number 5298; members of Bible classes 9186; district visitors 2137; Sunday-school scholars 82,596 (against 80,018 in the previous year), with 7532 teachers. There have been eight deaths in the ministry during the year. The Young Men's Societies have a membership of 8838.

Calls.—Rev. J. Gilruth, of Dundee, to Markinch; Rev. R. Small, of Ecclefechan, to Bonnington, Edinburgh; Rev. Thomas Richards, of Llansamlet, to Hermon, Pontardawe; Rev. A. McConnell, to Portrush.

Resignations.—Rev. A. D. Watson, of Inch, Castle Kennedy; Rev. E. Kimmitt, of Clonakilty.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Bedlington, Canon Whitley, loved and respected throughout Durham and Northumberland as a devoted pastor.—At Sunderland, on 19th ult., Mrs. M. E. Wilkinson, aged 48, well known among the Friends.—At High Wycombe, on 22nd ult., Mrs. Knapp, wife of the well-known Primitive Methodist minister.—At Sunderland, Mr. John Kitts, aged 77, formerly the pastor of Enon Church.—At Crouch Hill, on 23rd ult., Mr. J. M. Bell, a leading Baptist, and one of the auditors of the Baptist Missionary Society.—At Ipswich, on 21st ult., Mr. Henry Clarke, aged 82, well known as an active worker and leader in Ipswich and Felixstowe.—At Maidenhead, Mr. E. Longhurst, suddenly while speaking at a meeting, a leader among the Baptists.—At Wolverhampton, Mr. Mark Tatlow, aged 75, an earnest worker.—At East Dereham, Rev. E. Lovell, aged 38, minister of Cowper Memorial Church.—At Bournemouth.—Rev. G. H. Elvidge, formerly minister of St. Paul's, Atterclife.—At Carrickfergus, Mr. David Gray, aged 68 years.—At Castleblaney, Rev. George Irvine, rector of Muckno, an earnest Christian worker.—At Lisburn, Rev. W. H. Macadam, vicar of Killaney.—At Borrisokane, Rev. Canon H. Massey, rector of Finnoe.—At Clonmore, Rev. W. J. Askins, rector of Dunany, Dunleer, aged 52 years.—At Maralin, Lurgan, Mr. Jno. Mathers, a sincere follower of Jesus Christ, aged 71 years.

ILLUSTRATED SPANISH GOSPELS.

We recently called attention to the beautifully-illustrated Gospel according to St. John, in the Spanish language, issued by the Scripture Gift Mission. Workers whose pleasure it has been to distribute copies send encouraging reports. Mr. H. S. Turrall, of Monforte, Lugo, says: "Certainly these Roman Catholic countries need the Word of God. The priests use every endeavour to keep it out of the hands of the people, but the attractiveness of an illustrated edition is likely to assist in its preservation." Rev. Dr. Moore, of Puerto Sta. Maria, Spain, writes: "As I superintend about ten day schools in which Scriptural education occupies a prominent place, and in which from 700 to 800 children are in daily attendance, you can understand what a field I have for free circulation. But even outside these, and through the agency of our converts, at some ten or twelve Gospel centres, I could place in judicious hands any number."

From the new world the report is the same. Mr. C. H. Bright, of Lima, Peru, says:—"I cannot put a limit on the quantity we could use. I am thankful for the thousand you are sending," Mr. F. Borton, of Mexico City, writes:—"The Roman Catholic Church is very wise in appealing to the sense of the people, who must see, hear, and feel their religion. Formerly, an illustrated New Testament was published here, under the sanction of the Romish Church, but it has been prohibited, because the people became enlightened by it. An illustrated, annotated, Spanish New Testament would be very welcome." Rev. W. D. Powell, of Toluca, Mexico, writes:—"Many have taken your Gospels for their illustrations, and have immediately read them quite through. Then they have come and begged for one of the other Gospels. Of the eleven million people in Mexico, ten million have never seen the Bible, but they have been taught to hate it as they hate no other book. When they have read a Gospel, they have a thirst for a Bible."

Mr. Walters informs us that for the sum of five guineas he can deliver to any part of the Continent or to Spanish America a thousand copies of John's Gospel in the attractive form issued by the Scripture Gift Mission, the headquarters of which are 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

MANCHESTER CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.—For some time past a strong desire has been felt by Christian brethren in and around Manchester, that a Convention should be held in the city, similar in character to that held annually in Keswick; and after much consultation and prayer it has been resolved, that such a Convention shall (D.V.) take place on May 28, 29, and 30, the place of meeting being the Free Trade Hall. Well-known brethren representing various sections of the Christian Church, whose teaching and whose testimony has been owned of God in many parts of the kingdom, have promised to attend. These include Revs. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, Evan H. Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, G. H. C. Macgregor, J. J. Luce, Charles Inwood, and C. G. Moore. The conveners are Prebendary Thos. M. Macdonald, Rev. W. H. Towers, and Mr. Leonard K. Shaw.

CONSUMPTION,

AND

ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-EIGHTH INTERVIEW,

With Mr. EDWARD DINSLEY, Pickering, Yorks, with reference to the case of his Wife.

"HOPELESS" CASE OF CONSUMPTION.

Which has not been published before.

Mr. Dinsley, a highly respected resident of Pickering, with whom I had a short chat recently, had a story to tell, which is of great importance to every person suffering from chest disease, and to those especially who, having derived no benefit from ordinary medical treatment, have given up hope, and regard their condition as incurable.

So terse and clear was Mr. Dinsley's recital that it was unnecessary for me to ask questions, and I simply give the history as he told it.

"My wife's illness may be dated," said Mr. Dinsley, "from her confinement in 1888. She did not seem to recover her strength. She was ill all the winter, under the care of a doctor here, who, however, did not think her chest was then affected. Early in 1889 he ordered her to Scarborough, and she went. She arrived there so exhausted that she could not walk upstairs, and very nearly the whole of the time she remained there she was confined to her room—for eleven weeks. She had medical advice, the doctor seeing her every day—sometimes more than once. She made no progress; indeed, her condition became very critical; so much so that, one Friday, the medical man told my relatives, with whom she was staying, that her case was hopeless. That statement was repeated to me by the doctor on the following Sunday, and in reply to my question he said nothing more could be done—she was in Consumption, and would not go home alive. I then decided to apply to Mr. Congreve, of whose treatment I had had some previous experience. At the end of the following week Mrs. Dinsley commenced taking the medicine, and, to put the matter briefly, in sixteen days was so much better that we were able to bring her home. She continued under treatment for a year and a half—during the latter part of that time not taking the medicine regularly, only when she required it. Gradually, but surely, she recovered; and ultimately she got quite well. To-day, as you see, she is in good health, and able to attend to business and to domestic matters. I ought to have said that after she returned to Pickering a doctor examined her; he said she had been suffering from Consumption, but the lungs were healing."

"I believe, Mr. Dinsley," I asked, "that other members of your family have also derived benefit from Mr. Congreve's medicines?"

"Yes. Two or three of the children have had bad coughs, and I have given it to them with wonderful effect. It does me more good than anything else when I get a cold."

Very willingly did Mr. Dinsley accord me permission to publish what he had told me, and then I bade good-day to himself and his wife, whose appearance is certainly, in itself, an eloquent testimony to the efficacy of Mr. Congreve's treatment.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. Notes and Comments.

THE attacks, direct and indirect, upon alcohol, of the defenders of opium, are curious and amusing. The sober Spectator follows The Times in minimising the vice of the East by assailing the vice of the West. Teetotallers may fill their common-place books with quotations from "unbiassed authorities." How comforting it is to read at last in The Spectator :—

We have no doubt in our minds that the teetotallers, though they have failed to convince the majority, have help to breed the opinion, now filtering down through every class, that excessive alcohol is both injurious and sinful. Excessive opium is precisely the same thing, though the English, misled by the spectacle of a few opium debauchees like Coleridge, or the opium smokers of the slums, overrate the temptation.

Teetotallers, being rebuked for exaggerating the evils of home-drinking, may take courage; they are right; yes, and the anti-opiumists will be declared some day also to be right.

Again and again cases of entrapping ignorant girls and leading them into houses of infamy come before the public; indignation is stirred; some action is taken against a bad man or worse woman; then the feeling dies down, but the evil goes on. The great railway stations in London and the steamboats that ply between England and the Continent are known to be infested with hunters of girls, and yet they are allowed to go on with their evil trade. For example, a young Frenchwoman, ignorant of our language, and at the end of her money, reaches Victoria Station, London, where she expects to be met by a messenger from the lady who has engaged her as a governess, but she is not met. Her distress attracts attention. A well-dressed lady comes forward and resolutely presses her offers of service upon her. A quiet hint from a railway official aids the girl's real friends. Then another well-dressed woman—also a harpy—comes to claim her. But both fail. The Sentinel pertinently asks—"Where does the responsibility lie—with directors and managers, or with their subordinates?"

Every moral movement has its times of depression and danger as well as its times of success. Mrs. Josephine Butler feels that the great cause which she has led for twenty-five years is in danger from the accession of members who do not really understand the principles which it represents. Some, in their zeal for purity, are ready to adopt methods which would only play into the hands of immoral men and women. Some, again, are only "regulationists" under a specious disguise, who fritter away the time and strength of anti-regulationists by submitting all sorts of plans for regulating a sin with which there can be no compromise. Mrs. Butler declares :—

We need an army of iconoclasts, destructive, uncompromising, fearless, in order to destroy this foulest of State idols. The minority of which I speak is composed of good, and true, and honourable people. I feel for them individually a tender respect, but I refuse to be held back by the fact that their education in this subject is only of yesterday compared with our own. We have lost time in futile efforts to win them by argument; I doubt if we shall ever win them in this way. Seeing that they are honest and honourable men, circumstances, the logic of facts, and experience, will probably teach them what we can never teach them by talk. We are all glad that they have come even a little way on the road with us; but for my own part I dare not, and will not, linger on that road in order to keep pace with their halting footsteps.

Mrs. Butler's trumpet call to her old friends is published in "A Letter of Earnest Appeal and Warning, etc.," which may be had at 1, King-street, Westminster, S.W., price 1d.

An esteemed correspondent of many years writes :—In looking over some old papers, notices of classes held in former years, I find the following: "No meeting to-day, because of the fast on account of the cattle plague" (Church of England). Since at that time there was a national acknowledgment of God in his chastisement, why have the people of this favoured land so deteriorated, that in this present time of distress no "calling upon God" is determined upon; nay, being rather repudiated by many?

Rev. Martin Anstey, M.A., of Leicester, writing in The British Weekly as a younger Congregational minister, and expressing, as he believes, the feelings of hundreds of younger pastors, thinks it is high time that modern Biblical critics should drop that tone of insufferable conceit with which they dispose of arguments for the truth and reliability, for instance, of the Book of Daniel, as "ingenious sophistries," born of "theological prejudice," over against their own claim to "scientific exactitude" and "love of truth." This manifesto by a young, thoughtful, and cultivated minister is a most hopeful sign.

Mr. Anstey declares that after having read much that has been written by such men as Wendt, Harnack, Driver, and Robertson Smith, he still retains his faith in the Bible as the very Word of God. Speaking for himself and many of the younger men, he says :—

We yield to no man in our love and esteem for such men as Dr. Horton, Dr. Denney, and Dr. Dale. But, for all that, we still believe the early chapters of Genesis to be a record of actual historic fact, and not a réchauffé of sacred myths. We heartily appreciate all the good work done by Canon Cheyne and George Adam Smith in the elucidation of the prophecies of Isaiah; but we still believe in the unity of his book. We have made a careful study of the reasons brought forward in favour of the allegorical interpretation of the Book of Jonah; but we find nothing in the story itself "too wonderful" for our faith. We have weighed with the utmost discrimination of which we are capable the arguments for dating the composition of the Book of Deuteronomy in what Professor Sanday calls "the pivot date of Hebrew literature," the year 621 B.C.; but we still retain our belief in the Mosaic authorship of the book.

Mr. Anstey's rebuke to the followers and apologists of German Biblical scholarship is well deserved. He says :—

We oppose scholarship with scholarship. And we claim the same respectful attention for our views as is now being given to those of Tom Paine—views which are now being furbished up by modern Biblical scholars, asserting contradictions in the Bible where they do not exist, the effect of which is to silence the authority with which the Voice of God speaks to us in Holy Writ, thus "making the Word of God of none effect" by their canons of criticism.

This letter reminds us of Dr. Stalker's appeal a few years ago, in the same paper. He did not see why every new notion from Germany should be accepted as ascertained truth.

One of the many misleading excuses advanced on behalf of those who, in "the eagerness and restlessness of the time," are induced to follow the chariot of Higher Criticism, is that "the Biblical scholars of Germany" and "the Hebrew scholars of this country" are in favour of "the scientific method." This bubble of exaggerated emphasis requires to be pricked. The position in question cannot be truthfully attributed to "the scholars"—only to some. Doubtless the some are obtrusive, and more in evidence than the many; but still there is a great host of scholars in England, America, and Germany who stand in "the old paths." To confine our survey, we look down the list of the Revisers of the Old Testament, many of whom are still living, and of their number, in England and America, a very few have developed into Higher Critics, and those have done comparatively little to advance Biblical learning. The position of the great Delitzsch, so misrepresented since his death, was thus expressed in 1887 :—

My attitude towards the Holy Scriptures is substantially another than that of Wellhausen and his English panegyrists. The questions regarding inspiration, revelation, miracles, and prophecy, are really one, and the answer to this one question separates men of the present into two camps. I am a supernaturalist; I do not profess "the religion of the age of Darwin." I believe the Easter message, and draw its consequences.

Germany appears to have found out a way of dealing with the land question, and its correlative, city population, which deserves our attention in England. Facilities are provided for large owners to sell their land, which is then cut up into small holdings, which are eagerly taken up by the peasants, whom the Government assist by loans secured by a terminable rent charge. Mr. H. W. Wolff describes the system and its effects in The Contemporary Review, and says :—

Under the magician's wand of the General Commission desolate plains are being converted into populous villages. The old worn-out order of things is giving place to a new. Communities of peasant proprietors, rich in houses and children and cattle, producing more plentifully and making agriculture once more remunerative, are springing up in unpeopled solitudes, which heretofore made their proprietors bankrupt; the tide of emigration is being stayed, population is once more on the increase.

No burden is thrown upon the State. Germany has disposed of the tramp, and turned him into a productive citizen; now she is turning the peasant into a landowner, filling the country with people, and keeping back the tide of the population from the cities. There is an end of much misery here.

The scale of personal and family living is very often a painful index to the scale of giving to good objects—much for self, little for God. Dr. Berry spoke none too strongly when he said,

When people can still keep their yachts on the water, and pay at least a million a year gate-money at football matches, it is nonsense to urge commercial depression as a reason for not giving to missionary societies. Even Christian people needed to be taught how to give. They could not get behind Christ's "marching orders" to go into all the world and preach the Gospel.

The ease with which some people can say "No" to the call of Christ which comes from the poor and the perishing, is something terrible to see.

"A Friend of Missions" calls, in The Christian World, for "a new kind of missionary meeting." He would like a meeting at which questions could be asked, such as—"Is there not a grave doubt in many minds whether the Eastern non-Christian world is as dark and hopeless as it has been understood to be?" Then again, he would like to know "whether the societies who work for the Jews are of opinion that if a Hebrew cannot accept our Christianity, and believe in Christ precisely as we do, he is utterly lost?" He would like to know whether the Gospel is preached to the Hindus and Japanese and Chinese in a right way, etc. Now we have to say, that this gentleman, who, of course, poses as a thoughtful man, should read a good deal more alone; he should ask his questions personally where they may be efficiently answered; and he may be quite sure that his new kind of missionary meeting would not be "wanted" long; it would soon kill itself.

I am constrained to say that neither my intellectual preference, nor my moral admiration, goes heartily with the Unitarian heroes, sects, or productions of any age. Ebionites, Arians, Socinians, all seem to contrast unfavourably with their opponents, and to exhibit a type of thought and character far less worthy, on the whole, of the true genius of Christianity. I am conscious that my deepest obligations, as a learner from others, are in almost every department to writers not of my own creed. In philosophy I have had to unlearn most of that I had imbibed from my early text-books, and the authors in chief favour with them. In Biblical interpretation, I derive from Calvin and Whitby the help that fails me in Crell and Belsham. In devotional literature and religious thought, I find nothing of ours that does not pale before Augustine, Taylor, and Pascal. And, in the poetry of the Church, it is the Latin or the German hymns, or the lines of Charles Wesley, or of Keble, that fasten on my memory and heart, and make all else seem poor and cold.

Such is the language of the venerable Dr. Martineau, the Nestor of Unitarianism. He testifies also that while at school he read some of the Evangelical books of that time, such as Wilberforce's and Mrs. Hannah More's, and that they had a most powerful hold upon him; they brought to his mind a sense of sin which was entirely fresh to him. Evangelical truth has seldom had a more impressive testimony to its value. We never know how far its influence may reach.

We are accustomed to speak of the sunny hours of childhood. That depends on where and how our childhood was passed. The most miserable portion of life, that which poisons and spoils all the rest, is too often childhood. The race for riches and honours has to be begun by many who are mere babes. Cramming and slaving are their earliest experience. We cannot, therefore, feel too grateful to those doctors who, like Dr. Blandford, in the last Lumleian Lecture delivered before the Royal College of Physicians, speak words of warning against "the long and wearisome toil" through which boys and girls are pressed. The demoralising effect of it is its most serious aspect; youth is robbed of its joyousness, and a feverish desire to outstrip others is enkindled; life is made a competition of one against another, instead of being a service of one for another. How to alter it? By creating a new public opinion. The strength of a nation is its manhood, but we are busy making weeds.

The Opium Commission Report.

The Blue Book containing the Report, or rather the Reports, of the Royal Commission on Opium was issued on Saturday last—about twelve months after it was originally expected. The length of the Majority Report (with its various "annexures"), and the ingenuity displayed in its composition, will partly explain this delay. It bears the strong impress of the successive secretaries of the Commission—two Anglo-Indian officials—by whom it was drafted, according to its last paragraph. It is safe to say that most unofficial readers of this Report will conclude that its keystone is the following sentence towards its close:—

The finances of India are not in a condition to bear the charges for compensation, the cost of the necessary preventive measures, and the loss of revenues which would result from the adoption of a policy of prohibition.

Perhaps nowhere is the ingenuity of the drafters of the Report more visible than in the endeavour to disparage the anti-opium evidence of Protestant missionaries. We read: "We have had occasion to note the inadequate experience on which the opinion of some of these witnesses is based." Of course the missionaries who gave evidence condemnatory of the traffic in opium included some who had not been many years in India, but it also included a large proportion who had spent from twenty to forty years in the country, in close contact with the people, like Dr. Thoburn, Dr. Colin Valentine, Thomas Evans, and Dr. J. L. Phillips. We also read in disparagement of missionary evidence: "We are bound to take notice of the circumstance that most of the missionary witnesses were total abstainers, and some were ardent workers in the cause." And, lastly, as a set-off against these Protestant and total abstinence witnesses, we read: "The marked abstention from advocacy of the measure [of opium prohibition] on the part of the Roman Catholic and Syrian Churches, the oldest and largest in the country, which contain over 70 per cent. of the Christians of India [!], has also to be taken into consideration."

The Minority Report, drawn up and signed by Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., is a much shorter document. Evidently, in his opinion, a missionary who is not a liquor drinker is not thereby under any disqualification as a witness. Of other witnesses, Mr. Wilson says:—

The anti-opium witnesses, who were natives of India, were, generally speaking, not equal to the pro-opiumists in wealth and social position, but were not on that account less able to represent the habits and opinions of the great mass of their fellow-countrymen. This class includes a majority of the native journalists, lawyers, teachers, and professors. . . . The pro-opiumists, on the other hand, represented the great majority of the official classes, both European and native, including military medical officers, together with many titled personages, landowners, and persons who considered that their financial interests were at stake.

From the evidence presented, Mr. Wilson concludes:—

(a) That the growth of the poppy and manufacture and sale of opium in British India should be prohibited, except for medical purposes. (b) Such prohibition should not be forcibly imposed on the Native States, but the example of the British Government should be supported by such influence as may legitimately be employed. . . . When the Chinese trade from British India has been brought to an end, as I hold it certainly should be, and when licences to cultivate are no longer granted, licences for the transit of opium through British territory [for export] may justly be withheld.

The reasonableness of this will be evident when we consider that the opium traffic to China is in reality a war policy, and we have no right to make ourselves accomplices therein. Appended to Mr. Wilson's Report is a Memorandum on the unfairness of the Government of India in presenting and withholding evidence with the object of supporting pro-opium views.

The net result of this Commission, although not so intended, can only be to strengthen the determination of the Christian public to uphold the Biblical standard of National Righteousness, and to persistently seek the overthrow of a traffic which is viewed with abhorrence by the Christian conscience throughout the world.

Sir Joseph W. Pease has addressed an able and emphatic letter to The Times on the Opium Report, which, we fancy, will take that journal rather aback, while it will hearten the opponents of the degrading traffic. He believes that the agitation will not rest until the facilities for procuring, using, and especially smoking this poisonous drug are further restricted, at any rate in British India. He puts the case precisely:—

It is the connection of the Indian Government with the China opium trade that has been the main subject of our animadversions, as it was of Lord Shaftesbury's. About 90 per cent. of all the opium manufactured in India goes to China or to the Straits Settlements. In these countries the opium is used almost entirely for smoking, against which habit the evidence as regards India is strong and conclusive. We know that in China the evidence against opium smoking is without contradiction; that it is a vicious, degrading, and sensual self-indulgence. We hold that in providing for this trade the Indian Government is directly raising revenue by following an immoral occupation.

Sir Joseph repudiates the Report as of any authority, because it was compiled by a Commission framed by the Indian Government. He stoutly stands by the moral side of the question, and says:—

There is necessarily but little mention of those enormous palaces of vice maintained in China and the Straits Settlements—some under our own flag—or of the effects of the drug consumed in China generally; and it is from these, and not from India, that the Indian Government draws 90 per cent. of its steadily decreasing opium revenue.

We are confident that England will not ultimately foster a trade of which this is true. Three millions a year cannot always stifle her conscience.

The reception given to the Opium Commission Report by the Press, so far as we have been able to see, is of such a kind as augurs well for the anti-opium agitation. The report will not act as a quietus; on the contrary, it will lead to further investigation into the way in which things are done in our Indian dependency. Much is good there, no doubt, especially when compared with the ways of native rulers, but much also is of a kind which will not bear investigation. Light will be thrown upon it all. Our national complicity with evil-doing, our very guilt in being the main perpetrators, will come more and more clearly into view. We await with a quiet mind the effect on the country, and through the country on Parliament.

We are glad to inform our readers that a public demonstration will be held in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, on Wednesday, May 22, at 7.30 p.m., specially to consider the Report of the Royal Commission. Mr. T. A. Denny will preside; among the speakers will be Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., and Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P.

PASTOR ARCHIBALD G. BROWN is again plunged in grief through the death of Mr. G. S. Woodward, of the China Inland Mission, Chefoo, husband of the pastor's missionary daughter, Nellie. Mr. Woodward went out to China in 1891. The news of his death is accompanied by the statement that Mrs. Woodward is very ill. We understand that Pastor Brown is contemplating a journey to China, if possible to see his daughter and bring her home.

THE UNVEILING.—18.

THE SIXTH TRUMPET.—THE SECOND WOE.

I.

We have already seen the souls of the martyred saints under the great brazen altar of burnt-offering in the outer court of the Tabernacle and the Temple (vi. 9). And we have seen that when the smoke of the incense with the prayers of the saints went up before God out of the Angel's hand, the Angel filled the censer with fire of the golden incense altar, and cast it into the earth, and there followed voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. Not that they cried for vengeance; but that all suffering, unrighteously and wantonly inflicted, is itself a cry for retribution and deliverance, to which a righteous government will certainly respond. The effectual fervency of that cry is indicated by the "one voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God." Jehovah said by Isaiah, "Let him take hold of my strength," and "Concerning the works of my hands command ye Me." And the Lord Jesus asked, "Shall not God avenge his own elect who cry day and night unto Him? I tell you He will avenge them speedily."

The First Woe showed how every sin punishes itself; the Second Woe consists in its judicial punishment at the hand of God. The First Woe afflicted Adam and Eve in the consciousness that they were naked; that they had lost their innocence, and gained the fatal knowledge of good and evil. The Second Woe is such as was inflicted when God drove them out of Paradise. But far more than this: every power in the universe is against the wicked. "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands upon thousands" (Psa. lxviii. 17, R.V.).

They fought from heaven.
The stars in their courses fought against Sisera.
The river Kishon swept them away,
That ancient river, the river Kishon.

The waters of the flood, and the fire from heaven which destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, are proofs of the judgments of God in this present world. These mystic horsemen under the sixth Trumpet seem like an amplification of the red and black and livid horses and their riders of the second, third, and fourth Seals.

"Loose the four angels which are bound at the great river Euphrates." Just as in ch. vii. the four winds held back from hurting the earth and sea, until God's time had come, were agents of the prince of the power of the air, but overruled by the Most High, so I think these four angels bound at the great river Euphrates, are evil angels prepared and permitted to fulfil the purposes of God, just as "the Assyrian was the rod of his anger, and the staff in their hand his indignation."

"The great river Euphrates is the symbolic limit which separates the Church from her enemies." "The name of the river is used symbolically, and the thoughts upon which the symbol rests may be traced without difficulty. The Euphrates was the boundary line of Israel on the north-east. When the covenant was first made with Abram, the promise of the Lord to the patriarch was, 'Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river the river Euphrates.' This promise was subsequently repeated, and in the days of David and Solomon it appears to have been fulfilled.

"The Euphrates thus formed the natural defence of God's chosen people against the terrible armies of Assyria. But for the same reason it became also, especially when swollen by floods, a fit emblem of the judgments of God upon Israel by means of Assyria and Babylon. Because Israel refused the waters of Shiloah that go softly, the Lord brought up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the King of Assyria and all his glory (Isa. viii. 5-8). To the prophets the Euphrates thus became the symbol of all that was most disastrous in the judgments of the Almighty, and in this sense, therefore, we are here to understand the mention of it" (Sp. Com., Prof. Milligan, and others).

The angels had been prepared unto the hour and day and month and year. That is unto the appointed hour of the appointed day and month and year. God never strikes until the sinner's iniquity is full. Then there is no delay. Thus it befel Nebuchadnezzar: "While the word was in the king's mouth there fell a voice from heaven, 'The kingdom is departed from thee.'...The same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar." So also upon Belshazzar: "In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain." (Dan. iv. v.) Thus also God judges nations: "In the fourth generation they shall come hither again, for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." "Fill ye up, then, the measure of your fathers, ye serpents, ye offspring of vipers: how can ye escape the judgment of Gehenna?" "In the latter time of their kingdom, when transgressors are come to the full," expresses a fundamental and unalterable principle of the government of God, "whether it be done unto a nation or unto a man, alike." (Gen. xv. 16; Matt. xxiii. 31, 32; Dan. viii. 23; Job xxxiv. 29.)

In some respects these mystic horses and their riders are like the locusts of the previous vision, while in other respects they differ from them. The locusts in Joel (i. 6) are strong and without number; so these horsemen are innumerable. "The vastness of the number shows that no literal army is intended (cf. xx. 8)." Their power to hurt was in their tails, like the scorpion sting of the locusts. But there is no deception about these, they had lions' heads; not lions' teeth beneath the human face and the woman's hair.

The riders' breastplates are not of cold, hard, impenetrable iron, but of fire and jacinth and brimstone; as also from the lion-mouths of the horses proceeded fire and smoke and brimstone; "that is, all the three elements of woe issue from the mouth of each horse of the whole host—a frightful substitute for foam." A similar symbolic form of expression is used by the Psalmist (xi. 6, R.V.): "Upon the wicked He shall rain snares; fire and brimstone and burning wind shall be the portion of their cup."

The Trumpets are to sound an alarm, not utterly to destroy. And, therefore, as under the first four, a third only of the elements were affected, so here, by these three plagues was the third part of men killed. "With forbearance and graduated severity, dealing out punishment in carefully-adjusted quantities, and at successive times, 'not suffering thy whole displeasure to arise,' 'correcting with judgment, not in anger.'" (See No. 10.)

Concerning the tails like serpents, having heads with which they hurt, Prof. Milligan says:—"Three characteristics of the tails are specially mentioned. First, they are like unto serpents, long, smooth, subtle, clasping their victim in an embrace from which he cannot escape. Secondly, they have heads at the extremity farthest from the body; where the power of an ordinary tail ceases these tails receive increased intensity of power, the glittering eye, the poison fang, Thirdly, with them, that is with the heads, they do hurt. The tail of a horse is for its own protection; these tails devastate. Yet they are not so fatal as the mouths. The former hurt, the latter kill."

The significance of this vision will be considered in the next paper. M.

MEDICAL MISSION IN DAMASCUS.

Medical mission work has been carried on for many years in Damascus by Dr. Mackinnon, of the "Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society," and as the blessing of God rested on the work, the need of a hospital was pressingly felt. But it required very careful and patient negotiating with the Turkish authorities to obtain a firman for a suitable site, and long and tedious legal proceedings have sorely tried the patience of those who daily saw the great need and were powerless to hasten the matter to the desired conclusion.

Now, after much perseverance and prayer, Dr. Mackinnon has been cheered by receiving from Government a good firman for the erection of his hospital, and the work of building has been begun. Not only will this hospital be an invaluable boon to the surrounding population, but from the Hauran and the great plains of the East patients will be sent, as already they have been sent, to be under the skill of the Christian doctor. Damascus has a population of 200,000, comprising representatives of more Eastern nationalities than any other city, and this fact should stir the Christian Church at home to strengthen all work that can reach with the Gospel message these fanatical races.

There is the more urgent need of zeal and activity, that in a few years Damascus in all probability will be opened to Western influence. Two lines of railway are in process of construction, one from Beyrout over the Lebanon ranges, and the other from Haifa by the Plain of Esdraelon and the east of Jordan. Will the readers of The Christian pray for those who, in the city of Naaman the Syrian, are like the little maid telling about the Lord God of Israel? O.

THE WILL OF GOD.

Deep in the centre of thy will
Is found the only safe retreat
For all who would thy plans fulfil,
And keep thy peace and power complete.
My soul bows down, my Lord, to Thee,
Trusting for all, from fear I'm free.

Thy will in all things I adore,
If sun or cross it send to me;
For Thou art faithful evermore,
My soul at home can always be;
Within the bounds thy love shall fix
No fear with perfect peace can mix.

Since in thy hands my all I place,
How can the world my lot disturb?
No second cause I have to face,
For Thou all hostile powers canst curb.
Thy perfect wisdom knows the best,
And, trusting Thee, I've perfect rest.

O keep my soul thus free to flow
Like water through thy blessèd hands;
My dearest plans for Thee t' o'erthrow,
In peace accepting thy commands;
From hour to hour given up to Thee,
From all reserves for ever free.

Content thy simple tool to be,
Almighty force can with me play;
To fight against all sin for Thee,
Use me as seems Thee good each day.
O precious Master, I am thine;
My only will the will Divine.

THE SOUTH LONDON EVANGELISTIC BAND celebrated its fourth anniversary on Tuesday, April 30, at the South London Tabernacle. Rev. E. Roberts, pastor of the Tabernacle, presided. The secretary stated that during the year the band had conducted eighty-two Gospel services in various mission halls and chapels in South London, beside a number of open-air and Gospel temperance meetings. Souls had been won for Christ, temperance pledges taken, and on Boxing-day a Christmas dinner provided for ninety poor people. Rev. E. Roberts, and Mr. Jefferies addressed the meeting, the programme also including solos and recitations by members of the band. Engagements are booked by the hon. sec. Mr. W. H. Wood, 9, High-street, Peckham, S.E.

Thanksgiving Meetings.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, ON MAY 1.

"Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me." This side of Christian life and testimony is not always remembered. The meetings arranged for at the Great Assembly Hall (kindly lent by Mr. Charrington as last year), were designed primarily to foster the spirit of thankfulness to God for his great mercies in bygone visitations of revival power in this land. The memories of the past are great incentives to faith and expectation for a renewal of such Divine working in the souls of men.

The opening meeting at 11 o'clock was very well attended; with a good sprinkling of veterans, and many more, of course, of the younger generation of workers.

In assuming the lead of the morning meeting Rev. F. B. Meyer read some notes of regret from friends who would gladly have been present if they could; among others from Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, of Reading, one of the conveners. Mr. Sutton wrote:—"As on the former occasion, so again to-morrow, I trust that many younger servants of the Lord will meet to call upon his name; and when they remember what they have seen and heard, and what their fathers have told them of the mighty works which God did in their days, in answer to the prayers of his people, they will be prepared for the needed Revival of 1895, should it be vouchsafed. The Revival of 1859 was not preceded or accompanied with preaching so much as with prayer and praise."

Some words of counsel followed from Mr. Meyer as to the conduct of the meeting, and how to make it profitable to the fullest extent. We want, he said, to have a bright, glad, happy gathering, and no brother or sister must monopolise the attention of the audience inordinately. Then followed a time of earnest, importunate prayer, mingled with much confession and thanksgiving. Those who led the aspirations of the assembly were Rev. R. Balgarnie, Mr. Charles Inglis, and Rev. W. Frith. Mr. Robert Scott having read from Acts the account of Pentecost, prayer was made by Rev. David Baron for a rich blessing on the Jewish people, and for the uplifting of the veil which yet covers their hearts as a nation, with respect to the Messiah and his kingdom.

Rev. W. Cuff then addressed some words to his fellow-believers. We have among us here, he said, a multiplicity of gifts and diversity of views, but we are all one in Christ. What a spectacle we must be to the angels of God, as we pledge ourselves anew to fidelity to God and devotion to his service. The Church of God is not a failure and the Gospel has not become effete. Look at China, India, the Congo, and the revivals that have come to England. We are not straitened in God; there is reserve power in Him to shake not only London but the world, were his Church ready. Much rubbish in the Church may have to be swept away before that time will come. The filling of the Holy Ghost was the preliminary in the early Church to great revival. The Divine order has not been changed. The Church meets, prays, moves the Divine heart and hand, so that the Holy Ghost comes down to move the Church, that she may go forth to move the ungodly world around. How different these early Christians must have been after their filling with the Spirit! So it would be now; some of us would hardly know one another. We can have this power if we dare to trust God for it; and then will come the revival for which we pray. When, like Elijah, we "do all these things at the word of the Lord," the power of God will descend. What need for it in this East-end of London with its unmentionable sin! There is no evil even here that cannot be lessened, if we hold to the old Gospel and invoke the Divine power. No social tinkering will be of any avail; there must be a thorough work of heart renewal by the power of the Spirit. Mr. Cuff followed his stirring words with equally earnest prayer for the present and immediate bestowal of the fire and the unction of the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

After a triumphant song, "Up from the grave He arose," Mr. J. G. McVicker read John xiv. 20, "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father and ye in Me and I in you." He said he was a child of the 1859 Revival. Before that he was "religious," but did not know the truth of this verse. Have we all learnt it as a matter of inward definite knowledge? Our future life is not our old life mended. It is the risen life of the Son of God Himself. That is what we learn from these words—our identification with Christ, that we may step boldly over, with bowed head but shining face, unto Him who has died and risen, and in whom all the Divine fulness dwells for us; and to say, Here I dwell, and here I live, that I may do God's work in the world and glorify his name.

Gipsy Smith here sang a song of the Gospel, and sang it not only with great vocal skill, but with a soulfulness and unction that imparted themselves to the hearers, who joined in the chorus. The song was, "Jesus is my Light and Sun." We give the opening stanza:—

Why should life a weary journey seem?
Why should I my cross a burden deem?
Jesus is my Light and Sun.
All my way is marked by love divine,
Round my cross the rays of glory shine.
Christ my Lord companion is of mine.
Jesus is my Light and Sun.

A telegram of Christian greeting from Mr. J. E. Mathieson, dated Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on behalf of the Second Advent Conference meeting there, was read by Mr. Meyer, at whose suggestion a reply message was despatched.

Five-minute speeches followed. First to be called on was Mr. James B. Wookey, who claimed thanksgiving for the beautiful Hall in which the company was assembled, both as a continuous centre of Gospel blessing all the year round, and as an evident testimony against the drink. A brief temperance appeal was based on this by the speaker, who also dwelt on the primary importance of work among children and young people.

As a Gospel veteran, and one of the 1859-60 workers, Captain Hawes recalled how the great theme of that wonderful time was the word of God, and the name of his Holy Child Jesus. We need to get back to these first things. Many of our human agencies and inventions may be good in their place, but they are powerless to do the work of God. The secret of all true holiness of life and of all true good works is Jesus Christ as our centre and as our all. We are not to feed on old manna and to look back to past experiences; we are to live in the present power of the indwelling Christ. Having begun in the Spirit, let us never attempt to go on or to end in the power of the flesh.

Mr. Meyer read out some requests sent in—for work among the educated classes in India; for Stundists, Armenians, and other persecuted Christians; for work in Seamen's Rests in the Mediterranean; for spiritual blessing on several relatives; for open-air work in Scotland; and also some requests for praise for individual blessing received. These petitions and thanksgivings were embodied in audible prayer by Rev. F. E. Heape.

Lord Radstock said that, as they had been praying for India, it was right that the friends should know what was taking place in India among the educated natives just a year ago when he was there. He quoted the words of a learned Brahmin, who admitted that the educated natives of that country believed in their hearts that Christianity is the true religion, though they may not at present have courage to confess it. We may look for great things in India. Lord Radstock went on to recall the work of Mr. Radcliffe in East London nearly forty years ago, which, though a small work at the time, was the seed of great things. Let us not despise the day of small things. What is needed to-day is perhaps the conversion of the disciples rather than the outsiders, that they may become as little children. If we want the power of the Holy Ghost for ourselves we shall not get it, though we have whole nights of prayer for it. The power is all in our Lord, as our great High Priest. It was poured out on his head, and we are but the skirts of his garments, so to speak. The anointing on Aaron was for his sons as well as for himself. Those priests who came after him were to be anointed "in his garments," so that you would have thought it was Aaron who was being blessed. So are we to be in Christ, hidden in Him; then the blessing must be ours. As Jesus took on Himself the form of a slave, and became obedient to the unjust death of the cross; therefore it was that the Father exalted Him. Let this mind be in us; and in identification with Him on the cross we shall also live with Him. If we suffer with Him (not for Him), we shall reign with Him. The glory of the Father will be manifested in Him through us.

The two hours of the morning assembly had now drawn near their close, and Mr. Meyer desired that the closing minutes should be devoted to soul-dealing with God, in order to being filled with the Holy Ghost. In the name of the company, he confessed failure, sins against the love of the brethren, and other things that hinder the blessing. Then he called on his fellow Christians for a yielding of the whole being to God for a fresh anointing of the Spirit. Having prayed for this enduement, he was followed in similar petition by Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, and Rev. W. Mottram, of South London. The venerable George Holland closed the deeply interesting engagements of the morning with the Benediction.

THE AFTERNOON MEETING

was presided over by the only Convener of the gatherings able to attend, Sir George Williams; it was one of the earliest public engagements he has filled since his return, much improved in health, from the Riviera. The opening song of praise was—

Great the joy when Christians meet,
Christian fellowship how sweet.

Prayer came next, led by Mr. W. H. Seagram (whose cry that the meetings might be followed by a revival of God's work all over the country was responded to in fervent "Amens") and Rev. D. M. Cameron. A portion of 1 Thessalonians i. was read by Mr. J. J. Sims.

After another song, the Chairman briefly opened the speaking. We are saved, he said, as our song has reminded us, that we might be the means of saving others. We do not want to be critics of one another; we are called to the love of the brethren and of the unsaved world. God condescends to use us, and He has put all the power that we need at our disposal. We thank our Father for the mercies of the past fifty years, and all the blessings that have come to us and our families through the salvation of Jesus Christ. God has been working in our midst during the past year, and we have to thank Him for providing the great missionary societies with the needed means to carry on their great work.

A short address followed from Pastor Fuller Gooch, who said that the circumstances of the time give cause both for sadness and gladness. The great evils that are working around us, the defections from truth in the churches, the prevailing worldliness, are reasons for mourning and lamentation. But the darkness of the times is but a herald of the coming dawn, when Jesus Christ shall appear and shall introduce a new order of things. Look, also, for themes of gladness and rejoicing, to the triumphs of the Gospel, not only in this East-end of London, but in America, in the New Hebrides, and in many other distant parts of the world. But the greatest joy of all is that Christ is ours, and if we realise that, we shall not be much inclined to hang our heads in sorrow. Ingratitude is a great hindrance to further blessing. We read in Psalm l. that "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me, and prepareth the way that I may show him the salvation of God" (R.V.). We long to see revival power again in our churches. There must be a breaking down before there can be a lifting up. Let us get low before God, and He will send us showers of blessing.

Much interest accompanied the brief address of Count Bernstorff, from Berlin, who was next called on by the chairman. He said he had very thankfully read the records of last year's Thanksgiving Meetings. That account showed him two things—that revival work is a real and lasting thing, and that further blessing may be looked for. As to the condition of Germany, there is much to sadden. Many are denying God, and the universities are the seat of much of what is called the Higher Criticism. But there are many small companies of believers. Germany has not yet had a great revival, but we are looking for it. God is showing not a few solid individual conversions in different parts of the empire. The general standard of religious life, too, is being raised among believers. There are little companies of Christians meeting for prayer that God would revive his work in our midst. This is something new in Germany, and it is a hopeful sign that the Lord means to make bare his arm. In later years we have had many earnest evangelists, but our hope is in God alone, and we will continue to pray that He may give us greater manifestations of his power.

At the suggestion of the chairman, a season of silent prayer followed, that God would send times of refreshing on Germany, France, and the other Continental nations. Sir George remarked that Christians know no nationality, and we pray that Germany and France may be closely knit together in loving bonds through the Christians of both countries.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin read the messages from absent brethren—Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Pastor Frank

White, Dr. Barnardo, and Miss Macpherson. We may give the telegram sent by Mr. Radcliffe :—"Sorely concerned not to join in your gathering to-day. My heart is with you. May your united prayers be heard, and may every living soul go forth from the Great Assembly Hall at the close of the day to speak the Word of God with boldness all over London. And may their example spread far and wide all over the world, as everyone went forth at the conclusion of the prayer-meeting at Jerusalem. For every believer is the salt, and Jesus says, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'"

Mr. KERWIN also presented additional requests for praise and prayer for individual blessing, on mission work, for the Madagascar Christians, etc. Lord RADSTOCK asked special prayer for the 300 millions of our fellow-subjects in India who are in spiritual darkness, that they may receive light from God. In his petitions that followed he besought the Lord on behalf of the many in India who bear the name of Christ, but who bring reproach on that name by their ungodly lives. Mr. W. M. OATTS, of Glasgow, also made mention, in prayer, of God's past mercies, and entreated God's present blessing on the tried brethren who were unable to be at the meeting, and who had been greatly owned of God in the evangelistic labours of bygone days.

My heart is fixed, eternal God,
Fixed on Thee.
And my immortal choice is made,
Christ for me,

was then sung, the chairman remarking that Mr. Richard Weaver ought to be there to sing it, as it is one of his favourite songs.

Some words of exhortation came from Mr. CHARLES INGLIS on the importance of praise. Referring to the vow of the Nazarite, he said there are many Christians who would not touch wine who are everlastingly coming out with their vinegar. One cause for ceaseless praise was found by the speaker in the wonderful contrast between the amount of mission effort in London and elsewhere thirty-five years ago and the state of things to-day. His experience was that never were people more willing to listen to the Gospel message than now. Let us expect and look for great blessing in the near future.

A veteran evangelist, Rev. R. BALGARNIE, was the next to speak. He remembered 1859, for in the place where he ministered for thirty-six years signs and wonders were wrought. It was not a movement from man, but from God. Men seemed to be lost sight of, and their mouths were opened to testify for Christ. The people were also willing to hear. A passing remark to one standing resting by a wall, "Better have a burden on the back than a burden on the conscience," was the simple means of awakening him, and he became an earnest worker. But we cannot live on past visitations; God's blessings are for present use, like the manna of old. In coming together thus to thank God to-day we may expect greater things. But it cannot be done by human eloquence, or by the votes of the majority. It is "by my Spirit, saith the Lord." We do not pray for the Spirit to come down, but to come in, that all hindrances may be swept away, and the power of God possess us. The political world, the scientific and the business worlds, are wide awake. Shall the Church of God be asleep? If so, the blood of the shipwrecked souls will be on her head. Let us not only conserve the truth, but go into the enemy's territory and make conquests for God. The Church is never asleep in the days of persecution, and it may be God will have to send a time of trial. "Awake, O Zion, and put on thy beautiful garments." Shall the Church of God put her garments in the wardrobe? Let the garments of praise be put on by the sons and daughters of God. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain." Let us put on the garments of a consecrated life, and God will appear on our behalf. We must plead for it, and wait for it, and expect it. Let us go hence to witness for Christ, and never think of going to sleep in our Master's service. The devil is wide awake to destroy; let Zion be wide awake to save. The fervid utterances of this aged brother fairly enthused the meeting, and the responses came freely, as if it were a love-feast. It seemed a very appropriate pendant to his rousing words that the meeting should sing with heart and voice :—

Tell it out among the nations
That the Lord is King,

Major LIEBENROOD thanked God he was converted in a barrack-room. In all parts of the world now there are Christian officers, and soldiers, and sailors. A missionary society exists in the Army, and the members, by denying themselves of beer and tobacco, are sustaining a missionary in China. This work among soldiers is the direct outcome of prayer. A neglected part of the Gospel to-day, he considered, was the truth relating to the Second Advent. To use a soldier's illustration, the Church has "piled arms" and is "standing to," waiting for the coming of the King, for the shout of the descending Lord. He had always found that this part of the Gospel is powerful in bringing joy to the hearts of the people.

Another ex-soldier, but in the ranks of the privates, Mr. W. R. LANE, said he did not remember the days of 1859, but he thanked God for the experiences and opportunities of this day in which we live. At the time of his conversion, while in the Guards in 1872, quite a little squad of converts were brought out on the side of Jesus Christ. He recalled some of his early experiences in the East End in a tent before the Great Assembly Hall was built. It was then that he was taught to speak for the Master, and he looked back on them with joy and thanksgiving. An old writer, Thomas Watson, said he found it very hard to make sinners sad, and to make saints glad. So it is often with us. If the Lord will put more gladness into our hearts then we shall go forth to communicate that gladness to others.

After a hymn some concluding words were spoken by Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON. He said he was not able, owing to illness, to be present at last year's "annual gathering." He would not now speak of the work carried on in the Hall, but would leave to them to imagine how night after night the Hall was open for Gospel work, and souls were continually being saved. He was glad at these thanksgiving meetings to welcome friends and workers from other places. As to the hindrances in present-day work, he said he looked upon strong drink as the most terrible of them all, and gave a recent very startling instance of its degrading power. Mr. Charrington then led in earnest prayer, and the inspiring proceedings of the afternoon were brought to a close with the benediction.

THE EVENING MEETING

proved a most inspiring gathering, as the vast Hall was filled to its topmost gallery, and the spirit and tone (even before a word had been spoken) impressed one as that of men and women who had come from their knees expecting blessing from God.

After praise and prayer by Messrs. Edward Trotter and T. M. Wintle, came the singing of the hymn—

Jesus, the Name to sinners dear;
The Name to sinners given.

Mr. G. E. MORGAN, who presided, explained that the definite object of the evening gathering was to awaken in the hearts of the younger generation a determination to assume the burdens of Christian work which their elders were perforce laying down. Great spiritual treasures had been cast up on the sands of time by the great revival wave, and their fathers were not slow to appropriate them. The children will be wise to enrich themselves in turn from the same boundless store of the grace of God. It was noteworthy that the revival had been pre-eminently the work of God rather than man, the few human names which stand in honourable prominence being associated rather with subsequent activities than with the revival itself. Christian workers have no right to steal fuel from the altar of God's love and burn it on the hearth of self-glory and pride.

In the story of Jehoram and Jehoshaphat (2 Kings iii. 13-20) the alliance of a child of God with an idolatrous king led to trouble; they wanted water. The prophet commands, "Make this valley full of ditches." Sometimes the shorter way to victory is to lay down the sword for awhile and take to the spade, to cast up the rubbish, to prepare for the flow of blessing. Thus comes the strength with which the better to wield the sword.

Of the average human life about one-third is "vanity" (Eccl. xi. 10); a like amount is spent in sleep; of the rest, a large proportion is dead in trespasses and sins, or buried in the cares of the world. What is left for God? Shall we not strive to win souls for Him? Workers in great cities must be either pessimists or enthusiasts—must either confess the battle is too strong or plunge into it in the strength that God supplieth. People are afraid of enthusiasm. "Keep cool," they say, and spiritual life may freeze. Speaking of the cold in Tibet, Miss Annie Taylor once said, "It is not the freezing but the thawing that hurts." It is easy to grow cold in the divine life, and when the Holy Spirit begins to work the process is a painful one; but the result will more than recompense for all that is endured. Without this no revival can come.

Rev. J. E. WAKERLEY rejoiced in the presence of so many young people, showing that Christianity is not dying out. God is raising, in his own way, a true apostolic succession to carry on his work. Believing that Christ has redeemed men, we long to be his instruments in leading them to acknowledge Him. Nor are we pessimists. We are hopeful for the future, so long as we are true to the faith of our fathers, the Gospel of Pentecost, the Gospel of the Reformation, the Gospel of John Wesley and Whitfield, the Gospel which is adapted to the needs of this great city. There is much in this vast whirlpool of sin and evil to discourage us; but we remember our Gospel has power to save, that it is not merely for the respectable, but goes down into the depths. Nowhere can such crowds be brought together to hear the Gospel, when preached by a man on fire with it, as in this great London, with all its sin and despair. Talk of scepticism—I come from the headquarters of it—and I tell you that, as a force, it is dead. Jesus is the only living power to-day. But in declaring Him we want enthusiasm for the best of all Masters. He is calling us; men need us; this London needs us. Who will consecrate themselves this day to his service?

Mr. FRANK ANDERSON spoke of the Student Volunteer Missionary Movement, as well as the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union. The vast body of students deserve attention, because they are the men of the coming day; because in college they are open to impression; because there are special facilities for reaching them there; and because they have not yet chosen their life-work, and may be influenced to yield it to God. The speaker showed that the grand elements on our side, in bringing about revival, are personal holiness, personal dealing, and personal surrender. That day being the anniversary of Dr. Livingstone's death, he closed by recalling the last entry in his diary :—

"My Jesus, my King, my Life, my All, I here dedicate my whole self to Thee. Accept me, O gracious Father, and grant that I may finish the work Thou hast given me to do. In Jesus' name I ask it. Amen."

The following note was read from Mr. R. C. MORGAN, whose absence was generally regretted :—"I am so sorry to be absent from the Thanksgiving Meeting. I trust it will be also and very definitely a Promise Meeting. Nothing glorifies God more than trusting Him to fulfil his exceeding great and precious promises. 'Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it.' He will give his servants every piece of the whole armour of God, and fully equip them for every service to which He calls them. I shall be with you in spirit all day, and especially for the young men in the evening. 1 Kings xx. 13, 14."

The passage referred to by Mr. Morgan having been read, a number of requests for prayer were laid before the meeting, and presented in audible prayer by Messrs. F. N. Charrington and Toppen, representing the Christian Endeavour movement.

Gipsy SMITH then sang a solo—

When the trumpet of the Lord shall sound,
And time shall be no more.

The refrain was heartily taken up by the audience—

When the roll is called up yonder
I'll be there.

Mr. Smith followed with a few words of testimony. He did not see the revivals of 1859—he was not born then—but he had seen Jesus. He was born again in 1876 in a smoky hutch in the New Forest, and he had been living in a perpetual revival ever since. God is as willing to bless as ever He was, if only we lay hold of Him.

Mr. THOMAS RICHARDSON, of Rotherhithe, told how he was born to God in Mr. Moody's meetings in the Bow-road Hall, in 1876, and God has used him ever since, just as He is willing to use any young man who will yield to Him. The East End, as he well knew, is needy enough, but over the water where he had been called, seems quite as needy. There God is pouring out blessing—a revival all the time. Crowds every Sunday—no clap-trap, only the simple Gospel, but they come, and many are broken down and led to God. Passing on, Mr. Richardson brought some pointed lessons from the story in 2 Kings iv., of the raising of the Shunammite's child. The servant, the rod, the dry stick availed not, but when the prophet came, calling upon his God, and coming into close contact with the child, then it lived. So must we come into touch with dead souls. When men full of Holy Ghost power give themselves thus to the work, God will bless. May He increase our earnestness, and teach us to witness for Him in our business hours and in our spare hours. God has a great work for us to do, may He fill us with power to do it.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., spoke of the believer as the temple of God, formed by Him to show forth his praise. Are we showing it forth? Has God become to us a reality, an inspiration? Has Jesus Christ become to us more than a mere name—a friend, a Saviour? Has the Holy Ghost become more than a mere idea or influence? Has He taken up his abode in us? If not, God will be lamenting over us as He had to lament over his rebellious, ungrateful, unconsecrated people of old. The curse of thousands is superficiality: a mere veneer of religion and nothing more. God wants the heart, the life, the all. A hundred men and women so yielded, so living in the power of the Spirit, so filled with the savour of Christ that others seeing them would say, "There is a Christian," would shake London. To many, alas, the Church is like a pond with a number of great weeds labelled "orthodox," and the preacher like a frog croaking on the bank. We want freedom, full flowing in connection with the river of God. The Father is with us, the Son is with us, the Holy Spirit is in us; thus we have the real presence, and the blessing must come down. Sometimes we cry, and seem to get no answer; yet after all we discover that these unanswered prayers have been richest of all in blessing. Mr. Rainsford closed with a pointed word to the unsaved in the familiar and happy style of his revered father.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, said that he felt like singing an old Scotch Psalm—

The Lord of us hath mindful been,
And He will bless us still,
He'll bless the house of Israel,
Bless Aaron's house He will.

God has blessed us in the past, and I take it that these great meetings are an earnest of what He is about to do for us. There is an old story, in 2 Sam. iii., which may be helpful to many here. We find that Abner, a very politic man, when he saw the house of David waxing stronger, and the house of Saul waxing weaker, resolved to cast in his lot with David; so he went among the heads of the tribes to induce them to come together to make David king. Now, I want to be as an Abner to some here, to ask you to crown Jesus King of your lives. He is King and Lord of all, mind that; but is He so in your lives? We have been reminded this evening of those 232 young men by whom God wrought a great deliverance (1 Kings xx. 13, 14). That is how this work will be done—by every man and woman determining that, God helping, they will do their part and take full advantage of every opportunity of winning souls. Think what it would mean if each of the 2000 Christian workers present made up their minds to win one soul a month—some of us seek one a day—one soul a month for Jesus! How long would it take to convert London? Just one year, and London would be at the feet of Christ.

I do not know if that be God's will or not; but I do say we ought to do our part to bring it about. There is a joy in winning souls some of you know not, and it is a joy we can never taste in glory. It belongs only to this present life. But there is something hinders—what is it? Away with it; have done with it. I ask myself and I ask you, Are you willing to let anything and everything go that God may bless you and use you? When you are, He will come in, and fill you and use you as He has never yet done.

At this point, with bowed heads and great impressiveness, the vast audience sang:—

Spirit of purity and grace,
Our weakness pitying see;
Oh, make our hearts thy dwelling-place,
And meet for Thee.

Dr. Harry Guinness: Is it possible that, as the last speaker has said, there can be any young Christian ignorant of the luxury of seeing souls led to Christ? I have regretted many things in my life, but never any pains taken to win a soul. When, as a boy, I was used in Mr. Moody's Hall in Bow-road to win two souls, I felt as if my heart would burst for joy. Young man, have you tasted that joy? If not, why not? How often have golden opportunities come in your way? You have missed them, and the loss is yours. I never forget how a devoted missionary on the Congo, Henry Richards—now gone home—laboured and laboured hard for seven years without evident result. At length, his wife was taken from him, and in his sorrow he turned afresh to God, and found on his knees that he had never been filled with the Holy Spirit. So he gave up work for a time, and sought God, as some of us would do well to do. Before a week God removed every difficulty, baptized him with the Holy Ghost, and sent him back to his post, with the result that within three weeks more than a thousand people came begging to be told how to be saved, and hundreds were brought into the Kingdom, so that he scarcely had time to eat for pointing the people to Christ.

I believe we are in the last days of this dispensation; that Christ Himself will soon be here; and I am looking for a revival eclipsing that of '59 and '60; but I want to be ready for it, and, if the Lord will, to help to bring it about. I believe it is coming through individual work. This grand meeting will be grander yet if to-morrow we each of us seek to bring one soul to Christ. London needs it; England needs it; this world needs it. Alas! the people are going over wholesale to ritualism and rationalism. It is not enough to be orthodox; we must be inspired, filled with the Holy Ghost, on fire with love, enthusiasm, and ardour. Is it so with you? Are you filled with the Holy Ghost? Do not say it is irreverent to ask such a question; because we have been commanded to be filled with the Spirit of God. Are you? If not, why not? What hinders? Find out; let the Spirit of God search you. Whatever it be, get rid of it, that God may fill you and use you in the salvation of men. Remember—

Time is earnest, passing by;
Death is earnest, drawing nigh;
Sinner, wilt thou trifling be?
Time and death appeal to thee.

In the concluding moments of the meeting, as all bent in prayer, those who wished to consecrate themselves anew to the Lord, to give themselves to his service, were asked to raise their hands, and quite a forest of hands seemed to go up. All will pray that much glory may be brought to the name of the Lord through this fresh consecration to his service.

Dear Sir,—We had a blessed meeting on May 1 in union with your large thanksgiving gatherings in London. Praise for his precious promises proved and yet in prospect was the special theme, but out of full hearts He was exalted in whom is the yea and the amen.—Yours in Him,

Duncan Davidson.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Dr. Barnardo, who has, we regret to say, been of late in very poor health, has recently had to conduct meetings long arranged for at Torquay. These were most successful, largely attended, and very enthusiastic in their character. Over one, held on Friday afternoon, April 26, in the Bath Saloons, Torquay, to a crowded audience representing almost every class of Christian feeling and interest in Torquay and its neighbourhood, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Hellmuth presided, and when speaking from the chair said:—

"It needs no words of mine to commend to you this noble, philanthropic, and Christlike work, which for so many years has been carried on and is still being carried on by Dr. Barnardo. Not only are the waifs and strays who come under his care rescued from a fearful future, but they are trained for usefulness in life, and many of them no doubt are, as many more will become, blessed instruments in God's hands to lead others to the true knowledge in which they have been so faithfully instructed. In the words of St. Paul, one may say of this great Christlike undertaking that it is a 'work of faith and a labour of love.' I may further say that this great and blessed work has become a living proclamation of the power and faithfulness of God, not only in Great Britain, but throughout Her Majesty's vast dominions, and it has become a praise and a sound in all the Churches of Christendom. I look upon it as a great marvel. There are now nearly 5000 souls within the various institutions, which are carried on in the faith that by prayer and confidence in God the wants of the little ones will ever be abundantly supplied. We must remember, however, that God works through instruments, and we must all endeavour to help Dr. Barnardo. I have myself seen the results of his work among the children he has sent out to Canada, and I believe it is no exaggeration to say that nearly ninety-nine out of every hundred turn out well."

CONFERENCE OF EVANGELISTS.

The happy idea suggested itself some months ago to several friends in London, of having a fraternal conference of working evangelists. Steps were taken to give shape to the project, and conference meetings were fixed for Thursday last, May 2, at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, in Aldersgate-street. A very hearty response was made to the invitation published, and a band of some 150 brethren, with a few sisters, gathered on the occasion. The programme for the day was not a cut-and-dried one, but the proceedings throughout were felt to be of a most practical and helpful kind; so much so, that the proposal made at the close of the day to repeat the experiment in a few months' time was cordially agreed to. The advantages of such a conference are obvious, and were referred to by various speakers during the day. The spirit of brotherhood among those engaged in the same sacred work is fostered. The interchange of ideas and experiences relating to that work was felt to be of signal service in giving renewed encouragement to the workers, and in creating bonds of sympathy between them. The social and Christian intercourse that accompanies such gatherings is also a blessed agency towards enlargement of sympathy for others, and a means of strength in the assurance that the circle of mutual Christian friendship and united prayer has been widened. The generous hospitality shown to the assembled evangelists by the conveners was much appreciated; as were also the services of Mr. J. B. Wookey, Secretary, in arranging the meetings.

The services of the day were three—morning, afternoon, and evening. At the morning meeting Mr. M. H. Hodder presided (in the absence of Mr. R. C. Morgan through indisposition), and welcomed the visitors in his customary genial and gracious fashion. The first item on the programme was a short paper prepared and read by Mr. W. R. Lane, on "The Gift, Character, and Work of the Evangelist." It was so rich in practical suggestion, felicitously expressed, that we purpose giving it as a separate article in our next issue. All workers for God, whether in the purely evangelistic field or not, will find profit in a prayerful perusal of it.

At the close of Mr. Lane's paper, there was a season of prayer, silent and vocal, that God would write the lessons of the address on the hearts of all. Then Gipsy Smith, seated at the organ, gave an earnest exhortation in sweet expressive song, to "Do something for Jesus to-day."

In the discussion that ensued, Mr. Baker emphasised the need of closet prayer. Mr. W. M. Oatts said there were great temptations surrounding the position of a busy evangelist. He does not always have proper opportunities for private communion, by reason of the exigencies of his work and the hospitable desires of those friends who entertain him. Workers ought to be very careful about their personal habits, which are keenly watched by those about them. Here Mr. Oatts put in a strong and well-applauded plea for habits of total abstinence from strong drink and tobacco.

Mr. W. Forbes thought more might be done in speaking to individuals about salvation during the many intervals of travelling. Mr. J. J. Sims said that Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, laid great stress on his own personal behaviour, by the grace of God, as an agent in building up the assemblies of the saints. Remembering that the promptings of the old nature are still with us, we must ever strive to bear ourselves so that we may be accepted of God. Paul's aim also was to put himself on a level with those to whom he was preaching, that he might be all things to all men. Mr. J. E. Taylor, of Aylesbury, said that many evangelists were ready to go to big fields of service, who were disinclined to go to small, obscure places. We must be like Philip, ready to leave the busy revival work in the town to go to the desert place to speak to one person. Mr. Wm. Noble said that as to getting new material, if we study our Bible well and constantly there will always be freshness.

THE NOON PRAYER-MEETING

was held as usual, with a very full attendance. In the absence of Sir Geo. Williams, Mr. M. H. Hodder was president. Instead of one set address, as customary, the meeting was thrown open for brief words of exhortation and testimony. Mr. Taylor related some deeply interesting facts about a work of grace going on in the Aylesbury workhouse, where not a few have been converted of late. A worker from the south coast told of striking answers to prayer in connection with his work. Mr. John Denning, of Southsea, reported on open-air work during the summer in years past on the common there, which had developed into varied branches of work. The workers are hoping to start a noon prayer-meeting in the town. "Trust and obey" was sweetly sung by Miss Ada Rose. Some special requests were presented for remembrance in prayer, after which Sir George Williams (who had arrived from another May meeting) addressed some weighty and cheering words to the evangelist brethren on the dignity and importance of their calling. Mr. J. B. Wookey concluded the speaking of the noonday hour by a brief but earnest and touching plea that more solicitude should be shown for the salvation of the children.

THE AFTERNOON CONFERENCE

met at 2.30, with another good attendance, under Mr. M. H. Hodder's presidency. Attention was directed at first to the question of how to conduct small meetings. Speaking from a twenty-years' experience of settled work in a mission hall in the same neighbourhood, Mr. T. W. Stoughton said he had found that the most fruitful meetings in result were not those that were most largely attended, and where outward signs of emotional interest were excited, but smaller gatherings, where the great questions of sin and redemption were clearly and calmly dealt with. Ned Wright thought that some workers fought shy of small places because there was a lack of consideration on the part of those who arrange such efforts, as to the monetary support of the worker. This view of the case was backed up by a written communication from Mr. Ransome Wallis. The chairman also expressed the view that evangelists who give their whole lives to this service do not always get remunerated as they ought to, and as their circumstances in life required. Mr. Robert Burn further emphasised this point, and appealed to Christian friends all through the country to have more consideration for evangelistic brethren, in the adequate supply of their material needs. Another brother, who had worked a good deal in the villages, as well as abroad, thought that if the worker followed God's leading as to his place of service the needed means would be supplied. Mr. Gerald Coultas thought the worker should relax his methods in smaller gatherings and cultivate more personal dealing. A Village Worker said that much sympathy with the people and love for their souls are needed if we would reach and win them. The smaller the congregation the greater the grace needed by the worker. Mr. Wookey said that many evangelists would gladly go to small places if they could. He thought that some wealthy friends should arrange to set free workers of proved gifts so that they might go, not always where they are asked, but where they are really needed. Mr. Gipsy Smith said that his anxious desire was to make the greatest use of the opportunities God put before him, and this was what every worker should aim at. Miss Coles remarked that the Christian friends who invite evangelists have a duty in this matter. They generally show great anxiety that the evangelist should "draw," so as to fill the place of meeting. Let there be less craving after numbers, and a greater realisation of the value of souls.

THE CONDUCT OF AFTER MEETINGS

was thereafter taken up. Mr. Charles Inglis quoted the example of Philip the Evangelist, who, in his dealing with the Ethiopian Eunuch, found out the spiritual condition of the inquirer before he applied the truth. The physician does not prescribe for his patient till he has diagnosed the case. The same text will not bring peace to every troubled one, and if we spend more time over the Word of God with inquirers there will be fewer backsliders. There should be no routine in the conduct of after-meetings, but the condition of the souls to be dealt with, and the leading of God's Spirit, should regulate the methods adopted.

Before singing a Gospel song, Mr. Alfred Mayers dwelt briefly on the importance of consecrating gifts of song in the work of evangelism. He was surprised that so few Christians in this country thus gifted were led to give themselves to such service. Our American friends have set us an example in utilising Gospel song that we ought more extensively to imitate.

Recurring to the subject of the after-meeting, Mr. R. C. Morgan (who had now arrived and been warmly welcomed) said that nothing was a greater test to a worker than dealing with individual inquirers. If the truth lays deep hold of us, we shall be able to give it out as a living message for others. Sometimes the same statement of truth put with a different emphasis brings light and help. One worker will perhaps say to a seeker, "Only trust Him"; another will say, "Only trust Him." This takes the soul away from all self-effort to believe, to Him who is the source and object of faith. Mr. Morgan said he had recently been reading some reminiscences of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's early Gospel work. That work was one bathed in the spirit of prayer, and nothing is more striking in these records than the power of united prayer among friends in different parts of the country. The Hon. H. R. Moreton thought that in the principal meeting the truth proclaimed should be made very clear and simple; and on the nature of the first meeting would depend a good deal what the after-meeting was. Opportunity should always be given at the close of a Gospel meeting for personal conversation, whether a formal second meeting is held or not. Mr. Edward Hurditch said he had sometimes been much discouraged by the results of after-meetings, and at other times he had found great encouragement. Speaking of Brighton, where he now labours, he said there was a difficulty in having such meetings for want of suitable workers. He has been in the habit of inviting anxious ones to call on him at his private residence on a certain evening; as a result, he has had groups of seekers at his house, who have decided for Christ before they left. Mr. Barry Wake referred to the danger of counting among anxious inquirers those who had never been really wounded by the sword of the Spirit. He referred to the great value of the gift of song in attracting and holding together a crowd in the open air, even when a poor speaker was in danger of scattering them. He set a high value on the worth of a good tenor voice in this line of service, and prayed that some consecrated Christian Sims Reeves might arise who would be glad to use his gift in the singing of the Gospel. Dr. Baedeker said in Germany they had not got so far as the after meeting; they were afraid of machinery, especially of English machinery. His practice when abroad ever was to preach the Gospel and to give anxious ones an opportunity of conversing with him in private afterwards. In this way many had been led to spiritual decision, and the results were lasting, if not so large as in other lands. A reference to the Stundists led Dr. Baedeker to remark that these Russian Christians were the best possible evangelists. They go from place to place, and from house to house, so that their efforts for the salvation of others might be called a continuous inquiry meeting. Mr. W. R. Lane regarded the work of the inquiry meeting in some shape or another as a necessity, and if the Spirit's leading is followed the particular form which it takes may be left to shape itself.

After some congratulatory words from the Chairman, the afternoon session was closed with another stirring song from Mr. Gipsy Smith—

Are you happy in the Lord?
Tell it out with gladness.

THE EVENING HOUR

brought together again a goodly band of workers, over whom Mr. F. W. Lawrence presided. The very important topic of "The Evangelist's Message" was taken up, and Mr. J. B. Wookey was the first to speak upon it, especially as to the manner in which it should be delivered. He said that all preachers need to be baptized with the spirit of pity and love for sinners, if they would reach the hearts of those who have deeply strayed into sin. A little personal experience in addressing a meeting of fallen women told by Mr. Wookey gave point to his heartfelt exhortation. Mr. R. C. Morgan said that nothing more needs to be guarded against in Gospel work than getting into some exclusive "corner" where special fragments of truth are taken out of their due proportion. As to the substance of the message we need to go back to God's beginnings, and deal with elementary questions. If God has given us, as we think, some fresh light on any truth, we ought first to digest and assimilate it before giving it out in public to others. "Jesus and the Resurrection" is perhaps the briefest and simplest form of the message that the New Testament supplies; that was the theme of the first apostles. Satan's power ends in death. God has the power of resurrection. If the power of resurrection is a reality in our souls we shall be able to impart its living power to others.

From the conversation of the Lord Jesus with Nicodemus Mr. Ned Wright showed the necessity for the agency of God the Holy Spirit in the work of conversion. Mr. W. Wild said that the message must be such as will reach the conscience and convict of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Mr. Gipsy Smith, in the same line of remark, thought that the evangelists should make a special study as to how to get at the conscience; while it should be done with tears in the voice as well as in the heart. If the Puritans preached the law very assiduously, the pendulum has now swung round very far the other way, and most of our preaching has become too soft. The consequence is that there are many in our congregations who are deemed to be backsliders, but who have never really been Christians at all. A healthy, robust Christian community can only be reared by faithful dealing with the conscience. Let us be more anxious to reach hearts than to count heads. Mr. Hodder observed that severe things may be said in a tender spirit, and we need to have our speech seasoned with salt. It was said of the Master that none ever spake like Him, and we should imitate his graciousness of utterance.

Mr. Richard Spraggs said soft speech would never have reached him in his ungodly days. But while we keep back nothing of the harsher side of truth, let us not forget to present the love of God and his willingness to save. Mr. R. Burn advocated a greater proclamation of the truth concerning the Kingdom of God; thus we may bring home to men's hearts the awfulness of rebellion against Him. The familiar words, "God so loved the world," were referred to by Mr. H. Brown as the great moving force of the Gospel, which man is but the instrument in delivering. Mr. Wm. Noble pleaded for naturalness and individuality in the deliverance of the message. He also put in a word on behalf of the neglected villages of our land. Mr. W. R. Lane urged the holding and setting forth of a full rounded Gospel, but expressed the view that in every single address the scheme of truth ought to be broken up. He also counselled young evangelists to neglect no opportunities of studying good authors, as helps to the Scriptures, in equipping themselves for their work. Mr. S. Trevor Francis, just returned from a round-the-world tour, emphasised the importance of a sure and settled belief in the truth of the message, and of tenderness of spirit and manner in presenting it. Mr. Colin Young cited the comforting words which are addressed to his disciples by the Master: "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." In a stirring little address, reminiscent of outdoor temperance work, Mr. Macauley said he thought the workers of to-day were becoming too polished. Some words as to the need of power in work for God came from Mr. Taylor, of Aylesbury; and Mr. Monro Collings counselled the preaching of the lordship of Jesus. The last exhortation came from Mr. Adam Jack, who strongly pleaded for a broad and systematic study of the Scriptures; he strongly condemned the slavish imitation by young preachers of those who were renowned in the pulpit; and added that he never yet met any preacher who knew too much.

Two brethren concluded the conference with prayer.

Mr. Morgan said he felt strongly that such conferences should be held quarterly rather than annually. By a vote of the meeting it was resolved to hold another gathering of a similar kind as early as possible in September.

We ought to add that an excellent photographic group of the evangelists was taken in St. Botolph Churchyard, by Mr. G. R. Cleare, of 97, Lower Clapton-road, N.E.

UGANDA.—Rev. G. L. Pilkington, one of the Church Missionary Society's missionaries in Uganda, in his annual letter for 1894, says:—"The extension into the country has produced, as might have been expected, visible fruit of an enormous increase in the number of those under definite instruction for baptism. At this time last year the catechumens numbered 170; during the year some 800 have been baptized, and there are now 1500 catechumens."

THE HOUSE OF REST.—The story of the Syro-Phœnician woman was used by the Rev. Robert Balgarnie at the meeting at the House of Rest, on Friday, to illustrate the need of exercising faith in the matter of prayer. The prayer for help though meeting first with silence on the part of the Lord, afterwards what was equivalent to a refusal, and then a repulse, was not silenced, and the persistence of the demand brought the full answer of blessing. The encouragement of the story was great, and all were urged to bring their burdens to the Lord and trust Him for an answer to their prayers in spite of apparent refusal.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 12.—2 THESS. II.

The Day of the Lord not yet (1-12).—When Jesus comes, the saints will be gathered to Him from all the world. The meeting in the air will precede the coming to the world. Before the latter can take place, many events here shadowed forth must occur. As there was a revelation of the Man of Calvary, so there shall be a revelation of the man of sin. Before the end of the age comes we may perhaps expect a manifestation of evil in the form of a man demanding divine honour. The hidden evil that shall flower out in the man of sin is working already. Some think it is now restrained by the presence of the Spirit in the Church. When these are taken out of the way, there will be nothing to hinder its full development. Then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus will slay. (10) Those who refuse the truth expose themselves to the entrance of the lie. Man cannot live without the supernatural, if Saul cannot get an answer from God, he will turn to a witch.

Chosen to Salvation (13-17).—Notice the R.V. margin, which suggests that the first converts were the first-fruit sheaf of the mighty harvest of saved ones. Salvation in its full extent is equivalent to sanct cation. Let us give ourselves up to the Spirit and the Word. The goal of the saved is the glory of our Lord Jesus received into their hearts and shared. What reason for stedfastness is here! (16) We have eternal comfort and good hope as one of the bequests of our Lord, but we need that it should be administered to our hearts. Perhaps we none of us make enough of the Divine comfort which establishes the soul in word and work.

MONDAY, MAY 13.—2 THESS. III.

The Lord's Faithfulness (1-5).—No lover of Christ can be satisfied with less than the running of the word. Our prayers may put wings to the Gospel. The Lord is bound to perfect his work. Let us not look to our faith, but reckon on his faithfulness. The stablished life, founded upon the rock, consists in a clear strong appreciation of our standing in Christ, in daily obedience to his precepts, and in the rooting of the soul in perpetual fellowship with the unseen Saviour. How safe is that sheep whom the Good Shepherd guards from the prowling lion. (4) Our confidence about people should be founded in the Lord. (5) Let us ponder this prayer, and ask that we may more deeply enter into the love of God and the patience of Christ (R.V., mar.).

Orderly Walking (6-15).—The Church of Christ must be beyond reproach. Christians must maintain a high standard of holy living, carefully disassociating themselves from all that would bring the holy name of their Lord into disrepute. (8) Again, as so often, the Apostle returns to his manual labour, whilst staying at Thessalonica, as providing the means for the free proclamation of the Gospel. His was a noble ideal; where possible, we should emulate his example. (10) The great stress laid in these Epistles on honest toil, has put Christ's meritmark upon it. Quiet in work, frugal in taste, contented with what they have, assiduous in well-doing, withdrawn from evil-doers: this was the ideal of the early Christian.

The Lord of Peace (16-18).—We have already had the comfort of God (ii. 16), now we have his peace. Look for it at all times, and expect it to come along many different tracks.

TUESDAY, MAY 14.—1 TIM. I.

Entrusted with the Gospel (1-11).—Christ Jesus was the source of Paul's commission, his hope, the foundation of grace, mercy, and peace. The Apostle found all in Him. (4) He refers to the beginning of the gnostic heresy introducing so many accretions to the Gospel, and making knowledge the end and goal. (5) In opposition Paul insists that love is the one object for which we should strive. Its conditions are purity, a healthy moral life, and simple faith. The word sound is characteristic of these Epistles. It means healthy. The aspect of healthy teaching towards the unregenerate is given in the law, its aspect toward obedient souls is in that Gospel which is radiant with the glory of the blessed God. God is blessed because always giving. Thus only can we be blessed. To be entrusted with words for God is the highest honour that can be given to man.

Enabled for the Ministry (12-17).—R.V. margin suggests the present tense "enableth." The strengthening might was ever pouring from the heart of Christ to Paul. Not to know better stays sin from hardening the heart. Oh, the abounding grace of God to us all! With some it seems ever greater because of the difficulties it has overcome. This was the case with the Apostle, and he found comfort in thinking that all who should hear his story in after years would be encouraged by thinking that if he were saved they might be. If an elephant can cross a plank of course a fly can. (17) Mark the attributes of God. The ages own Him King. Time and change cannot impair his being, mortal eyes cannot behold his glory, none can compare with Him, but his mercy is his noblest attribute, declared unto mankind in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Faith and a Good Conscience.—Timothy had been a child of great promise. Prophecies of coming usefulness preceded his youthful steps. Our strength for war on the behalf of the Gospel is won by meditating on the Word of God. Faith and a good conscience are blessed companions. It may be that this deliverance to Satan had to do with physical disease which their sins had incurred, and the Apostle was content that it should hold them until they repented.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15.—1 TIM. II.

Prayers (1-7).—There are different kinds of prayer. We supplicate for blessing; we pray in the interchange of holy thought and fellowship; we intercede for one another; we give thanks for God's great glory, and on behalf of his goodness. In these let us not forget those in high place. The early Christians were accused of revolution. There was the more need that they should adopt every method of disabusing their adversaries of this idea. Tranquillity, stillness of heart, godliness, and purity, are elements of a noble character. God hates nothing that He hath made; He desires the salvation of all. We perish by our own act and deed. (5) Here is the Daysman for whom Job sighed, who can lay his hand on God and men. The ransom indicates that all souls were in pawn. He has emancipated us from the curse of the fall; souls are lost not for Adam's sin, but because they reject the testimony of God.

Christian Unmanliness (8-15).—The men are to pray. They may do this anywhere, only their hands must be clean, and their hearts full of love. The women must find their pride in the deeds of a holy, helpful life. These are their best adornment. The Apostle does not forbid that attire which becomes our station, but insists that the outward dress should be the expression of a modest and holy heart. (11) These words were written to Easterns. In interpreting them we must remember the long subjection of women in these lands. The Apostle had to moderate the revolutionary speed which threatened to involve the Church in grave suspicion.

THURSDAY, MAY 16.—1 TIM. III.

The Office of Bishop (1-13).—The R.V. margin reminds that bishop may be rendered overseer or presbyter. The characteristics of the leader of a church are clearly defined. His reputation without reproach, his home chaste and well-ordered, his habit one of self-control, his motives beyond suspicion, his manner gentle and kindly. How real the devil was to Paul. The adversary who was always seeking cause against Christ and his Church! We must avoid anything that might be a ground of reproach against our Master, or would give the devil a chance to catch us in his snare or pitfall. (8) Deacons, as Acts vi. informs us, had to do with the finances and secular arrangements of the Church. Gravity, sincerity of speech, freedom from self-indulgence, purity of conscience, an intelligent knowledge of the Gospel, were prime requisites for such. We cannot forget that Stephen, the first martyr, was a deacon, full of faith and power by the Holy Ghost. In each case the propriety of the home life was an essential condition to service in the Church, and the wives of men of God had to cultivate gravity, self-control, fidelity, charity of speech.

The Mystery of Godliness (14-16).—Timothy was a young man entrusted with difficult and important affairs; hence these minute directions, which should be pondered by all who seek office in the Church. The Church, which stands for all believers, is the dwelling-place of the living God; by it the truth is maintained amid the error of the world. (16) Probably a fragment of an ancient Christian hymn. Six sentences sung antiphonally. God is unveiled in Christ. His incarnation, ascension, the gift of Pentecost, the worship of angels, the growing progress of the Gospel, are recited.

FRIDAY, MAY 17.—1 TIM. IV.

Needless Asceticism (1-5).—Men are always willing to abstain from meats and drinks rather than from sin. They substitute the outward fast for the inward. It would almost appear as though the apostle anticipated the abominations of the Papacy, for surely the seducing spirit working in that vast system has led men into hypocrisy and lying. Think, for instance, of the liquefaction of the blood of S. Januarius. The branded conscience, the prohibition of marriage, the abstinence from what is innocent and natural, are all features of apostasy. (6) Let us accept every good thing from God with thanksgiving and prayer. Reject only those things which you cannot thank or pray about. Prayer is the touchstone of good and evil.

The Profit of Godliness (6-16).—Before you can minister to others you must be nourished in the words of the faith. As the athlete develops every sinew and muscle of his body, that each may perform its true function, so let us develop our spiritual nature by using every faculty for God. So shall we inherit a blessing here and hereafter. (10) There is a sense in which all men share in the redemption of Jesus Christ. By Him all men are delivered from the curse, but only those who believe obtain the fulness of God's salvation. (12) Words are measured by the weight of the character behind them. It is not enough to speak for God; we must live for Him. Our words, behaviour, purity, and love must attest our preaching. (13) Each of these injunctions should be carefully pondered. To read the Bible, to use our gift, to be men of one purpose, to take heed to ourselves, to continue perseveringly and patiently, are rules for holy living, which it becomes ministers and people to practise.

SATURDAY, MAY 18.—1 TIM. V.

The Minister's Attitude to the Various Classes of his Charge (1-16).—We find fathers, brethren, mothers, and sisters in the Church. Happy the community bound by such bonds! (5) It was the custom of the Church to maintain the widows, that they might be able by their prayers and work to minister to others. The aged should specially give themselves to supplication and prayer. Sleepless nights may be well occupied by the intercession of God's priests in his temple. (7) A man who has a single purpose may even command. (8) Nothing can exonerate us from providing for our own. To neglect this is to be worse than infidels who have not our light. (10) The qualifications of those who were to be pensioners on the bounty of the Church. (11) The younger widows were not to be taken on the pension list, lest they should not be steadfast to the holy vows which they assumed. (13) Let these words be carefully considered by women who have neither husband nor children to claim their first attention, because they indicate the special temptations incident to their position, the hidden rocks on which they may make shipwreck.

The Eldership (17-25).—The elder who needed should receive remuneration, especially if he surrendered his whole time. Not to receive an accusation lightly, to be uncompromising in the reproof of sin, to be impartial as before God, not hastily to ordain, to keep perfectly pure—such are essential qualifications of the servant of God. (23) Obviously Timothy was a total abstainer until he received this specific injunction. (24) Some sins flame out, others smoulder; some good works are evident, others nestle as the violet under the leaf. Let us all live in the light of God's all-seeing eye, anticipating his verdict in our life.

THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY was (says The Echo) started by a cobbler, and it still finds its supporters chiefly among the lower middle-class The audience that crowded Exeter Hall to the doors was almost exclusively made up of small shopkeepers, the better class of workmen and the like; the women with careworn but smiling faces and sober dresses, the men somewhat uneasy through wearing their Sunday clothes on a week-day. Everyone seemed personally interested in the society, and probably a large number had either relations and friends doing mission work in foreign lands. No doubt it is easy enough for the decaying decadent to indulge in cheep sneers at the enthusiasm of such a gathering, but it would be hard to find a greater exhibition of the altruistic spirit than in a work like theirs. A body of poor people that raises an annual income of £60,000, and a special centenary fund of nearly twice as much, to ameliorate the lot of nations whom most of the members know only by hearsay is not to be disposed of with a scoff.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MAY 19.

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.—Mark xv. 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 5.

A BRIEF morning sitting of the Sanhedrim was held to give to the sentence of death passed during the night a legal sanction (xv. 1). But the power to execute the sentence had been taken away from the Sanhedrim. It was necessary therefore to appeal to the Roman governor. This brought about our Lord's death by crucifixion, and so fulfilled his own words (see John xviii. 32 with John iii. 14).

Pilate had been appointed governor about A.D. 26, and held the office about ten years. It is said that Caligula banished him to Gaul, where, according to Eusebius, he committed suicide. His character may be judged by his interviews with Jesus. He had respect for the Roman law which he was called to administer; but he was self-seeking and ambitious, and was not unwilling to do an illegal thing when it would serve his own purpose. For the Jews and their religion he appears to have had nothing but contempt. This interview with Jesus is the crisis of his life. It is his grand opportunity. How will he use it?

The capital of the Roman governor was Cæsarea; but during the great feasts his presence was needed in Jerusalem to keep order. It is probable that the judgment hall into which Jesus was brought for trial was in the tower of Antonia, at the north-west corner of the Temple.

It is better to combine the narrative as contained in the four Gospels, and to enforce the lessons as they gather round the persons who appear most prominently.

THE CHIEF PRIESTS.—Their refusal to enter the palace (John xviii. 28) shows how possible it is for those who are perpetrating the most awful crime to be exact and punctilious about ceremonial detail. Their zeal, and energy, and pertinacity, if turned in a different direction, would be worthy of all praise. When foiled in one attempt, instead of abandoning their wicked purpose, they quickly resorted to another. When Pilate refuses to confirm their sentence without inquiry (John xviii. 29-32), and they cannot repeat the charge of blasphemy for which the Sanhedrim have condemned Him, they invent three new charges (Luke xxiii. 2), not one of which is true in the sense they mean it. So skilfully and with such determination do they act, that they wrest from Pilate a sentence which he knows to be unjust, and lead the people to choose a murderer in place of One in whom they had lately recognised their Messiah. Would that the servants of Christ manifested equal energy and zeal.

Their guilt is inexcusable. They acted in defiance of the clearest light. The Scriptures which they read continually foretold the death of the Messiah, and they unconsciously fulfilled the prediction (Acts xiii. 27). They present an awful picture of what opposition to Christ may lead to. They began by setting themselves against Him, and had hardened themselves against every influence that could arrest them in their awful course. Be warned against beginning to reject Jesus!

PILATE suggests lessons even more important. In some respects his treatment of Jesus is much better than that of the chief priests. See him (1) with conscience powerfully awakened. God was dealing with him in many ways. By the very appearance of Jesus, so meek, yet so kingly (2-5) by the dream of his wife (Matt. xxvii. 19); by his knowledge of the wicked motive of the chief priests (10), and his horror of the crime they were about to commit (13). When God deals with a man thus, the most momentous issues depend upon his conduct. Will he dare to act the manly part, and refuse to be a mere tool in the hands of these wicked priests? Have not you also to decide a similar question? Dare you be true to your awakened conscience?

See him (2) false to his conviction. The man who keeps his eye fixed upon some definite object can plough a straight furrow. And the man whose eye is single is the man who can do right. Pilate lacked this singleness of aim. He knew what he ought to do; he wanted to do it; he even tried to do it; and when one effort failed he tried another; yet he did not do it. And why? Because he had too many masters. He sought to advance himself; in order to this he tried to please the people; and yielded to their demands because his own interests seemed to demand it. He had not learned, as many others have not, that self interest in the true sense can never be advanced by wrong.

This is not mere history. To all who hear of Jesus the same question (12) has to be decided. To compromise as Pilate did is to be lost. No attempt to put the blame upon others can succeed. Men may tempt us to be false to our conviction; but the sin is ours. Which have you chosen—Barabbas the murderer, or Christ the Saviour?

For the Young.

THE NAME OF JESUS.

WE were on our way to the morning service, at which an address to the young people was to be on the word "Jesus." My companions were two young people, who are usually interested in their portion of the service.

"How many letters are there in the name of Jesus?" I asked. "Five," was the reply. "And how many fingers on each hand?" "Five," again my young friends replied. "Then there is a finger for each letter," I said. "Suppose we try to find a word for each of these letters, so that we may know how much there is for us in Jesus?"

"Take the first letter—J. What word begins with J?" I had not to wait long for a reply; for the younger of my two companions said "Justification," which was exactly the word I wanted. It was a big word for such young lips to pronounce, but I found that it was easier to speak it than to explain it. I got some strange replies when I asked what the word meant. "Do you know what pardon means?" I asked. They knew that. Had they not more than once felt the burden of wrong-doing, and gone in to confess their sin with streaming eyes to father or mother? And when the word of forgiveness was spoken had they not gone out again with glad hearts and with all their tears wiped away? There are few young people who do not understand that. It is not the whole of justification. The word will get bigger in its meaning as they grow older; but for my young companions it was enough. They saw that to have Jesus is to be free from the burden of sin. Have you learned that?

"Now the next letter, E." My young friends were equally successful in guessing that. They were familiar with the words Eternal Life, but again were astray as to the explanation. They said that eternal meant everlasting, and they were so far right. "But do you not know some people," I asked, "whose life is by no means happy, who are burdened with care, affliction, and in misery? Who would want to have such a life for ever?" So I had to explain that the term described not only life, but life without sin, without selfishness, without distress—a life like that of God Himself. Have you found this great blessing in Jesus?

For the next letter, S, my young friends suggested a word, which I readily accepted for my address. "Sacrifice" they said. Nothing could have been better; for the death of Jesus, as our sacrifice for sins, secured to us both justification and eternal life. Do you understand that it was needful for Jesus as our sin bearer to die in our stead before we could be saved? Have you learned to say "He died for me"?

The letter U was a difficulty to my companions. They suggested many words, not one of which described any blessing we have in Christ. I pointed to the trees just bursting into leaf, and said, "Do you see those branches?" "Yes," was the reply; "and how lovely the fresh green leaves look!" "Yes," I said, "but how is it the branches bear such beautiful leaves?" "Because they are joined to the trees," said one of my friends. "Good," I said, "but find another word for joined—a word that begins with U." Then I got it. "United," said the elder of my little friends. The trees again helped me to explain the meaning of union with Christ. The same life that is in the tree is in every branch; and he who believes in Jesus is so united to Him that the same life that is in Jesus is in him. There are many older Christians who do not know what a great blessing they possess by being united to Christ. Think of it: "I am the Vine, and ye are the branches," depending upon Him, indwelt by his life, and necessary to Him!

"Now the last letter, S." Again I had to help my companions to find the word. "Do you not know some people who are always grumbling, and faultfinding, wanting what they have not got, unwilling to do what they have to do, always wishing for more than they have? What do you say of these people? "They are not —— satisfied," said one of my friends. That is not like those who believe in Jesus, for if they have justification, eternal life, a sacrifice for sins, union with Christ, surely they have satisfaction too.

Now is not this a precious Name? Let its five letters suggest to you the five-fold blessing. Is He yours? He is God's gift to you; have you received Him? Do not be content to live another day without being able to say "Jesus, with all the blessings He brings, is mine." G. W.

GOSPEL WORK IN EAST LONDON.

SEVERELY as the past winter's visitation was felt by the poor, yet many a worker can tell of scenes that have gladdened the heart, giving hopes of spiritual awakening such as no winter has furnished for many years past. At Bow Common, where just a year ago our friends who sustain the ministry of the Gospel at this centre of the North-east London Gospel Mission were not a little apprehensive for the future at the opening of a large Roman Catholic Mission and Schools in their midst, have only praise upon their heart, as they tell of crowded congregations and over-full Sunday-school, with an increased attendance of match-factory girls to the institute.

But better than this is the spiritual blessing which has lately been given both here and at the other branches of the same Mission. At one Gospel Hall, as many as fifty souls have given hope of repentance unto life during the last two months, and still the blessing continues, and our hearts are full of hope and expectancy for "showers of blessing" for East London, which has been intensified by the inspiring gatherings of the last few days.

One of the most hopeful signs is the awakening to deeper consecration and personal holiness founded on all sides, and the more willing self-sacrifice in the Master's service. About sixty hard-working men and women recently gave up the needed leisure of a public holiday, and spent the day in telling and singing the Gospel from street to street in East London. The close of that day saw seven souls definitely gathered for the Kingdom of God.

A year ago help was asked to secure the purchase of the Gospel Hall and other premises at Bow-common, in the occupancy of the North-East London Gospel Mission, which premises are in close contiguity to Rome's last effort in East London. To secure the premises, a loan had to be accepted, and help is now earnestly sought to repay this £400 still out standing. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C. I will gladly communicate with any friends interested in the work.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

Another party of children (the sixty-ninth band), trained, and sent out from the Home of Industry, has left for the sunnier shore of Canada. Some special feature usually marks the various bands sailing; this time it is the number predominating who are going out because a brother or a sister is longing for them on the other side. There are also many little ones suitable for adoption. Miss Macpherson wrote from off Moville on May 3:—"We are full of praise for the many mercies experienced in starting another voyage. The accommodation for the children is very good. Abundance of room to hold services in their steerage should it be too cold to be much on deck."

The workers are still rescuing now that there are vacant beds in the Home, and should the Lord send the means it is hoped to have another party ready shortly. Mr. James Merry is taking charge in Miss Macpherson's absence.

THEATRICAL TEA-MEETING.—Mr. William Forbes held a tea-meeting on Friday, at the Buckingham Temperance Hotel for ballet girls and other theatrical employées. After tea, solos and hymns were sung, earnest addresses were given by Rev. F. Hall, and Mr. Forbes. The Bible Flower Mission sent bouquets of flowers with texts attached.

A Dark Background.

1 Sam. xvii. 11.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

A great contrast is evidently intended by the historian between Saul and David. The portrait of Saul is drawn in Rembrandt colours, to set forth the excelling beauty of God's designated king.

The king of Israel took his first steps away from God when he permitted himself to be betrayed into undue haste and precipitation and offered the burnt offering at Michmash before Samuel came. He took further steps in the same direction in the outburst of indignation against Jonathan for violating his regulation about abstinence from food. But the final break took place when he disobeyed the distinct command of Jehovah through his prophet, and spared Agag and the choice of the spoil. Then he rejected the word of the Lord, and God gave him up to his own evil heart. From that moment his course was always downward toward the gathering gloom of Gilboa. From the disobedient heart God withdraws his keeping power, and as it is no longer tenanted by the Spirit of the Most High, it becomes at once the prey and habitation of unclean spirits, reminding us of the awful words with which Isaiah describes the desolation of Edom: "The wild beasts of the desert shall gather, the satyr shall cry to his fellow, yea, the night-monster shall settle there, and shall find her a place of rest, there shall the arrow-snake make her nest, and lay, and hatch; yea, there shall the kites be gathered, every one with her mate." Such was the state of Saul's heart. Since he was not willing to retain God in his knowledge, God gave him up to a reprobate mind to do those things which are not fitting.

We will notice some points in Saul's dark eclipse which will serve to illustrate salient features in the young shepherd's character.

I.—FORSAKEN BY THE SPIRIT OF GOD.

Browning conceives of him amid the black midtent's silence, from which for days together not a sound came to the anxious watchers; the blackness of darkness reigning; within the figure of Saul resting against the tent-prop without movement, speech, or appetite for food; shuddering for a moment under the first spell of music, and then resuming his insensibility to all. The sacred historian describes his condition in the terrible words, "Now the Spirit of the Lord had departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him."

The departure of the Spirit of the Lord probably refers to that special equipment for the regal office which had once come mightily upon him. In his case, it had rather to do with office than with any change of disposition and heart (1 Sam. x. 10; xi. 6). By his wilfulness and disobedience, Saul forfeited this royal prerogative. The light faded off his soul, he became as other men.

Nothing in this world, or the next, can be compared for horror to the withdrawal of God from us. It involves the perdition of body and soul, because it is the one force by which evil is restrained, and good fostered. Take the sun from the centre of the solar system, and each planet, breaking from its leash, would pursue a headlong course, colliding with the rest, and dashing into the abyss. So when God's presence is lost, every power in the soul rises in revolt. Ah! bitter wail, when a man realises the true measure of the calamity which has befallen him, and cries with Saul, "I am sore distrest, for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more."

It is a very serious thing to ask if we are not tampering with the Spirit of the Lord. To do so will turn the most radiant dawn into the chill twilight of a wintry day when the blizzard fills the air with snow and ice. Beware lest you fret against the Divine delays, or disobey the Divine command. Know in this thy day the things that belong to thy peace, lest they be forever hid from thy view, and, as the sun's last rim sinks beneath the waves, the storm-clouds of jealousy, superstition, frenzy, bear down in thick battalions.

How different with David. The Lord was with him. To the clear, bright eye of his faith the living God was more real than the giant that stalked each morning before the hosts of Israel. Had He not delivered him from the paw of the lion and from the paw of the bear? And was He not as real amid the dignity of the Court or the clash of the battle-field? The dew of the Divine blessing rested upon that fair young head, and the light of the Shekinah shone from the inner shrine through those clear blue eyes. With him the Spirit of God was not simply an equipment of gift for service, but the resident presence of the Divine in soul and heart.

II.—TROUBLED BY AN EVIL SPIRIT FROM THE LORD.

Evidently the conception is of Jehovah surrounded by spirits, some good, and some evil. He has only to speak, and one powerful to exercise a malign and deadly influence hastens to do his bidding. Micaiah spoke after the same manner in the dark hour of Ahab's infatuation (1 Kings xxii. 19-23). This method of speech is unfamiliar. We prefer to say that God permits evil spirits to fasten on souls which have refused Him, as vultures on the carcase from which life has fled. We go farther, and say that God always means to do the best by every creature that He has made, but that we have the power of extracting evil from his good, of transforming his sunshine and rain into hemlock and deadly nightshade and rank poison; of transmuting the roses which fall from his hand into the red-hot cinders that scorch and burn into the flesh. Never doubt that God is good; that He sends food and gentle spirits to stay man from his purpose, and conduct him into the light of life, but when we turn against God it seems as though He has commenced to be our enemy, and to fight against us, the reality being that, whereas we once went with the stream of the Divine blessing, we are now wading against it with difficulty and peril. With the froward God shows Himself froward; and with the perverse, his angels, conscience, gratitude, the memory of the past, convictions of duty, intended to elevate and save, oppose their progress as mortal foes. They wrestle with us, or rather we wrestle with them in the dark night in which we cannot tell friend from foe. So when Judas had finally chosen to betray Christ, the very pleadings of Jesus hardened his heart, and sealed his doom.

With David, on the other hand, the Spirit of God was constantly co-operating. He lived and walked in fellowship with the unseen. All the genial influences of heaven, as they fell upon his young spirit, elicited responses of love and faith, like the strains of music which each passing breeze summons from the Eolian lyre.

III.—SAUL'S DISCORD.

The fact that music was the corrective of the king's malady seems to indicate that, being wrong with God, he was out of harmony with the universe, which is the circumference of which God is centre. It is impossible to define music. In its grander and more lovely strains it has escaped the defiling touch of sin, and is, so to speak, the echo of eternity, spray from the waves of light and glory that break upon our shores, the expression of the infinite order and rhythm of the spheres. Music, therefore, is the natural expression of the perfect life and peace of heaven. There the harpers harp upon their harps; there redeemed and glorified spirits raise new songs; there holy beings express their perfect accord with the nature of God and the order of the universe in outbursts of harmonious sound. Perfected sense, which can only be had on the condition of unbroken union with God's will, purpose, and life, detects all things uttering "Hallelujah!" and is compelled by the very contagiousness of a holy sympathy to swell the anthem.

To all this Saul was a stranger. He was out with God, and therefore there was discord in his heart and life. Music falling on his ear recalled memories of his former better self, and laid a brief spell upon the discordant elements of his soul, reducing them to a momentary order, destined, however, to be marred and spoilt so soon as the sweet sounds were withdrawn. Yes, it is ever thus. If you have not received the At-one-ment, if you are not at peace with God through Jesus Christ, you are at enmity, by wicked works and inward temper, and there can be, therefore, no sympathy between you and the universe around. Art, music, the engagements of daily business, the whirl of society, the exercises of religion may do what David's harp did for Saul, in producing a momentary stillness, and sense of harmony with your environment; but it is only for a moment; when the spell is withdrawn the olden spirit of disorder asserts itself.

With David, on the other hand, the harp was the symbol of a soul at rest in God. All things were, therefore, his; all spoke to his soul of the harmonies subsisting in the unseen and eternal world. And it was because his own spirit was so perfectly harmonious with the nature of God and with the universe, that he could cast the spell of calming and quieting influence over another. This may explain the influence of music in all ages of the world over the maladies of the soul. Elisha called for a minstrel to calm his disquieted spirit. Pythagoras, as Seneca tells us, was in the habit of quieting the troubles of his mind with a harp. Philip V. of Spain was recalled from the profoundest melancholy by the famous singer Farinelli. The servants of Saul were therefore justified in urging him in one of his lucid moments, to permit them to seek out a man who was a cunning player on the harp. And the power that David exercised over him is an illustration of a similar charm which we may each one exert upon the restless, storm-tossed spirits around us. Let us embrace the reconciliation. Let us stand beneath the Cross, which is the centre of reconciliation from the discords of sin, till we are in perfect accord with it, and let us go forth to induce men to come to the centre also, to be reconciled to God, and to learn the mystery of that peace of which Jesus spoke on the eve of his death and on the day of his resurrection.

IV.—SAUL'S UNBELIEF.

When a man is wrong with God faith is impossible, for it is the health-bloom of the soul. When, therefore, Goliath stalked through the valley of Elah, and defied the armies of Israel, Saul was greatly afraid. Where was now the prowess that engaged the early love and admiration of the people, that delivered Jabesh Gilead, and that vexed the foes of Israel whithersoever he turned himself? It had vanished, as the beauty passes from the surface of the fruit which is rotten at the core, and as the forms of the hills disappear from ruffled water. Under happier conditions he would have become the champion of his people; now he cowered in his tent.

To David, on the other hand, there was no such fear. His soul was full of God. He was his light and salvation, whom should he fear? the strength of his life, of whom should he be afraid? When the wicked, even his enemies and his foes came upon him to eat up his flesh, they would stumble and fall. He was hidden in the secret of God's pavilion, and abode under the shadow of the Almighty. There was no unsteadiness in the hand that slung the stone, no tremor in the heart. He was strong in faith because his young heart was pure, and good, an right, and in living fellowship with Jehovah.

MISSION TO COALIES.

Nearly a thousand of these useful members of society attended the annual meeting of the Mission to Coalies last week at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, Some came in their working clothes, and others in mufti, and decent respectable men they looked. Tea was a success; men, wives, and children all did their best to get rid of the good things provided, and the coal merchants' wives and deaconesses who presided had a busy time. On each plate there was a nosegay of flowers, and their fragrance mingled pleasantly with the healthy scent of tar which always distinguishes the genuine "coalie."

A move to the great hall was ultimately made for the meeting. Mr. Cory, of Cardiff, opened with prayer, and the president was Mr. Wm. Rickett. Coalies, missionaries, clerical and lay friends spoke, sixteen in number. Naturally, remarks by the coalies themselves were the most interesting. Well and earnestly they testified. It was evident they recognised strong drink as one of the chief curses of their mates' lives; one man described it as "undertakers' gravy." The coal merchants present were unanimous in recognising the wonderful change wrought through God's blessing amongst the men.

When it is remembered that there are some 10,000 men working in the London coal depots, it is clear that two missionaries are not enough, and two more are to be appointed at once. Like all other similar societies, the Mission finds some difficulty in paying its way, and as it is undoubtedly doing a splendid work the offer of Mr. Cole, of the London City Mission, to receive any donations, may be included in this brief report.

THE NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. Thomson Macmillan, of Aberdeen, is about to leave Scotland for mission work in the New Hebrides, under Dr. J. G. Paton.

CHURCH UNION IN SCOTLAND.—The Scottish Congregational Union, in session at Dundee last week, resolved to postpone for a year the question of union with the Evangelical Union Church.

Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P.

About three miles from Sheffield, on the hilly north side of the river Don, stands a pleasant old house, known as Wincobank Hall. When we first knew it, now some thirty-seven years ago, it was the home of the Read family, a family which in some of its branches has for more than a century had close and honourable connection with the trade and life of Sheffield. Mr. Wilson's grandmother, an aged, devout, and cultivated lady, was then the head of the household, which was a centre of some of the finest influences and noblest public efforts of this century. It was a home of strong and fervid Evangelical faith; it was also a rallying place of many a sacred but unpopular cause struggling for the emancipation of men into a nobler life. Obedience to Jesus Christ was the root of all that was attempted or achieved.

We remember seeing and shaking hands with Frederick Douglass in that home. Gavazzi and the friends of a reformed and liberated Italy were always welcome to its fireside, and often refreshed themselves and took counsel together there. In 1855 Dr. Desanctis, Alessandro Gavazzi, and the late Dr. Falding conferred there on the best mode of securing the liberty of the future Churches of Italy, without preventing their union; the Free Italian Church of to-day may, in a sense, be called English-born. Springing from such a home on the maternal side, and having a father whose sympathies ran as strongly in the same channels, there is little wonder that Mr. Wilson should be "an Evangelical Nonconformist to the tips of his fingers," though he does not formally unite with any denomination.

The whole of his family having been profoundly interested in the question of Negro emancipation, it was natural that in his young manhood he should side with the Northern States of America against the South. He took strenuous measures also to bring his neighbours to the same mind and attitude.

On coming to reside at Sheffield in 1869 he felt it to be his duty to give himself almost wholly to mastering his new business as a gold and silver smelter. In 1871 Mrs. Butler, wishing to address a meeting in Sheffield, and there being no one else ready to make arrangements for her coming, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson (who has always been his zealous coadjutor) carried through the work. The politicians of the town were against her, and let her and her cause alone, but this had no effect upon Mr. Wilson, who was already familiar with the experience of being in a minority. He formed a local committee, and threw himself into the new campaign. All his life has been profoundly affected by this new struggle, first, to throw off a loathsome system of fostering vice by national law, and second, to promote an equal standard of morals between men and women. Whilst he cannot be called a man of one idea—for he is interested in education, and has served fifteen years on the Sheffield School Board, he works for temperance, for peace, and for the general improvement of the people; nevertheless, he has given his best time and strength to the great reform of which Mrs. Butler has been the confessed and honoured leader. Never allowing himself to be separated from his neighbours, but always identifying himself with local life, he has also acknowledged to the full his responsibilities as a patriot; England, with all that that great name stands for, has had anxious and conscientious labour from him.

It was soon seen that the North of England could be organised and brought to bear with its whole weight in favour of Mrs. Butler's ideas. Mr. Wilson and a few gentlemen, therefore, formed the Northern Counties League, Mr. Wilson himself acting as honorary secretary. He found a sphere for which his earlier philanthropic efforts and home training had well qualified him. He understood the art of organising meetings, of influencing and shaping public opinion, of enlisting both the leaders of thought and the mass of the people, and of bringing all this to bear directly on members of Parliament and their votes in the House of Commons. How to strengthen a convinced member and how to fix a shaky one was a secret in his knowledge. Down to the art of framing a bill announcing a meeting so that it should catch the eye and obtain a reading, he was master of all the legitimate craft of agitating.

What is called "yeoman's service" has no repulsiveness to Mr. Wilson; it may be questioned if he sees one iota of difference between bill-sticking for a good cause, and writing a learned treatise for the same object; hence he never was dainty about his work. It came all alike to him, whether he tried to convince a collier or a member of Parliament.

(From Photograph by Mr. W. Lawrence, Dublin.)

Fortunately for the cause to which he is so devoted, he was induced by the Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice to go along with Mr. Gledstone as a deputation to America, to persuade the American people to resist that system. His knowledge of the great Abolition struggle, and of those who had shared in it, proved of great service in obtaining access to influential leaders of thought, and in gaining their sympathy. The strength of the tie which is formed between workers in these sacred causes is well illustrated in Mr. Garrison's message to Mr. Wilson's aunts, "Give them as much of my love as you can carry."

Prominent in political circles, and well known as a worker for the people, it is not strange that Mr. Wilson was returned to Parliament. After the Reform Bill of 1885, the Holmfirth division of Yorkshire did itself the honour of electing him, and thus put all lovers of moral and religious progress under a great obligation to it. Though not overlooking the interests of his constituency, he also cares for great national and human interests. Hence he has taken an active part in forwarding the work of Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew for India. He served upon the Departmental Committee which was appointed to inquire into the allegations of these ladies, and into the system on which our army was, in moral things, administered in our vast dependency, and he rendered valuable service. His love of truth and fact, coupled with his intimate knowledge of all the subterfuges under which the system of State regulation of vice is hidden, enabled him to drag awkward facts into the light. His name was on the majority report which condemned the action of the Indian authorities.

When the Opium Commission was appointed, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., was chosen as one of its members, but being unable to go to India, Mr. Wilson was asked to fill his place, and consented to do so. This was not a coveted office; quite the contrary; Mr. Wilson would not have accepted it but for a strong sense of duty.

The Report of the Commission, so long delayed as to cause much unfavourable criticism, and handed, in the first instance, in an illegal way, to the Press which favoured the opium traffic, has at length been laid before Parliament. It is based mainly on the evidence of parties interested in the opium traffic, and is, therefore, vitiated at its very source. Like many other reports in favour of the continuance of iniquitous practices, it causes joy to evil-doers, gives satisfaction to timid souls who wish to dwell at ease, and lengthens the days of a national crime; when it has had its day, and been found out, it will be consigned to neglect, a dishonoured and despised document. No man whose name is appended to it will ultimately receive anything but shame as his reward. Mr. Wilson's name is not attached to it; he has issued a report of his own; one of the Indian members, Mr. Haridas, has also put in a separate memorandum, which agrees in several important points with Mr. Wilson's views. We firmly believe that the national conscience will one day justify the one man who has kept his eyes open, and dared to follow the light he saw. His action has brought down the censures of a certain section of the Press, but it has also given multitudes beyond the circle of his friends and beyond the limits of his constituency a deep respect for, and interest in, him; when the next Parliament is returned, they will anxiously look for his name. We have the more confidence that his report will stand the test of time, because we know that his sense of fairness always compels him to study all sides of a question; his grasp of his own side is thus all the stronger, and his plans for work are the safer.

A peep into Mr. Wilson's more private life leaves a pleasant impression on the mind. He is a lover of children, knows how to live their life and how to win their hearts. Mr. J. Wycliffe Wilson, his brother and partner in business—himself an active local philanthropist, a successful reformer of workhouse administration—has greatly aided him by taking, in a most unselfish way, the larger share of the work and responsibilities of the business. He has generously freed the member of Parliament for public service. Still more has Mr. Wilson been aided by the warm sympathy and unflagging co-operation of his wife, who is known to many as the first president of the Women's Total Abstinence Union.

West London Mission.

This is a world of disappointments; as the very large company gathered in St. James's Hall last Friday morning experienced, when it was announced that Dr. Alexander Maclaren, of Manchester, was not able to preach, as advertised. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes appeared on the platform at 11 o'clock, and read a letter he had received from Dr. Maclaren. It was very unwillingly, he wrote, that he had abandoned the hope of being present, which he had cherished up to Thursday morning. A recurrence of indisposition, however, confined him to the house. He regretted this all the more as he had desired publicly to express his very earnest sympathy with, and thankfulness to God for, the work of the West London Mission. His regret was somewhat lessened by the thought that Mr. Hughes had got two strings to his bow, and the string that was available (he modestly added) would send the arrows straighter and further than one that had failed could have done.

Whether his pulpit bow is stronger than that of his Manchester friend or not it would be invidious to suggest, but Dr. Joseph Parker, the famous pastor of the City Temple, is certainly strong enough in every sense to carry his audience over any temporary feeling of disappointment and make them forget their loss. Instead of following on after Dr. Maclaren at noon, Dr. Parker at once stepped into the breach and gave his discourse, the preliminary service being conducted by Mr. Hughes and other brethren on the platform.

Before the sermon Dr. Parker referred to the regretted absence of Dr. Maclaren, to whom, he said, the whole Church owes an incalculable obligation. His penetrating insight, his spiritual sympathy, his intense religiousness, have given to his character and his ministry a weight and a value which will be acknowledged to be the greater as the centuries come and go. Choosing for his text Gen. iii. 11, "Who told thee that thou wast naked?" Dr. Parker began by declaring that the devil is the author of all pessimism. He is the source of scepticism, which is but question-asking. "Yea, hath God said?" The devil's work is to interrogate and to suggest doubts; he does nothing constructive. Whatever our doubts may be, it is proper and fair to ask, "Who told you?" You think man is not worth saving; what do you know about man? The devil has always desired to ruin man; we had better know it. If we knew what man really is we should try more and more to save him. How does God estimate him? If He thought him worth making He will think him worth saving. The very poorest man is worth all that this Mission can expend upon him. Young preachers! never condemn a small audience. One man is audience fit enough for an apostle. Do you say that it is no use to pray? Who told you? Let him be called and cross-examined. The Church has in its ranks some of the finest intelligence in the world, and it has plenty of evidence that prayer is answered. Prayer is not mere words; it is nothing till it carries the soul with it. God is the author of prayer; will He say "No" to Himself? Prayer is answered because prayer is inspired. There is only one prayer, the Lord's Prayer, and it is always answered. It is not the disciples' prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven"; but the prayer of Gethsemane, "Nevertheless, not my will but thine be done." That is prayer—not our little petitions about this or that, which may be only the outcome of our refined selfishness. When we have spoken out our little desires, let us ever finish with this, "Nevertheless, thy will be done." It is not the man who has prayed that thinks it wasted breath. Who wants the opinion of him who has never prayed?

"Who told you that" the Bible is only literature? We want to hear some responsible authority. Why go hawking about other people's doubts? I have no difficulty myself about the old Bible. (Applause.) Some very intelligent men have doubts, and I only speak for myself. I have no doubt about its being inspired, authoritative, and final. I do not regard it as simply containing a revelation; it is a revelation struggling with the limitations of a book. It is sometimes so read that I wonder who wrote it. If you would read it better you would have fewer doubts about it.

Pursuing the line of inquiry, the preacher said that the devil's work is always towards loss, bane, and death. Any beast can crush a flower; no angel can replace it. God's work is ever constructive; the devil's is destructive. A man may say that there is no difference between morality and immorality. It is fitting that such a man, in the good providence of God, should in time be at the Old Bailey on his way to penal servitude. Beware of the man who sneers at morality, and makes a living—God grant it may be a poor picking—out of immorality. Coming from the evil world to the Church, I say it is possible for a man to be spiritually naked and not ashamed. Are we without the white raiment washed at the Cross and fitted for Divine Society? It is not enough to have ideas about Christ. What is the good of a hypothesis even now, not to speak of the time when you are in the swellings of Jordan? Towards the close of the discourse there were some pathetic touches about the last clothing of all—the robes washed, and made white, in the blood of the Lamb.

The sermon over, Dr. Parker referred to the report of the Mission, which he described as an extended, illuminated, modernised Acts of the Apostles. Such a report is the best credential of the West London Mission. Infidelity can show us nothing like it. We are losing our great givers. What are we to do? If these big souls go we have to make up the loss. If the people would only give as much to Christ as they give to Bacchus, the accursed god, the treasury of the Church would overflow.

THE MID-DAY LUNCHEON

in Craven Hall was, as usual, an interesting and well-attended function. At the close of the meal most of the friends adjourned to the top storey and inspected the crèche which was recently moved to these quarters, and which had its full quota of infantile items, playing or calmly sleeping, as the case might be. At a short meeting in the luncheon-room, the venerable Dr. E. Jenkins presided, in the absence of Mr. W. S. Caine. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes ran through the roll-call of the manifold agencies at work, making, as the chairman afterwards remarked, a record almost bewildering in its variety. There were some new features to report, including workhouse teas and the "Guild of the Poor Things." This last is an endeavour to gather together the maimed, the halt, the lame and the blind, and the generally imperfect members of society in the district, to instil into them a new sense of self-respect, and throw some rays of brightness into their shadowed lives. Another very encouraging fact that came out in Mr. Hughes' statement was the remarkable change for the better that has come over the village of Bisley, in Gloucestershire, since the establishment there of the Convalescent Home, Wesley House. Dr. Jenkins moved every heart by his touching little address from the chair. He paid a very warm tribute of gratitude to Dr. Parker for the sermon of the morning, and rejoiced most unfeignedly in the marvellous success that has been granted to the Mission since it was started. Mr. Percy Bunting, as hon. treasurer of the Mission, made an urgent appeal for monetary help, especially in view of the outlay of the past severe winter.

THE SISTERS' MEETING, which fills up the afternoon of anniversary day, was held this year in St. James's Hall, the capacity of which was severely taxed. Introduced by Mr. Hughes, as one of the oldest, kindest, and warmest friends of the Mission, Lady Henry Somerset gave a thoughtful and eloquent presidential address. She said the year's report ought to rouse every reader to a new sense of the importance of the great field that is white to harvest in the West of London. She spoke with deep and heartfelt sympathy of the work of the Sisters in what are called "the slums." The work seemed to her to grow in beauty and in strength as years went on. She rejoiced in the social work that is done, and all that is attempted to brighten and purify the lives of the people. She asked that Mr. and Mrs. Hughes and the sisters should be cheered during the coming year by practical sympathy and help. We need on the part of the poor a divine discontent, prompting them to rise above their conditions; and we need on the part of the well-to-do a great unrest that will make them dissatisfied to live well themselves while so many other lives are held down by agony, sin, and misery. Though not in good bodily health her ladyship felt that her spirit must bring her there to show sympathy with the Sisters who carry on so great a work.

A comprehensive review of the work of the sisterhood followed from Mrs. Price Hughes. She dwelt on the characteristics of the women's work—the absence of the subjective element that attaches to many other sisterhoods, the full scope given to individuality, and the attention paid to the claims and needs of the whole nature, body as well as soul. Without going into minute detail, Mrs. Hughes recounted the many branches of effort sustained throughout the year, and earnestly appealed for increased help in the shape of guinea subscriptions.

Then followed the speeches of the Sisters themselves; and they can speak. Sister Lily, one of the most experienced and most gifted of the band, gave a very delightful account of the founding and the progress of the "Guild of the Poor Things." It has been taken in hand by Sister Grace, who was moved to pity for the afflicted and suffering ones by reading Mrs. Ewing's book, "The Story of a Short Life." We would earnestly counsel our readers to read the charming chapter by Sister Grace in the report, descriptive of the work of the Guild. We wish we had space to reproduce some of the pathetic cases related by Sister Lily to an audience deeply moved. Passing by her own special work among inquirers at the St. James's Hall meetings, the sister led her hearers to St. Luke's Home for the Dying, and told something of the Divine work of comfort carried on there among those nearing the verge of the other world.

At this point Mr. Price Hughes intervened with one of his stirring appeals for help, and paper promises of guinea and other subscriptions were invited.

"The children's work" proved a deeply entrancing theme for Sister Catherine; she first of all described the children—who, in fact, never have a real childhood. What a wonderful, if saddening, bit of realism was her graphic report of one of the popular child games of the neighbourhood—a smoking concert! One of the songs actually sung in this game is a filthy ditty born in a West End theatre, and every line of it is understood. "I have lived for two years in a slum," said the Sister, "and to me a slum is a hell—a hell where purity, health, peace, and God are unknown, with an atmosphere so black that every soul born into it is soiled." What a Divine gift of mercy to these boys or girls, young in years, but old in sin, are the labours of such godly women as Sister Catherine. How scathing was the irony of her words, "many West-end ladies are not satisfied unless their gown costs the price of a hundred children's holidays; and fashionable hats must be paid for, though sometimes in blood-money." "I know that nearly all my children will pass from the reformatory to the prison, and from the prison to the workhouse." God bless the Sisters who pour out their lives with such unstinted wealth for these children of the London slums.

The work of the inquiry-room was ably described by Sister Agatha, and illustrated by some most pathetic cases met with. The Sister had "great liberty" in giving her account, and she found a way to every heart. "Looking around it is dark, but looking up we know that God pities; and we are fellow-workers with Him."

EVENING MEETING.

Another very full audience gathered in the evening for the great public session of the anniversary. There was a strong platform, and the chair was filled by the well-known Wesleyan layman, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P. He was very hearty in his commendation of the work, of which he has been from the first a generous helper. Rev. Walford Green, president of the Wesleyan Conference, pointed out the necessity for cherishing sustained enthusiasm throughout the whole year in the interest of the work. The report (which he declared to be the best the Mission had ever issued) would supply the motive power for this holy enthusiasm. He had rejoiced, in going up and down the country, to find a growing sympathy with the aggressive work carried on.

As largely responsible for the conduct of the social work connected with the Mission, Rev. ARTHUR SHERWELL described the efforts made to meet the deep necessities of the poor. Last winter, he said, they found whole streets where every family were in the greatest destitution. Some of the facts recited by the speaker in this connection were most pathetic and thrilling in their sorrowfulness. While poverty is as gaunt and widespread as in less-favoured parts of London, rents, etc., are higher, and the condition of the poor is intensified. Then the problem of sweating in West London is a terrible one. A large and well-known tailoring firm, not far from Cleveland Hall, were severely denounced by Mr. Sherwell. At first they paid the women 2s. 3d. for making a pair of trousers. They soon reduced the price to 2s., and successively lowered it still further to 1s. 9d., 1s. 6d., and finally to one shilling; whereas the ordinary trade union price for such work would be five shillings. Besides that, this sweating firm compel these women workers to buy their trimmings from them, and pay for them at retail prices. Other women are glad to have the chance of making ulsters at eightpence each! Mr. Sherwell mentioned a still more horrible fact—that there are children in this part of London who are deliberately sold by their mothers for immoral purposes, to raise the money for the rent. In a brief mention of the flagrant immorality of the streets, Mr. Sherwell declared that it was the unbridled luxury of clubland which produced such a state of things. There is need enough for sympathy and pity for the fallen sisters, for few know what they have to bear. There are some of the largest West-end firms which ruthlessly dismiss their young-women employées without notice at the end of the season. What temptations, even to young women of the highest purpose, lie within such a fact as that.

The medical part of the Mission had an experienced advocate in Dr. HOWARD BARRETT, the brother-in-law of Mr. Price Hughes. He managed, in between his humorous sallies, to unfold the work of the crèche, of the nursing sisters, and of the Home of peace for the dying. Into this Home are freely taken the poor of the better class who have come to the end of their resources, so that their last days may be softened and smoothed. Rev. M. Guy Pearse conducts a service there every week, which is greatly enjoyed by the patients. Dr. Barrett closed his choice and charming address by a touching and fervid appeal on behalf of this Home for the dying.

Rev. M. GUY PEARSE followed with a capital speech, full of spirit and bonhomie and inspiration. He said he rejoiced to know that these London missions were rousing the Methodist churches all over the country to a great devotion and ingenuity in the Master's work. In speaking of the workhouse work, Mr. Pearse told of what he had seen in connection with poor law relief work at Liverpool. Old couples are not obliged to enter the "house," but have a room of their own. Mr. Pearse gave a glowing account of one of these homes he had visited; and it only costs 2s. a week more than the ordinary rate of relief.

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES had reserved himself to the last. He said their great consolation in the work was that God was with them. He could say thankfully that he had never preached in St. James's Hall without definite fruit in conversions. He had much to tell, which space fails us to reproduce, of progress and prosperity during the past year. The burden of his tale was the state of the exchequer. The financial burden is very heavy; not less than £3500 are needed before the end of the year. All that we can say is they ought to have it, for no more blessed work for Christ and humanity can be found in the whole of London. Let every reader who can possibly do so send to Rev. A. Sherwell, Cleveland Hall, Cleveland-street, Soho, London, for a copy of this report, which can be procured for sixpence.

THE PRESS PRAYER UNION.—A meeting has been arranged for Saturday afternoon, May 19, at 2 o'clock, in the rooms of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, 185½, Aldersgate-street. It is hoped that all Christian Pressmen will lend their influence to this effort, and as far as possible attend the meeting. Any communications or suggestions will be thankfully received, if sent to the care of the Hon. Sec. of the C.T.C.A., at the address given.

MR. VARLEY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

WHEN I wrote from Melbourne I was not clear as to my way. We began very auspiciously a Gospel campaign in Hawthorn Town Hall, but in the midst of the work entered upon a long and weary spell of hot weather, the glass ranging from eighty to ninety degrees. The nights were very trying, and it was almost impossible to hold the meetings with success. As the summer would not be over for some weeks, I therefore took passage for San Francisco, and after touching at Auckland, New Zealand, Samoa, and Honolulu, reached this city safely on March 14.

It was a most interesting passage of about 7500 miles, passing in three brief weeks out of the hot southern summer into conditions where a good overcoat is necessary. Curiously enough, we had two Mondays in the first week of February, and for the first time in my life found twenty-nine days in that month, when it was not leap year.

Here we are in the midst of a glorious springtide. Resurrection beauty pervades the whole scene. California flows with natural beauty, and overruns with productiveness; its fruits and harvests are wonderful; its lands undulate with hills, and valleys, and literally flow with milk and honey.

I see the hand of the Lord very clearly in my coming. I know nothing so important or necessary to the servant of Christ as to be in line with his Master's will. As necessary as the railroad tracks in order to the speed and way of the train, so is the will of our beloved Lord in order to real success. I did not know a creature in this Pacific Coast city when I landed. I made my way to Mr. McCoy, the well-known secretary of the Y.M.C.A. He appeared utterly astonished to see me. "Why, I thought you had been dead many years," he said. "I remember being with Mr. Moody some years back at one of his large meetings. He handed me a telegram, which stated that Henry Varley was dead, and I never heard it contradicted." "Well," I replied, "I am very much alive, praise the Lord."

Such was my introduction to San Francisco, and now the first month is closing in the midst of a work which is rapidly extending to the whole city. I met within a few days of landing numbers of the ministers and many of the Christian people of this great centre. The first mission was held in the City of Oakland (which lies about six miles across the beautiful bay) in the first Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, and Baptist Churches. The Lord has much people in the city, and my first work has been to let the children first be fed. This is the paramount need here; so the work has been mainly with the Lord's people. I suppose as many as a thousand people have been gathered to the afternoon week-day Bible studies. The testimony has filled me with joy and gratitude to God that I cannot describe. Many have been revived, brought back to the Father's love. The living Word has been mighty, sharper indeed than a two-edged sword. In all directions you hear it said, "The Bible is a new Book to me." "Many have been praying that God would visit the State in order to a widespread revival and awakening, and you are the answers to our prayers." At one meeting at least 1200 rose as testifying to definite blessing received.

A goodly number have found the Lord, but up to date we have not had large numbers regenerated. The lines here are very distinctly marked. The great camps of the unsaved living in the spheres of the world, the flesh, and the devil are difficult to get at. My work being in the churches has not contributed to the attendance of the great mass who are outside, and who will not come into the ordinary places of worship. I am anxious to secure the co-operation of many praying hearts in England, for we are launched into a great work.

I am now in Berkley for ten days. I have had about fifty invitations to hold services and missions. I cannot manage a tithe of the proffered work.

I begin a Bible teaching campaign in the city of San Francisco next week, where two of the largest buildings are secured. We are waiting upon God that He may do great things in this city.

How I wish I could be with you for the great Thanksgiving gatherings on May 1. I cannot, except in spirit. Many will remember our pledges before the Lord when we last met, and I, for one, am still claiming with reverent confidence the fulfilment of the promises which belong to whole-hearted surrender. Large numbers of the ministers in the city are very hearty in their sympathy, and we are longing for the strengthening might of his Spirit in the inner man.

I ask the continued prayers of God's children in England for the work. The Lord is very gracious to me on the score of health as well as grace; though I have scarcely had time to eat, much less rest, the past ten days, I feel strong, and work is a real joy. I have good news from Melbourne. All are well there. My beloved wife is not with me; yet I am not alone; how sweet his word, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

San Francisco, April 19. HENRY VARLEY.

EAST LONDON INSTITUTE.

ON Thursday afternoon last, friends of mission work in foreign lands mustered in large numbers at Harley House, Bow, E., to bid God-speed to workers about to leave for distant spheres, and to learn from the lips of returned missionaries some account of the blessing which has attended work for God in Africa. Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM presided, and a prayerful interest was evinced in all that was said on the subject of world-wide evangelisation.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, in some general remarks on the work of the Institute, said that during the past twenty-two years eight hundred men and women have been trained and sent forth into the great harvest field. The "Regions Beyond" Helpers' Union, which is only about two years old, has about 8000 members; its aim is to interest Christian people in the spread of the Kingdom of Christ. The work on the Congo is only six years of age, but it has eight stations; the language having been reduced to writing, a grammar formulated, and a vocabulary collected, two Gospels and other portions of Holy Scripture have been published, also a hymnal. Altogether, forty-eight missionaries have been sent from England, of whom thirteen have entered into rest.

Mr. COLE, from Bongandanga, told of "signs following" in Balololand, where he had laboured nearly five years. Eleven hundred miles from the mouth of the Congo river, in the interior of the continent, work has had its difficulties and trials, but he thanked God that there is now a native church, from which evangelists are going forth in various directions. At Bongandanga, after four years' preaching and teaching, there are over fifty church members; and the work takes the form of classes, preaching meetings, church gatherings,—just as in England. Mr. MORGAN, who has been attending to the export work of the Mission on the Lower Congo, said that at Lukunga there is a church of 600 members, seven smaller churches being also connected with the station. He told of villages in which the idols have been abolished, and mentioned other towns besides Lukunga in which collections are made in aid of spreading the Gospel. He was not disheartened by his residence of nearly four years on the Congo; he had devoted his life for Africa, and was desirous of being back at his post.

Referring to the great importance of such native efforts as the missionary brethren were enabled to describe, Dr. HARRY GUINNESS remarked that Mr. Rattray, the revered principal of Cliff College, the Derbyshire branch of the Institute, who has just died, expressed a parting wish that such money as he possessed might be devoted to the equipment of native evangelists for work in Africa. A lady, a friend of the Institute, had also sent £500 for the same purpose.

Mrs. Cole and Mrs. Bett, who are home on furlough, were present at the meeting, but there was no opportunity to hear them. Some warm-hearted words were spoken by Miss JONES and Miss WOOD, from Doric Lodge, who were within thirty hours of sailing for work on the Congo. Their testimonies were highly intelligent and beautifully expressed. They have both been doing good work in London, and those who were present will not soon forget their statements. Mr. H. M. Backhouse, who is leaving for Peru, was, with the others, commended to the Lord in prayer, led by Mr. E. H. Glenny.

Finally, an instructive and stimulating address was delivered by Rev. F. B. MEYER, based on Obad. 17. He showed that Christ is, as it were, a treasure-house in which are stored all needful wisdom, and grace, and power for life and service; and yet so many who are undoubtedly Christ's people fail to "possess their possessions." They pray for things that are already assured to them, not realising that wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption are theirs to be enjoyed and lived upon in the service of God.

MAY MEETINGS.

The Sunday School Union.

A whole series of capital meetings have been held during the past week in connection with the Sunday School Union, the annual meeting proper taking place on Thursday evening.

Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, who presided, dwelt in opening on the growth and progress of the Union, due, he believed to the fact that it honours the Word of God, not merely as the grandest, most wise and most trustworthy of human writings, but as God's book, as the Word of God written. As such we hold and teach it. After referring to difficulties and perplexities, he closed by quoting a pregnant utterance:—"Doubt your doubts, and believe your beliefs." Alderman F. F. Belsey made a brief statement, from which it appeared that the International Bible-reading Association has now a membership of more than half a million. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour is happily reported upon. Mr. Newton Jones, the Sunday-school evangelist, has conducted missions in various parts of the country. In all, 614 services and meetings have been held, and his work has met with much acceptance. Reports received from all parts of the Continental mission field have been of a most encouraging character. The agent of the Indian Sunday-school Mission writes: "This has been a year of much travel. The sum of my long journeys during nine months of the twelve does not fall far short of 14,000 miles. The number of teachers has largely increased. There are now connected with the ten Indian auxiliaries 4957 schools, containing 9558 teachers and 191,742 scholars." Mention is also made of the Teachers' Home of Rest at Hastings, the Children's Country Homes, the Convalescent Home at Bournemouth, and a large number of other auxiliary agencies. The number of scholars in the London auxiliaries alone who professed faith in Christ is 4129. During the year a number of workhouse schools have been established. The income of the past year amounted to £1580 19s. 9d., while the sum received from the profits of the business was £1514 17s. 5d., making in all £3095 17s. 2d. The total expenditure, including grants made, was £3920 13s. 9d., being £824 16s. 7d. in excess of the receipts. In addition, the special mission funds have received a sum of £2128 6s. 2d., making a gross total of £5224 3s. 4d.

Rev. G. Buchanan Ryley spoke of "The Sunday-school in a Time of Social and Religious Unrest." In the most trying crisis (when in other lands and ages serious popular outbreaks might have been feared) our people are quiet and enduring, an attitude he believed to be largely due to the early Christian training in the Sunday-schools. Amongst instances of this kind he recalled how in the agony of the cotton famine in Lancashire an excited meeting was being held, which might have ended in disturbance, when suddenly a girl's voice was heard in the crowd, a starving mill-operative, singing:

> Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
> The clouds ye so much dread
> Are big with mercy, and will break
> With blessing on your head.

Passion was stilled and peace maintained. Passing on, the speaker dwelt on the principles to be taught in dark days, such as that God is King of nations; that Jesus is our Lord and Master, and similar practical lessons for everyday life. Without some such teaching, in addition to the highest of all, there is always danger when work is scant, cupboards are bare, and children are clamouring for bread.

The Sunday-school Cantata Choir, which at intervals lent sweetness of music to the proceedings, here rendered a beautiful anthem, "Come unto Me, ye weary."

Rev. Dr. Scott, of India, spoke of the vast mass of heathendom, and of the fact that one-fifth of the entire human race is under Britain's sway in India. Surely in order that we might give them the Gospel we love. Among the means used to this end he reckoned that Sunday-school agencies occupy an important place. Having told the story of the introduction of Sunday-schools to India, showing how it had been the means of opening to private Christians a new sphere of Christian work which fast becomes missionary work. Amongst other cheering facts, he told of a number of villagers who, on applying for baptism, were examined by the missionaries. They answered fairly, but a little boy answered best of all. The missionary commended the boy, and put him aside as too young. But the natives protested: "Why he is our teacher; he is a Sunday-school boy, and has taught us all we know of Christianity." Of course it would not do to accept the learners and reject (even on plea of youth) the young teacher who had proved his faith by winning others. Among other things Dr. Scott pleaded for Bible pictures, prepared from photographs of Indian life. Millions of these could be circulated over India, paving the way for the message of the Gospel among those who cannot read the Bible, but can understand such pictures. Addresses followed by Revs. W. R. Mowll and J. Tolefree Parr.

The Bible Society.

The annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was a great success. The President, Lord Harrowby, was too ill to attend, so the chair was occupied by Lord Kinnaird, one of the vice-presidents. Rev. W. Major Paull read a summary of the report, which opened with a financial statement. The total receipts amounted to £233,363, which was only £921 less than during the preceding year. The expenditure was £214,970, which was below that of the previous year by £7877, leaving a balance in hand of £18,392. This balance removes the residue of a long-standing debt. As to the issues, the report stated that, at home and abroad, Bibles, Testaments, and portions were put into circulation to the grand total of 3.837,222. The almost world-wide field of the Society's operations was surveyed in outline in the report.

The Chairman concluded a hearty speech by relating a touching incident showing the character of the work of the Society's agents. In the autumn of 1893 a colporteur was climbing the woody hills of Galicia. He found in one of the huts a young forester whose leg had been crushed by the falling of a tree, and amputated, probably with the rude surgery of the nearest village. He was in mental as well as bodily agony—is it an easy thing for youth, in the prime of earliest manhood, in the fulness of strength, in the dawn of ambition and of love, to turn from them all in a moment and enter the shadowy house of pain? The kind stranger spoke to him of the only source of comfort, and read with him some of the words of Divine peace. But the sympathy seemed to have come too soon; the wound was too recent; and though at length he consented to have a Bible, his bearing was hopeless and defiant. A year passed, and once again the colporteur found himself climbing the wooded path he had climbed before. The scent of the pines, the hush of the forest, the clang at intervals of the distant axe, were all as they had been previously. He entered the hut, and at the table, in an invalid chair, but wasted almost beyond recognition, he saw his friend. In that weary year the glory of youth had vanished, the pomps of human life had been hurried from the stage, the last shadow was unfolding itself and about to fall. He was absorbed in reading; and the colporteur noticed, with a strange awe, that he was studying the volume he had sold him a year before. His head at length was slowly lifted; the faded and sunken eye could not at first recognise the stranger, but in a moment there shone in his face a light as if from heaven. "And then," writes the colporteur, "he addressed me in words like these:—'I cannot express my gratitude that you brought me this Bible and thus led me to God. You gave yourself much trouble when you saw me in my misery to induce me to buy the Scriptures, This is my only comfort, and I am happy, though I suffer fearfully. Since you were here my pain has greatly increased, but I am comforted, for I have found my Saviour, who so tenderly loved all the heavy-laden. I came to feel how miserable I was through my unbelief, but since I have known Jesus Christ I bear the load he laid on me. In his Word I find comfort and salvation.'" "I cannot tell," the colporteur adds, "what I felt. When the poor sufferer mentioned the Saviour's name his careworn face beamed with joy. A week later I returned, but the Lord had meanwhile taken the afflicted one home. His parents told me that during the last three days he repeatedly said, 'I long to die, and to be with the Lord.' His last word was, 'Lord Jesus!'"

The Dean of Norwich, in the course of a thoughtful address, maintained the inspiration and integrity of Holy Writ. He said: The Bible is the one perennial, immovable, universal power. Circulate it broadcast from one end of the world to the other. Let no soul for whom Christ died moan out his life knowing nothing of the God who made him, nothing of the God who loved him, nothing of Jesus Christ who shed his precious blood for him, nothing of the Holy Ghost who comforts and enlightens, who educates, inspires, invigorates, radiates, and blesses him, nothing of the means of grace, nothing of the hope of glory.

Rev. J. G. Greenhough, president of the Baptist Union, in a vigorous speech, said: There were people writing a little while ago to one of our religious newspapers to prove that the Bible was no longer popular, that it was no longer read, that it might be regarded indeed as antiquated and half obsolete; and those letters filled some of us with silent indignation. They were written by the people who know as little of the Book as they know of the religious heart of this great nation; people who find excuses for their own ignorance and indifference by charging the whole of religious society with the same defects; people who judged from what was in themselves only, who put their fingers upon their own sickly, feebly-beating religious pulses, and vainly think that they have their hand on the throbbing heart of the great religious world. It is very true that the Bible is always a dull and uninteresting book to those who have had no experience of its sanctities, just as Christianity seems to be always played out by those who have never been in it, and just as the Lord Jesus Christ Himself is always a failure to those who have never tried Him! No words can tell what the Bible is to those who have heard its living voice speaking to their beating hearts, who go to it day by day as for their daily bread, and drink from it every day as from a well of gladness and hope and salvation.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. W. E. Cousins, chief reviser of the Bible in Malagasy, Rev. R. B. de Wolf (member of the deputation to Australasia, 1894-5), Rev. Dr. Muirhead (of Shanghai), and Mr. Henry Morris (vice-chairman of the committee).

Moravian Missions.

The annual meeting of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, held on Thursday evening, was not largely attended; but those who constituted the assembly in the Lower Exeter Hall must have enjoyed the proceedings, and have been stimulated in their faith and labour for missions. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. A. Denny, who expressed his admiration of the Unitas Fratrum and its missionary operations.

Rev. W. Wetton Cox, secretary, read a summary of the seventy-seventh report, which showed that the work has gone on with gratifying spiritual results. From all parts of the field, the missionaries tell of extension, and urgent pleas are being received for the planting of more stations. As with other societies, so with this, a decreased income was lamented, the total received being £8707, or less than the previous year by £2095. New missions have been opened in East Central Africa and North Queensland, and fresh work among lepers has been undertaken in Surinam. There is no appeal for men: they are never wanting in the Moravian Church. The appeal is for funds, to send out the workers and maintain the evangelistic operations. It was announced that Prebendary Webb-Peploe had become a vice-president of the Association.

A hearty address was delivered by Rev. Hubert Brooke, who declared the Moravian Church to be the crown of the churches for obedience to the Lord's parting command. Hence, it is blessed above all others. When young he attended a Moravian school, and there laid the foundation of Scripture study upon which he had ever since been building. He asked how it was that, comparatively speaking, all Germany does so little, and the Moravian Church does so much for foreign missions. He replied that it is because the one has practically given up faith in God's Word, while the other holds to it sure and stedfast. While rationalistic Germany has excluded the miraculous element from Scripture, the Moravians have shown the power of the truths of Scripture to change the hearts and lives of the darkest and most cruel heathen.

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, related some of his experiences among the Moravian missionaries and the Esquimaux people at Labrador. Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, told the story of Gospel work in that island, and also described the labours of Moravian missionaries on the Batavia river, North Queensland. Finally, an address was delivered by Rev. F. Becker Shawe, who has for some years been "working and waiting" on the borders of the "great closed land" of Tibet. Though not able to report large results, he told of tokens of encouragement in the various stations of the mission. The Gospel has taken root, and patient effort is a duty which should find support in the assurance that no work for God can go unrewarded.

London City Mission.

The annual meeting of the London City Mission was held on Thursday last in Exeter Hall, and was largely attended by the workers and friends of the Mission. Mr. Miles MacInnes, M.P., was to have presided, but illness kept him away, and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., occupied the chair in his stead.

Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, one of the secretaries, read an abstract of the sixtieth report, which, though encouraging as a record of work, was in some respects depressing. The fact that the number of missionaries is fewer than some years ago, and that the funds are a good way below the mark reached twelve months ago, was deeply regretted. The year began with 477 missionaries, but when vacancies are filled up, the number will be seven more. The total receipts amounted to £48,754, or £19,866 less than during the preceding year, and the expenditure exceeded the income by £11,406. The report reviewed the social and moral condition of London. It pointed out that some years since, investigation revealed the fact that only fourteen per cent. of the whole population attended public worship at one and the same time, and that the proportion of the working classes who did so was far less—of working men only two per cent. If the increase in the population makes the proportion in the present day still less, the urgent need of aggressive evangelistic effort becomes the more apparent. With regard to the drinking habits of the people, the missionaries rendered sad accounts, and there was a consensus of opinion that the evil is increasing amongst women and young people of both sexes.

Betting and gambling are on the increase, and one worker writes:—"I have had gambling stopped in three factories this year: and it is now banished from most of the factories I visit. One firm has acknowledged the value of the Society's operations, and promised £10 a year to the support of the work." Some twenty of the missionaries visit the Sunday markets, which afford such sad evidence of the desecration of the Lord's Day. House-to-house visitation is one of the most important agencies of the Mission, and during the year upwards of three and a-half millions of visits and calls were paid—to people in their houses, workmen in warehouses, and the poorest of the poor in out-of-the-way slums and courts of the most overcrowded districts. The mission halls are nurseries of the churches, and 5828 persons were induced to attend public worship, 2108 became communicants for the first time, and 572 were restored to church fellowship. One missionary reported:—"It is very rarely that any meeting in my room closes without someone, or several, yielding to the claims of God." Another said:—"My room will hold some 400 people; and our average attendance is about 230 adults. We have had the joy, praise God, of dealing, during the year, with over one hundred anxious souls. Some, indeed, have only 'endured for a while,' but others, I am thankful to state, have proved themselves 'good soldiers of Jesus Christ.'"

The Mission has 121 special agents, who work among foreigners and men engaged in occupations which prevent their attendance in the preaching halls and rooms. Altogether half-a-million working men were thus reached. A particularly interesting effort is that directed to pressing the Gospel upon the landlords of public-houses, their families and employées. There are no fewer than fourteen thousand houses, within the Metropolitan area, licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, and probably 50,000 souls is a low estimate of the families and dependents. The Society has appointed twenty-seven men to visit about 10,000 of these houses; and the missionary who has what is probably the most difficult public-house district reports that his visits are not desired in sixteen out of the 539 public-houses and dining-rooms, but even in these sixteen cases he is able to pay occasional visits.

Large figures represented the varied operations of the Society: over 5,000,000 tracts distributed, also 42,000 New Testaments and portions, and 25,000 books lent. The workers sent children to Sunday-schools, 6391; visited adults who died, 7935; influenced dealers to close shops on the Lord's Day, 89; rescued fallen women, or sent them home, 488; drunkards reclaimed, 1853. In conclusion, the committee earnestly appealed to all who hold fast to the inspiration of the Bible, the necessity of an atonement for sin, the Divinity of Christ and the vicarious nature of his sufferings, the need of birth "from above," and of sanctification by the Spirit of God, to support them in their evangelistic endeavours.

The Chairman bespoke increased interest in the work of the Mission and sympathy with its agents. The problem of our great cities can only be grappled with by means of the Gospel of Christ, and no one could say to what a degree the missionaries have prevented social disorder. Rev. E. A. Stuart spoke heartily in support of the Mission, and was followed by Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch pointed out that attendance at public worship is an index of the degree to which men recognise the claims of God. In the past, the spirit and customs of church life have been the reverse of inviting to those outside. The Christian community at large have not taken to heart those who are without Christ; the tendency of the well-favoured to seek the suburbs does not exonerate Christian people from care for those who are left behind. He appealed for encouragement to be extended to the missionaries, and more liberal support to the Society.

Mr. Robert Smith, late missionary in Fulham, delivered a powerful address, showing that the missionaries not only deliver the Gospel message, but commend it to the people by entering to the utmost of their power into their sorrows and joys.

Medical Missionary Association.

The annual meeting of this Society was held last Thursday afternoon in the Lower Exeter Hall. The chairman, Dr. C. Y. Biss, after a warm vindication of the twofold basis of medical mission work, said, "This Association trains for medical mission service men who are proceeding to full qualification. It helps them by sympathy, by advice, by bringing them into contact with the various great missionary societies, by guiding the development of their gifts in a missionary as well as in a medical direction, and by financial aid where need for such aid exists. It has been the means of bringing various home medical missions into being. Those at Canning Town, St. Pancras, and Islington especially owe much to the fostering care of the Association."

The secretary, Dr. Jas. L. Maxwell, emphasised one or two points in the report. This last year has been the most prosperous, the most successful of any in the history of the Association. There are twenty students under the wing of the Association. All these, with one exception, are proceeding to full qualification. The better qualified a doctor is, the better vantage ground will he have to speak of his Master. The more skilful his operations, the more wonderful his cures in the eyes of the heathen, the more authoritatively will he be able to commend the true Lifegiver to their hearts, the more willingly will they listen, and the more, therefore, by his gifts, will he be able to magnify the Lord whom he loves and seeks to serve. Our training home is undenominational. We have representatives of the Church of England, and of the Wesleyan, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Congregational churches among our students.

We have one great and ever-increasing need. There is no training home where intending lady medical missionaries are received. As the medical mission movement grows, and as the women's medical movement gathers strength, this need becomes more sharply accentuated. Again and again I am asked, "Is there any undenominational training home where lady students looking to the mission field could be received?" There is none. It is a lack, and it would be a good thing if the lack could be supplied. The Children's Medical Missionary Society acts as auxiliary to the association. This society is now in its twenty-first year. During the last twenty years it has been the means of bringing the subject of medical missions before many thousands of girls and boys who are doubtless likely, in not a few cases, themselves to engage personally in this service, either as medical missionaries or nurses.

Other speakers followed—Dr. Margaret Pearse, representing home medical missions, and Drs. Rigg and Whitney, and Mr. Mackay, representing medical missions in China, Japan, and Madagascar respectively.

The London Jews Society.

The friends of Church Missions to the Jews occupied Exeter Hall on Friday morning. The report, read by the secretary, Rev. W. Fleming, stated that the aggregate income has amounted to the almost unprecedented figure of £42,266 19s. 0d. Of this amount £4706 7s. 8d. has been given for special purposes outside the sphere of the Society's general fund (namely, the Jerusalem Hospital Building Fund, the Safed Hospital Building Fund, and other objects), leaving £37,560 11s. 4d. available for general purposes; and, when from this amount the adverse balance of £4953 5s. 4d. on last year's account has been deducted, there remains a sum of £32,607 6s. 0d. to meet the year's expenditure of £35,648 15s. 2d. on the general fund account, and, consequently, a deficit of £3,041 9s. 2d. The hospital new building fund has now reached the sum of £8,479 4s. 5d., and the work has made fair progress. During the year 6396 Bibles and portions, 5204 New Testaments and portions, 326 prayer-books and portions, 27,276 missionary publications in various languages have been issued.

As to the sale of Palestine-place, it was stated that in 1811 the Society acquired on a ninety-nine years' lease a property of about five acres in the Bethnal Green district. On this site buildings were put up, including the Episcopal Jews' Chapel, the Hebrew Boys' and Girls' Schools, and the Missionary Training College. Premises were also rented to the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, an entirely distinct society. In 1910 this property would all pass from the Society's control, not merely without any compensation, but with some heavy charges for dilapidations. The committee had long looked forward to that time with grave anxiety; and so, when very unexpectedly, within the last few months, the Bethnal Green Board of Guardians arranged for the purchase of the freehold, the latter, after obtaining the best advice, and ascertaining that the ultimate proposal was fair, and even liberal, felt they had no option but to consider it. It was plainly better to move now, with £17,500 for the obtaining of fresh quarters for their institutions than fifteen years hence with nothing coming in, and perhaps even heavy outgoings and dilapidations.

Many, no doubt, will feel strong reluctance at parting with a spot associated with the names of Lewis Way, Alexander McCaul, Cartwright, Stern, Brühl, and many others, and will regret the closing of a chapel where so many fathers of the Church have preached the everlasting Gospel. But the one consideration paramount at all times in the counsels of the Society must be how best the faith of Christ may be promoted amongst the Jews. Several circumstances concur to make it probable that the change, whatever passing inconvenience it may cause, will prove in the end a positive advantage to missionary work. Particulars followed of the various operations at home and abroad, of the missions carried on in London and the provinces, and on the Continent as well as in the East, as at Galilee, Jaffa, Jerusalem, Damascus, and in Persia. In Abyssinia, Algiers, Morocco, Tunis, good work is going on. Special mention is also made of the new Medical Mission Hospital being built in Jerusalem.

Sir John H. Kennaway, who presided, glanced with profound thankfulness at the state of things revealed by the reports of the great missionary societies this week. Notwithstanding depression in trade and similar hindrances, the income has shown a very satisfactory increase, and the startling deficits of the past seem to be about to disappear. As to this Society, the aggregate income (over £42,000) has never before been equalled, although such is the growth of the operations that there is even now a deficit of £3041. The chairman proceeded to enter upon detailed and careful explanations as to the sale of the Palestine-place property, maintaining that, while the familiar buildings will be lost, the work will go on as vigorously as before, although under somewhat changed circumstances. The chairman closed with a stirring plea on behalf of the great Jewish Missionary Society.

Archdeacon Howell said he had listened with deep interest to the abstract of the report, showing, as it did, a far-reaching and fruitful work among the seed of Abraham. He told, in eloquent and glowing terms, how his interest had been kindled in the Jews by a lady—who has now gone to her rest—whose patience and persistence on behalf of God's ancient people at length broke down his prejudice. Proceeding, he dealt with the Jews as God's living witnesses and God's living warning to all men. He made a strong point of the inveterate tendency in all human events to see merely man's unwisdom or cruelty, failing to recognise the hand of God in it. This applied with peculiar force to Israel, whose sufferings, in Russia for example, are not simply due to the wrath of man, but are the direct fulfilment of God's Word. In a ringing closing passage, he implored his hearers to see they did not stand between God and the fulfilment of his purposes in regard to his people Israel.

In more measured, but equally sympathetic terms, Mr. James Inskip followed, dealing with the profit and necessity of giving heed to God's purposes concerning the Jews. But in what spirit are we to approach the Jews? That of hostility and suspicion? Certainly not; but as those who rejoice in their history and sacred writings, as having received from them our blessings, desiring that they should share our spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. Rev. S. T. Bachert, missionary at Hamburg, dealt with certain familiar objections deeply rooted in many hearts against the Jews, and added a brief and encouraging account of the work of God in Hamburg and amongst German Jews, showing that, while many deplore absence of the results, there are results of a solid and cheering kind.

Vigorous addresses followed by Canon Bardsley, of Huddersfield, and Mr. T. J. Victor Buxton.

The Navvy Mission Society.

At the annual meeting of the Navvy Mission, held on Monday week, at the Church House, Westminster, an encouraging report was presented by the secretary, the Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston. As large schemes are now being initiated, and as the great new railway to London has actually begun, the Society makes a special appeal for more funds in order that it may keep pace in some degree with the growing need for missionaries. The many thousands of navvies necessary to construct the new line to London will lay great responsibilities upon the Society. Miss Garrett, who has been the moving spirit of the society, has after a painful illness been able to resume a considerable share of the movement. The work of the missionaries during the year had been much helped by the gift or purchase of bicycles.

The Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, who occupied the chair, drew attention to the fact that the Society would have to double its income to keep pace with the work, for whereas last year the expenditure was nearly £5000, the receipts only amounted to £2649. Navvies are a distinctive people, and not easily dealt with; therefore, if through lack of means they had to reduce their staff of experienced missionaries, it would be extremely difficult later on to replace them. Canon McCormick gave his experience of navvies, agreeing with the previous speaker in describing them as a distinctive and strange class of people. Rev. R. E. Adderley bore testimony from his own experience to the great help the Navvy Mission had been to many of the parish clergy. Revs. George Everard and W. D. Petter spoke briefly.

London Missionary Society.

Exeter Hall was crowded with a happy throng of children—numbering, possibly, 3000 or 4000—on Saturday afternoon to witness what is called a Missionary Demonstration in connection with the centenary of the London Missionary Society. The hall was picturesquely decorated with banners, Chinese scrolls, and missionary emblems, while missionaries of both sexes and of many nationalities, attired in their gorgeous native robes, were seated on the platform. China sent nine, including three ladies, Madagascar six, India fifteen, Africa four, the South Seas three, and New Guinea and the West Indies two each. Salutations in the various native tongues were freely applauded; hymns in Hindustani, Chinese, and Malagasy were sung; and addresses were delivered by Rev. C. G. Sparham (Hankow), Rev. E. Lloyd (Kanye), Miss Leila Robinson (Berhampur), Mr. J. Richardson (Madagascar), and Mr. J. B. Glasgow (West Indies). The chair was occupied by Rev. Stanley Rogers, and the children were greatly delighted with the proceedings and the spectacle.

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission.

The annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall (parlour), on Wednesday, May 1, Rev. J. E. Campbell-Colquhoun presiding.

Most interesting details were given of mission work in Baakleen Mission in the Lebanon, and the urgent need of more missionaries to evangelise the forty villages lying round that seldom, if ever, hear the Gospel message. The Society had already sent an extra missionary, a missionary nurse, and a Bible-woman to reinforce the station, which is a medical mission. It was started some years ago by Miss Smith, who has now left it to the charge of the P. and L. N. M., but still continues the superintendance. In addition to a large number of persons visited and conversed with, 1595 patients were actually relieved last year at the new dispensary. Splendid opportunities occur when the governor holds his court at Baakleen. He brings in his train nobleman, officials, and soldiers in large numbers. A good work is also done among the upper classes.

With regard to the Jerusalem work, which has been sustained and blessed during the past year, the report stated that when it was taken up seven years ago, the Moslem women were untouched by any society, but since that time a large number of English and American ladies were testifying for Christ. They have only to acquaint themselves with the languages that enable them to speak to the people and they have many opportunities.

The Ragged School Union.

The fifty-first anniversary of this great home missionary society was held on Monday evening in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., Earl Compton presiding, and H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany distributing the prizes and taking a very warm interest in the proceedings.

The noble Chairman, in opening, showed that it pays better to save and teach the children than to let them grow up a burden on society. The Ragged School teachers are serving the best interests of the nation. The work of the R.S.U. is growing on every hand, but the funds have not kept pace with the needs, and a larger income is imperatively demanded. The R.S.U. is not merely a federal union, but a great working society, carrying on large and beneficent operations. It is responsible directly for many missions, such as the Shaftesbury Welcome (Battersea) and the Ashley Mission (Bethnal Green). Its operations among drift children and home cripples now extend all over London. The first named aims at bringing in the lowest dregs even yet outside; the second at cheering, instructing, aiding, and brightening the lives of hundreds of children "born to suffer," poor little prisoners for life by reason of mental or physical incapacity. Then eight Holiday Homes are maintained; the foundation stone of one at Southend for cripples will be laid next Tuesday (May 14) by H.R.H. Princess Louise. Over 5000 children and young people were benefited last year by these Holiday Homes, besides many thousands who enjoyed a day in the country. The Clothing Fund meets the needs of hundreds of shivering, miserable mites in Ragged and Board Schools all over London. The Relief Fund helped thousands in the terrible distress of the recent prolonged frost.

The second department of the work of the Union is in aiding to maintain the 212 local Ragged School Missions, which report 55,000 children in average attendance in London alone, with 264 Bible-classes and a bewildering variety of helpful agencies amongst young and old. The educational and social operations include day schools, free night schools, institutes, clubs, industrial and recreation classes, shoeblack brigades, crèches, Bands of Hope, penny banks, and clothing clubs. These widely-varied agencies are worked by an army of 5,287 teachers, drawn from all ranks of society and all Christian denominations, who, giving time and strength to this great cause, feel they have a just claim to liberal support.

The total receipts were £16,886 11s. 10d., and payments £16,903 3s. 11d., leaving a deficit of £16 12s. 1d. More workers and more funds are sorely needed for this peculiarly beneficent enterprise.

After an interlude of song her Royal Highness distributed 666 faithful service prizes and certificates to the successful scholars and school representatives.

Canon Barker made a glowing appeal for the children, for what the children are to-day the country will be thirty years hence. He wished we could see that superfluous wealth of the land, lying idle in the banks, poured into the treasury of God, putting new heart and energy into his workers among the poor. Rev. W. Hardy Harwood showed how in ten minutes (the time allotted him) people might be set on fire with enthusiasm for service among the children. If they would give ten minutes to visiting a ragged school, or a helpless cripple, or to reading the report, they could not but feel the importance of maintaining such work.

Rev. W. J. Brown, in ringing closing words, rejoiced in all that benevolence and philanthropy had done; but rejoiced above all in souls won to the Saviour. Himself an old ragged-school teacher, he thanked God for the results he had seen, and he claimed liberal and generous support.

Religious Tract Society.

Count Bernstorff, of Berlin, presided over the ninety-sixth annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society in Exeter Hall on Friday evening. A large part of the platform was occupied by a choir of some 600 children from the elementary schools, who sang a variety of lively pleasant children's songs during the evening.

The secretaries' report showed an ever-increasing circulation of the books, tracts, and periodicals published by the Society. During the year they have issued 728 new publications, of which 179 were tracts. Grants of tracts, books, etc., have been made during the year to the value of nearly £26,000. The Society has issued its publications in 212 languages, and grants of Bibles, tracts, hymn-books, and other evangelical literature have been sent out to almost every part of the world where Protestant missionaries are working.

Count Bernstorff is a hearty advocate of such work as the Society is doing, as he traces his own conversion largely to the influence of some stray tracts which came into his hands as a young man. Referring particularly to this Society, he said he specially admired it for its catholicity of spirit in that it helps the workers of all Protestant communities without discrimination as to sect. It was a standing witness to the fact that it is possible for those of different denominations to be in agreement not only in matters of theory but in combination in practical effort to extend Christ's kingdom.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence reminded tract distributors that they were really workers together with God in making known his Gospel, and that they need desire no higher privilege than that. Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, as a missionary from a far-off field, warmly thanked the Society on behalf of hundreds of other missionaries who receive invaluable help from them. In all his travels amongst the islands of the South Pacific he did not know of one mission station that was not indebted to the Society. They not only got quantity, however, but they can always rely on the quality of the Society's publications, and distribute them confidently, knowing that they all enlighten the readers and point them to Jesus Christ.

A few bright pleasant words were spoken to the children by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald.

THE UNEMPLOYED PROBLEM.—In a very striking and far-reaching article in the May English Illustrated Magazine, Dr. Parker says that "if London could be rebuilt in any adequate sense, the problem of the unemployed would be laid at rest for at least half a century."

THE OPIUM COMMISSION was one of the principal topics at the annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association held last week in the Westminster Town Hall, London, under the presidency of Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. The unanimous opinion of the meeting regarding the illegal premature disclosure of the Commission's report was voiced in a resolution proposed by Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., recording an "indignant protest against the action of Mr. Jervoise Baines, C.S.I., the secretary of the Royal Commission on Opium, in conveying to the editor of The Times the proof-sheets of the report." Following this protest, Mr. William Crosfield, M.P., moved a resolution that was adopted with equal unanimity, expressing the meeting's "deep gratitude to Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., for his fearless and consistent action on the Opium Commission," and declaring that "Mr. Wilson has thereby rendered invaluable service to the cause of temperance and morality throughout the world."

THE PASTORS' COLLEGE CONFERENCE.

By ONE OF THE MINISTERS.

The eighth Conference of the Pastors' College Evangelical Association was held last week. As in former years, these gatherings began with a meeting for prayer on Monday afternoon and a public meeting in the Tabernacle, when various short addresses were given by brethren from the country. The attendance of pastors this year was slightly in excess of any previous record, and showed no diminution of interest in a form of reunion which has steadily grown ever since its original commencement, under the late beloved founder of the College. Doubtless, the fact that this was the first occasion when the Conference met under the presidency of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon had something to do with the largeness of the gathering. It was natural that men in whose hearts the memory of the father was so sacredly enshrined should be drawn to the son on whom the mantle of succession had fallen. Sympathy, more than curiosity, was the magnet of attraction; and it is safe to say that if good wishes could bear their object successfully through the responsible labours of the week, the new president's success was ensured from the outset. It required no special gift in the discerning of spirits to be a thought-reader on the memorable Tuesday morning (April 30), when the son of the late C. H. S. had to speak from his father's most famed rostrum. Sympathy whetted, rather than otherwise, the edge of the critical understanding, and accentuated the ordeal which the new president had to face. It was both a relief and satisfaction that the result more than fulfilled the highest anticipations formed.

Rather than attempt to give an outline of the subject-matter of Pastor Thos. Spurgeon's address, we prefer to sum it up in a term as expressive as it is compendious, describing it as being in the true historic sense of the term "Spurgeonic." There was the same colloquial form as of old, the same racy diction and orthodox ring, and if there was at first somewhat less of abandon, the suggestion of stiffness vanished quite as the vessel of delivery began to get under weigh. It added more than a spice of originality to this "Spurgeonic" deliverance that the entire address had a nautical setting, and that "the great and wide sea" was ransacked for horrors as well as treasures in order to illumine the hindrances and helps of the Christian ministry. We are but expressing the general sense of the Conference when we affirm that the "Spurgeonic" character of the new president's message far exceeded the expectations of even the most sanguine among the brethren, and was indeed so pronounced as practically to ensure the son a continuance of the post of honour so long and securely held by the father.

There is no need to dwell on the miscellaneous list of business which followed the president's address, further than to say that the number of members now on the roll is 746, and that, save in the appointment of new secretaries, the holders of office are unchanged.

In the evening a kind of picnic gathering was held at the Orphanage, the speakers being Pastor A. G. Brown, Dr. Churcher (from North Africa), and W. Huntley (missionary from China). At that meeting Mr. Brown struck a responsive chord in the hearts of all when he declared, with the accent of an entire conviction, that he transferred all his allegiance from C. H. Spurgeon to his son and successor—a sentiment which was greeted with round after round of enthusiastic applause.

The morning gathering on Wednesday, May 1, was the most intense and spiritually fruitful of the series. After much prayer and the reading of letters from Pastor Charles Spurgeon and the College brethren of South Africa, a conference was opened by Professor Marchant on the subject of "How to Maintain and Increase the Pastor's Spiritual Life." Three points were dealt with in this paper: (1) the knowledge of what we owe to grace already; (2) the knowlege of ourselves, though saved; (3) the knowledge of Christ as our abiding fount of grace. Pastor H. E. Stone, who followed, laid stress on the need of feeding on the Word, fellowship with Christ, holding fast to the Divine purpose concerning us, and entertaining the hope of the Lord's return. The most stirring address was given by Rev. J. S. Morris, of Harley House, who, without the crutch of notes or paper, gave utterance to the thoughts that burned within him. We cannot better summarise this address than by saying that it seemed to us in listening to it, as if Marshall's renowned treatise on the "Mystery of Sanctification" had been boiled down and given forth in the form of a strong extract. To those who have studied that masterpiece, the positions taken by Mr. Morris will be both cogent and perspicuous, (1) that we by faith realise our standing in Christ; (2) that we constantly realise by faith the Personal Presence of Christ; (3) that by faith we, in like manner, realise and rely on the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; and, lastly, that we continually by faith hold the unseen world in view.

Pastor Preece, of Maidenhead, gave a new turn to the discussion by pointing out that spiritual culture is a subject which, as the types of men so greatly vary, calls for a corresponding diversity of method. Enlarging on this, he instanced the bearing of diet on spiritual culture, and the special need devolving on some, more than others, to curb the body that the spirit might not suffer. In his view there was a distinct place for rules and for methodistic discipline; a view, which, having been combatted by Pastor H. D. Brown, of Dublin, was shown by Pastor Wainwright, of Bournemouth, to be by no means destitute of foundation. Mr. Wainwright's remarks were exceedingly opportune as serving to relieve friction and to import a judicial temper into the discussion of what was really a many-sided question. We had not only the point of failure to mark, but the point higher up at which the first false step began. Innocent things were often a snare, and he who would wisely regulate his life, must not ignore this fact. Another aspect of the subject was developed by Pastor Murphy, of Hull, who pointed out that the fulfilment of positive duty was the best means of Spiritual increase; and that the largest blessing was realised by those who were most unsparing of themselves in spiritual ministry to others.

The annual tea and supper were held in the afternoon and evening of the same day. Mr. F. L. Edwards, of Loughton, presided, and was supported by Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, the president of the College, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, the tutors, and various ministers and friends. The report for the year was submitted by Dr. Spurgeon, and served to show the exceeding great acceptance which the College men continued to find with the churches. Important addresses were given by Pastors Cuff, Hiley, and others, on the merits of the College work, while Pastor T. Spurgeon explained the reason of his brother's absence and the cheering results of his present tour in South Africa. Personal testimonies were given by Brethren Pollard, of Silverton, and Sloane, of East Ham, while Mr. Meredith favoured the meeting with an account of a visit recently paid to Tangiers, where Brother Patrick labours. The receipts taken at the supper on behalf of the College funds amounted to £1290, a sum considerably below the average of former years, but since somewhat increased.

Thursday morning's session was enlivened at an early stage by a cheering message received from Professor Fergusson, now invalided, based on the words, "Fear not; believe only," after which Dr. J. A. Spurgeon delivered his address, as vice-president of the Conference, on "The Resurrection of Christ and the Christian's present relation to it." This address took the form of a thoughtful and, we may add, masterly exposition of Hebrews xiii. 21-23. The six strands composing this rope were untwisted and severally adjudged:—(1) The fact of Christ's resurrection, the supreme fact which faith and testimony concern; (2) the Great Agent effecting it, "The God of Peace," the New Testament designation of God; (3) the means employed in bringing it to pass, "the blood of the everlasting covenant," words which showed what a Royal rope this was; (4) the Great One brought from the dead described in his nature, and specially in his office, for in virtue of his resurrection He is both Lord and Shepherd Great; (5) the object of his resurrection, to rearticulate us, and thereby to perfect us in every good work to do his will; and, finally, the result, that God may be glorified both in his Son and in the lives and resurrection of all the redeemed. This address was unexceptionable in tone and matter; and, after a brief interval, was followed by an impetuous address on "The Historic Fruits of Calvinism," by Pastor H. D. Brown, of Dublin. It is impossible to describe the electrical effects of this delivery. What with the rapidity of the utterance, which resembled an express engine at its maximum, the shrill key of expression, and the uninterrupted flow of Irish humour, combined with the strain upon the gravity, by which the gravest were overcome, it was with the utmost difficulty one could keep up with the eager speaker in his course. Still, there was nothing ultra in the Calvinism so warmly advocated and lavishly praised, and if feeling was strong and mirth flanked every movement, the address bespoke the grasp of a masculine and devout understanding.

We regret our inability to enlarge on the public meeting, held in the evening, in the Tabernacle, by which the proceedings of this day were brought to a close. The interest of this meeting chiefly centred in Pastor Latimer's speech, formerly of Colne, a brother who, because of his stand against worldly invasion in his church, felt called in conscience to back his protest by the resignation of that pastorate. At this meeting, also, Pastor H. D. Brown spoke with marked spiritual point and practical effect.

The Conference closed with Friday morning's session (May 3), when, after many prayers, the President of the Conference delivered the farewell sermon on Luke x. 20. The subject was joy, as expounded and illumined by our blessed Lord; and proved a feast of fat things. The Conference, before breaking up, passed a most cordial vote of thanks to Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, both for the benefit received through her Book Fund, and especially for her valued Conference gift, "Till He Come." A similar vote was recorded to Mrs. J. A. Spurgeon for the gift of the record of her husband's life. A communion service, followed by the singing of the 122nd Psalm, the brethren standing up and joining hands, constituted, with a few words of Benediction, the impressive finale.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

The month of April found this hall still undergoing renovation; consequently, the services in connection with Mr. Charrington's Mission were continued in the Children's Hall on week-nights and Sunday mornings, and in the Paragon Theatre on Sunday nights.

The first fortnight's mission was taken by Mr. Noah Taylor, son of the late William Taylor (navvy), and Mr. H. J. Mathews, both of the Evangelisation Society. They were followed by Mr. Walter Notman, also one of Captain Smith's evangelists. Mr. Notman, who is a great favourite with the friends of the Hall, had a very hearty reception, and much prayer was offered for his mission. He is an able speaker, and possesses that rare qualification of being able to make his audience feel that he at least means what he says, and is a firm believer in the truth he sets forth. God has wonderfully blessed his efforts. The first Sunday morning he gave a most powerful discourse, and at the close a most gentlemanly person voluntarily came into the inquiry-room, and, with tears, besought someone to pray with him, asking God to pardon and forgive his backsliding. He left the hall a happy man. The immense audiences at the theatre hung upon his utterances, which cut at the root of sin and uplifted Jesus as the Saviour and only remedy for salvation. The result of such faithful preaching was that workers were seen all over the theatre kneeling and praying with the anxious. Much good work has been done for the Lord, and many will date their conversion from the services held in one of Satan's strongholds.

The Great Assembly Hall has now been reopened, as will be seen by our reports of the thanksgiving meetings last week.

NEW FOREST GIPSIES.—A correspondent writes from Ringwood, Hants, telling of the good work being done among gipsies in the New Forest, by Mr. and Mrs. Bullen, whose work, he says, should be encouraged by all sections of Christians.

JOHN-STREET MISSION, PENDLETON.—At the thirty-second annual meeting of this mission the Mayor of Salford was in the chair. Mr. J. Sugden, hon. sec., presented the report, stating that the average weekly attendance at the Ragged School was 1323, The recreative and social classes had also been well attended. During the period of distress in the winter, 4860 meals had been given to children and over 500 to adults. Five meetings, etc., for adults had been held weekly in the hall, and the total attendances for the year had reached 140,940. The Mayor said he was sure the mission had done very good work in Pendleton during the thirty-two years of its existence. Short addresses were given by Revs. Carrotte, J. S. Harris, Mr. T. Johnson, and others.

WEAVER BROTHERS AT LEITH.

A GOSPEL mission, under the auspices of Leith United Evangelistic Association, was concluded a few days ago. Messrs. Weaver Brothers were the evangelists. Their honoured father, Richard Weaver, joined them at the close of the first week, and addressed several meetings. Ministers of nearly all the denominations in the town took a practical interest in the movement.

The week-night meetings until April 12 were held in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and were largely attended. A most helpful conference was held in the E.U. Church during the afternoon of April 13. The subject of conference was "Revival Work." Several local ministers and others, besides the Weaver Brothers, took part. The second week of the mission was opened by a large and richly-blessed meeting in St. Andrew's-place U.P. Church on the evening of April 14. All the other meetings until the close of the mission, with the exception of the third Sunday evening meeting, were held in St. Paul's Established Church. This Sunday evening meeting was held in the Circus. Over 3,000 people were crowded into the building, and many had to be turned away.

The meetings in St. Paul's Parish Church were very largely attended. On the two nights when Richard Weaver gave his life-story, and on the last his sons were present, the large building was crowded to excess. In addition to all these meetings there was an open-air meeting and a prayer meeting each night. Much prayer was offered on behalf of the mission, and many devoted Christian workers exerted themselves in various ways to make the visit of the evangelists a mighty blessing to the town. With the utmost confidence it can be said God has heard the prayers of his people and honoured with great blessing the preaching and singing of his servants.

One result of the mission—and a very important result it is in the light of the injury caused through lack of it—has been a breaking down of sectarian exclusiveness. Christians of different denominations have been brought together, and in their common supplications and common efforts for the salvation of souls have to all appearance forgotten some of the differences which used to divide and to a large extent render inoperative the Christian forces in aggressive work. Another result of the Mission has been the quickening of Christians to a higher standard of living and to a deeper interest in the work of soul-winning.

A noteworthy feature of the mission was the large number of people who came forward to shake hands with the veteran evangelist, and to say that he was the means of their conversion twenty or thirty years ago. On the last night of the mission I heard a woman say that she was converted at her home in Shetland through reading the life of Richard Weaver, and that her two sisters were converted under his preaching, the one in Liverpool, the other in London. THOMAS MILLAR,

Minister of St. Paul's Parish Church, Leith.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE summer season is now upon us, and we are daily sending forth preachers to races, fairs, and fêtes, and to open-air services, both in town and country, where tracts are given in great quantities. I am sorry to say our supplies are on the point of exhaustion, while we are quite without funds to make purchases.

Last year we received 675,951 tracts, etc., from ninety-three donors, but need an average of a million yearly. Our forthcoming report gives many instances of blessing attending the work of distribution. We should be deeply thankful for a renewal of past kind help. FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.

KESWICK FUND FOR RETURNED MISSIONARIES.

Dear Sir,—I have had seven applications for help towards visiting the Keswick Convention, from different Christian workers, but as yet I have in hand only £8 7s. towards expenses. At the rate at which subscriptions are coming in I fear I shall have to disappoint many of these friends. I am therefore constrained to write once more to say how pleased I shall be to receive donations towards this fund.—Faithfully yours, WELLESLEY C. BAILEY.

SCRIPTURE READERS IN IRELAND.

THE seventy-fourth annual report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland describes an interesting work among the artisans and peasantry of the Sister Isle. The Readers, forty-five in number, are placed under Christian superintendents. In populous places they work as city missionaries. They also itinerate the rural districts, making known the Gospel as it is set forth in the Word of God. Their method is to preach the Truth rather than to denounce Romish superstition; while a spirit of controversy may close anxious minds against inquiry, a spirit of love is calculated to win attention for any message which kindness may wish to deliver.

The report gives a number of letters from superintendents and Readers. One of the former says: "Your valued Reader is most useful in the city, carefully attending to the poor of all denonimations: the sick and afflicted are duly considered in his labours. I am often surprised that he seems to be as great a friend amongst the Roman Catholics as he does amongst our own people. He never loses an opportunity of speaking for the Master in whose service he works so energetically and well." A Reader writes: "With the sick I have had a word of comfort from the Book; the Lord gave me a word in the train, also to the car-driver and some fellow-passengers, and to beggars and tramps by the way. I must say that not from anyone to whom I spoke did I receive an unfriendly word, and I was able to put the truth before a good many. The time was short, but I felt that in many cases the good Lord brought me to the people that I might deliver the message to them."

The itinerant mission work proceeds with encouragement. One of the Readers laboured among the militia during training in county Down. Another writes:—"On arriving at B——, I was asked by a brother Scripture-reader to go with him to visit a sick woman. On entering her house she said, 'Oh, Mr. B——, I am dying; I am lost; I am damned.' After some time we succeeded in calming her mind, and showing her that God still waited to be gracious, and that 'Now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of salvation,' even to her if she would let go all other hopes, and cast herself entirely upon the merits of Jesus Christ. We each knelt by her bedside, and offered a short prayer, asking God to make his love known to her, as it is in Jesus Christ. We had the consolation of leaving her quite calm and peaceful. My brother Reader saw her the next day, when she said, 'Mr. B——, I am not afraid to die now. I see that Jesus did it all, and I am now resting my all on Him.' . . . It has been very encouraging to me during this tour to find how freely any enlightened or educated Roman Catholic will converse on religious subjects. One man said to me, when speaking of the Lord's coming, that 'There is a great change over our people of late. Many of us are getting very shaky on some of the doctrines of our Church, because we are reading for ourselves,' etc."

The Society's income last year amounted to £3294. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the secretary, Captain Jas. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

THE BAPTIST ZENANA MISSION reports twenty-four stations in India, besides a group of villages south of Calcutta; a staff of fifty missionaries in active service (four in China), four others recruiting at home, 200 native Biblewomen and school teachers, eighty schools with 3337 children in attendance. Regular instruction is given in 1300 Zenanas, and Bible lessons in 1707 additional homes. In the Evangelistic itinerating work the missionaries visit 356 different villages.

THE ENGLISH PRIMATE ON CHURCH UNION.—The Archbishop of Canterbury has addressed the following letter to the clergy and laity of his diocese:—"When we consider the terrible separations of the past, the occasions which gave rise to them, the hardness and uncharitableness which have ensued, their multiplications, the undeniable hindrances which they present to the conversion of the world and to its attraction to our Lord's teaching and discipleship, and when we now see so many communions and confessions, Presbyterian, Nonconformist, Roman, at home and abroad, and in America, moved to desire, and to seek Christian unity, who can doubt that this is of the Lord? I earnestly trust that in our churches and chapels, as last year, the prayer for unity may be most devoutly offered in the services of Whit Sunday, and that constant prayer for such unity as may be Christ's will may ascend from many hearts."

A CONFERENCE IN EDINBURGH.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—The Conference on the Inspiration of Scripture, the Jews, and the Lord's Second Coming, concluded on May 3 in Edinburgh, has been an unspeakable means of blessing and illumination to many of those who attended the meetings. The attendance has been markedly good throughout, especially at the afternoon and evening meetings. The presence of so many young people, both men and women, augurs well for the spread of the truth in the future. The truths enforced and inculcated have evidently begun to possess people's hearts.

As regards the addresses it would be invidious to speak comparatively. All the speakers recognised definitely their utter dependence upon the Spirit of God for guidance. From what we experienced and heard, the Bible has become a new book to many of the saints of God. Indeed, it would be impossible to gauge the great blessing that has come to the Church of God through these meetings. The speakers were Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger, Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, Mr. W. G. Carr, Dr. T. Neatby, Mr. A. Stewart, Rev. J. C, Smith, Rev. John Wilkinson, Rev. F. E. Marsh, and Rev. J. Urquhart. Mr. James E. Mathieson presided over the gatherings the first evening and two following days. On his having to leave for London, his place was taken by Mr. H. D. Brandreth.

EARTHQUAKES IN AUSTRIA.

DEAR SIR,—I have received a most touching letter from the Protestant pastor in Laibach, the unfortunate town which has lately suffered, and is still suffering so much from earthquakes. He writes:—"Our poor Evangelical community is utterly ruined unless we get help from Christians in other lands. Church and parsonage are entirely wrecked. The consternation and misery are indescribable, especially as yesterday and to-day, April 22 and 23, new shocks were felt. Few dare to sleep in their dwellings; all are out in the fields or gardens." The pastor writes under a wooden roof which he has improvised in his garden, and his young wife and baby had spent three nights and days during bitterly cold weather and heavy rain out of doors.

I trust that many Christians will help this earnest pastor (who is labouring zealously for Christ under most difficult circumstances) to give present relief to the suffering members of his flock, and also to rebuild his church and house, so that the work he is doing for the Master may not be greatly hindered. I have offered to receive a certain number of the homeless members of the Evangelical community in a cottage adjoining our Nursing Home, and shall be glad to remit to the pastor any gifts that may be confided to me for the purpose. MARY A. REINMUTH.

THE P.S.A.—Mr. John Blackham, the originator of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon movement, read a paper at a conference of the London P.S.A. Federation, held on Monday afternoon at Exeter Hall, on "The Special Mission of the P.S.A." The object is to attract the working men to give England a hard-working, sober, God-fearing population. Rev. A. C. Perrian said that the movement enlisted the sympathies of the churches, because it had the same mission as the churches. Lord Monkswell, who presided at a public meeting in the evening, declared that the P.S.A. movement had achieved a considerable measure of success in inducing people who were absolutely indifferent to religion to take part in religious work.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION, at its inaugural meeting on Monday night, elected Rev. J. Morlais Jones to the chairmanship for 1896. The result was not unexpected, but considerable surprise was manifested when it was announced that Mr. Jones had received 548 votes out of 718 votes cast. He is thus chairman of the London Congregational Union for this year, and chairman-elect of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Mr. Jones is the senior Congregational minister in the south-west district of London, having been at Lewisham for twenty-seven years. As a preacher he has very few superiors, but his retiring disposition has led to his reputation being largely confined to the metropolitan area. His book of sermons, "A Cup of Cold Water," was published two years ago, and was very cordially received.

The Book World.

SILVER WINGS. By Rev. A. G. Fleming. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) These addresses to children are simple in doctrine, replete with illustrative narrative, and rich in Evangelical teaching.

TRUE STORIES. By Josiah Spiers. (Children's Special Service Mission. 6d.) Already this has won wide acceptance among friends of the children; hence many will be ready to welcome it in a cheap form, suitable for distributing widely.

Volume V. of COTTAGE GARDENING, edited by W. Robinson, is, like all its predecessors, a perfect repository of practical popular information and counsel in matters relating to horticulture and domestic economy. (2s. 6d. Cassell & Co.)

THE MISSIONS OF THE WORLD. (3d. Hornsby, 12, St. Bride-street, E.C.) Dr. Bruce continues in the April issue of this monthly his deeply interesting papers on Christian work in Persia. The story of the English Presbyterian Mission in China is also told.

HOLIDAY TRAMPS THROUGH PICTURESQUE ENGLAND AND WALES, by H. H. Warner, will prove an invaluable help to the tramping tourist. The book, with its wealth of information and clear description, is a marvel of cheapness. (1s. Iliffe and Son, 3, St. Bride-street, E.C.)

HAPPY HOMES. By Dr. Kirton. (Marshall Bros. 1s.) This re-issue, in a cheap form, of a work which has already met with a very large circulation will commend itself to many. We have little doubt that it will yet again prove the means of making thousands of homes happy.

ELIZABETH GLEN, M.D. By Annie Swan. (3s. 6d. Hutchinson & Co.) These supposed experiences of a lady doctor, which have already appeared in serial form, are very pleasing in style, and full of sustained and real human interest. The tone and tendency of the stories are of the highest kind.

Though the circumstances that led to its inception have happily passed away, Mrs. Beecher Stowe's story of UNCLE TOM'S CABIN will ever remain a classic in the annals of social and national reform. For the sake of young readers we gladly hail the excellent illustrated edition issued by Messrs. Partridge & Co. (2s.)

BENJAMIN TOWNSON. This "record of a doctor's life and work," by his gifted daughter, is not only a delightful tribute of filial affection, but a most profitable story of Christian service exercised in a noble calling. Would that all doctors were as devout Christians as the subject of this charming memoir. (2s. S. W. Partridge & Co.)

Many will welcome a cheap re-issue of a book that had a great vogue in its day, Dr. Binney's THE BEST OF BOTH WORLDS. A new generation has arisen since its first publication—a generation with special temptations to materialistic views of life. Dr. Binney's noble argument will prove an antidote in the minds of all who can be persuaded to read it. (1s. 6d. Edward Knight, 18, Middle-street, E.C.)

GRIZZLY'S LITTLE PARD. By E. M. Comfort. (Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier. 1s. 6d.) Yet again, as in an earlier story of "Poverty Flat," the author depicts very pleasantly one aspect of life in Western mining camps. A baby, left orphan in the camp, became the means of calling forth sympathy, and bringing out the better side of the rough men's characters. It is a well-written and pleasing tale.

THE BRIDAL SONG, by Rev. James Neil, M.A., is a free metrical version of the first canto of the Song of Songs. It is quite the thing for Mr. Neil's works to run through many editions, and we are glad to observe that this is already in its second. The pages evince spiritual insight and literary charm, and the book is beautifully bound, so as to be suitable for a wedding gift. (5s. nett. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

CHRISSY'S ENDEAVOUR. By Pansy. (Partridge & Co. 2s.) A story of Endeavour, written for, and peculiarly interesting to Endeavourers. As illustrated in this brave and useful young life, it is no mere sentimental thing, but a genuine devotion of spirit, soul, and body to the service of Christ, and to commending his grace to all around. How a true Endeavourer can shine for Jesus in daily life, is here admirably set forth.

THE KESWICK LIBRARY. Nos. 10 and 11 of this useful series of little books are INSTEAD, by Miss S. M. Nugent, and THINGS THAT CANNOT BE SHAKEN, by Rev. C. G. Moore. The former, in short meditations for each day in a month, unfolds some of the wonderful "transformations of grace" that are found in the life of the true believer. We may compare the brochure to a finely-polished diamond with many facets, each reflecting brightly the glory of the unclouded sun. Mr. Moore treats with much freshness and suggestion the varied aspects of the Christ-filled life.

LESSONS TO AN ADULT BIBLE CLASS ON THE LIFE OF CHRIST. Vol. II. By R. Milner. (7s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) Teachers of Bible classes, local preachers, and all devout Bible readers, will give a cordial welcome to this book. The author has done her work well. Every lesson is thoughtful, earnest, devout, and practical. It is a volume of solid Evangelical exposition, written in language simple and clear, and abounding in useful suggestion, while free from fanciful interpretations, discussions of curious and useless questions, and profitless speculations. The book is needed, and will fulfil an important mission.

MARMADUKE, EMPEROR OF EUROPE. By X. (Durrant & Co., 93, High-street, Chelmsford.) Every reader of this courageous venture into the region of the unrevealed future will wish and pray that it may come true, though we fear that many students of revelation will be unable to receive the prophecy. According to the author, a great peace-loving reformer is to arise in England, in the early part of the coming century, with the help of whose inspiration and genius the German Emperor will inaugurate a European Peace Alliance and Federation, with almost millennial results. It is a splendid conception, the study of which ought to do good even if it should never be realised.

MEDICAL MISSIONS: THEIR PLACE AND POWER. By the late John Lowe, F.R.C.S.E. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier, 5s.) We are glad to find that a fourth edition of this valuable handbook on medical missions has been called for. Taken in connection with the recently-published "Memoirs of Dr. Burns Thomson," and an earlier volume by Dr. Saunders, "The Healer-Preacher," the present work seems to form a complete and useful library on medical mission service among the poor at home and the heathen abroad. To this, the fourth edition, is properly added a brief memorial sketch of its honoured author, now called to his rest. On the worth and value of the book as a statement of its subject it is superfluous now to enlarge, in view of the acceptance it has found. Suffice that it is readable, full and clear in information, and well fitted to set young students glowing with ardour for the double ministry of healing and preaching.

THE FEMALE OFFENDER. By Professor Lombroso, edited, with introduction, by Douglas Morrison. (Unwin. 6s.) That habitual crime is to a large extent due to hereditary taint is now generally admitted; but in reading the professor's array of figures as to measurements, tastes, habits, etc., and his constant reference to "atavism," it seems as if here we have the doctrine of heredity run wild. The early chapters are hard reading, save for scientists; the latter, largely deductions therefrom, are intelligible to the lay reader. Generalisations are dangerous things; and however accurate the author may be as to his own observations, many conclusions therefrom will be seriously challenged. On what authority does he state that "Promiscuity was the primitive condition of women"? Inspired history does not so teach—nor, indeed, the earliest human records. Many other guesses appear to be but guesses, and nothing more. As a scientific study the work has a value of its own; but the true conclusions are, in many cases, yet to seek.

THE CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES is a very valuable series, including some volumes which rank with the best commentaries on special portions of Holy Scripture. A recent addition to the series is THE PSALMS, BOOKS II. III., that is to say, a volume devoted to Psalms xlii.-lxxxix. This arrangement follows the ancient division of the Psalter into five books, a fact brought to general notice in the Revised Version. Book I., containing Psalms i.-xli., was issued three years ago; and Books IV. and V. will be dealt with in a third volume. The editor is Rev. A. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew at Cambridge. These pages show ample learning, and much expositional insight; the style is terse, and, in harmony with the plan of the series, carefully condensed. Dr. Kirkpatrick goes a long way with the Higher Critics, but by no means is he "advanced"; and this leads him to speak on some points, especially as to the theology of the Psalter, in language which we cannot endorse. Though prepared to admit that doctrine concerning the future life is not elaborated in the Old Testament, yet that such a life was confidently expected is, we contend, placed beyond question when the spiritual position of the "Israelite indeed" is realised. Surely a living faith in God was a pledge and an augury of eternal fellowship with Him. Setting aside speculative questions, we are glad to say that the expository notes are so pointed and comprehensive that this work, when complete, will serve many as a helpful introduction and a sufficient commentary on the Psalms. Students and scholars will be gratified by the admirable manner in which points of textual criticism are stated. (3s. 6d. each. Cambridge University Press.)

The latest issue in the valuable "Biographical Series" (1d. each) of the Religious Tract Society is devoted to HORATIUS BONAR, D.D. It is from the pen of Rev. W. R. Bowman, and is an admirable sketch of a beautiful life.

"THE SEPARATED NATION." (C. Tuckwood, 64, Berners-street, W. O.N., 1s.) This is a Service of Song, published in the interests of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. The music is arranged by E. J. Bellerby, Mus. Bac., and is of a higher order than is sometimes found in compilations of this kind. Mendelssohn, Dr. Clark Whitfield, and others have been laid under contribution for the musical portion, and the connective readings are all touching the ancient people. A very profitable and instructive evening might well be spent with this small work.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

TO MY WHITE RIBBON COMRADES IN GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

THE Polyglot Petition has been presented to the Government at Washington, and its representatives granted a hearing by the President of the United States. While we do not think it right to incur the expense of carrying the entire petition round the world, we shall present a copy certified as to the number of signatures, we have determined to bring it to our motherland, as it is the largest and most representative petition that history will record up to the close of the nineteenth century. Its beneficent purpose and historic character entitle it to this distinction, and, as you know, the petition will be presented to the British Government at the time of our International White Ribbon Convention next June. Lady Henry Somerset, and those associated with her, both in this and other countries, are most desirous to secure half a million names in Great Britain and Ireland before the official presentation occurs. The total number secured in this country is 400,000, and we feel confident that the local branches will gladly set to work to secure the remaining 100,000, for it is not fitting that the chief historic nation of the world should have fewer than half a million signatures to present to its rulers, asking for the overthrow of the traffic in brain poisons throughout the British Empire. We appeal to the comradeship that exists among White Ribboners throughout the world, but most of all to your patriotic sentiment and conscientious conviction, and we know that this threefold appeal cannot be made in vain to British women.

Pray remember that the signatures of men as well as women, of non-abstainers as well as abstainers, are sought, and that a post card of request sent to Miss Morgan, Buckingham Place, Brecon, will bring you by return as many headings as you care to use, with full instructions as to the manner of circulating the petition.

All signatures obtained are to be forwarded to Miss Morgan (superintendent of the Polyglot Petition work for the World's W.C.T.U.), Buckingham Place, Brecon, S. Wales, by the 10th June next.

I append a copy of the petition, which anyone interested in our work is earnestly requested to copy out and begin to work to secure signatures.—Believe me, yours as ever, for God, and Home, and Every Land,

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
President World's W.C.T.U.

Reigate, March 29th, 1895.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

TO THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE WORLD (COLLECTIVELY AND SEVERALLY).

HONOURED RULERS, REPRESENTATIVES, AND BROTHERS.—We, your petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native lands, and the world's family of nations. We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace. We know that indulgence in alcohol and opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children. We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations either ignorant or unwilling. We know that the law might do much now left undone to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult. We have no power to prevent these great iniquities, beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honour of the nations from an indefensible complicity. We, therefore, come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the State from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilisation throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

N.B.—If friendly to the cause, please cut this out and ask for signatures, to be sent to Miss Morgan, at the address given above.

THE Y.W.C.A.

DISTRICT MEETING.

A meeting in furtherance of Y.W.C.A. work in the E. and N.E. of London was held on Thursday at the Conference Hall, Stratford. There was a large attendance of secretaries and members from various branches; the central part of the large hall being full. Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton presided, and remarked that one of the greatest benefits of the Y.W.C.A. is the feeling it gives of unity and fellowship. It was a happy circumstance for the Y.W.C.A. to be meeting in a Y.M.C.A. building. Revs. J. H. Wilson, J. Rolfe Fisher, and Trevor Fielder testified to the value of branches in connection with their own congregations. Mr. George Holland, Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird, and Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence also spoke.

The Hampstead centre now numbers 201 members and lady associates. The Total Abstinence Union has prospered; many of the members who have themselves signed have been active in taking pledges. Over 100 girls have joined through their efforts.

The Swanage branch held on Thursday its annual meetings. At the afternoon meeting Miss Wingfield Digby, of Bournemouth, gave a description of the aim and work of the Association. It has been a year of steady growth in every department of work; the senior branch now numbers ninety-two members, the junior branch 30.

Miss Wilmott is arranging at the Central Institute that every associate as she joins shall be introduced to a working member, who will become her friend and initiate her into the aims and benefits of the Y.W.C.A., look out for her at meetings, correspond with or visit her if absent, etc. A report of all work in this direction is to be given in monthly. It is hoped that the loss of new associates through their leaving without giving an address will, in this way, be largely prevented.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Bishop Evington, of Japan, who has been attending several of the May meetings, was one of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. members.

The recent annual meeting in Sydney shows that the Association is recovering from the shock of the great crisis. A spirit of hopeful enthusiasm is now manifested.

The Walsall Association has inaugurated a Foreign Missionary Auxiliary, the meetings of which are to be held on the last Monday of each month. For a long time it has been felt by some of the members that more definite missionary work ought to be done; this is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Taizo Miyoshi sends from Tokyo a most interesting account of the work of the Y.M.C.A. in Japan. There are in this enterprising and aggressive country no fewer than sixty Associations (twenty-five of which are affiliated in a national union), with a gross membership of 1300.

The Seaside Home at Ilfracombe is now open for the season, and the committee have secured the services of Mr. and Mrs. G. Radford, late of Melksham, as managers. During the past two summers nearly 200 young men have stayed at the Home, which is very central, and will accommodate about eighteen visitors.

The Auckland (N.Z.) Y.M.C.A. has closed a good year, free of debt on its current account. For several years past the Association has acted upon the excellent principle that no liability should be incurred by the management which they could not see their way to meet before the end of the financial year. Mr. Henry Varley has recently been assisting in the work of this Association.

To all who believe in real aggressive Christian work and effort, the series of Gospel meetings held every Sunday evening for four months, at the People's Palace, Bristol, must appear in a very favourable light. We consider they were in every way successful as a means of reaching the enormous mass of non-churchgoers who parade the principal streets in thousands every Sunday evening.

We have received from the secretary of the Omagh Y.M.C.A. a programme of the weekly meetings for the second quarter of the year. These are varied from week to week, and include Bible classes, essays and addresses on profitable subjects. We are glad to know that the members of this Association recognise the necessity of maintaining their religious meetings in summer as well as winter.

Out of thirty young men recently studying the Chinese language at the Gan-king College (an institution where young missionaries sent out by the China Inland and other societies remain for a time to perfect themselves in the language), no fewer than twenty-four were formerly members of English Y.M.C.A.'s, five being supported on the mission field by the Associations of which they were members.

The National Executive meetings at Exeter Hall on Friday were of particular interest, and were exceptionally well attended. Representatives of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union and the Student Volunteer movement conferred with members of the Council as to closer co-operation with the Y.M.C.A., and the appointment of a standing joint-committee was agreed to, which should be equally constituted of gentlemen representing the Student movement and members of the Council.

The half-yearly conference of the South-Eastern District of Young Men's Christian Associations took place at Tonbridge on Wednesday, May 1. The district was fully represented, delegates being present from Ashford, Brighton, Eastbourne, East Grinstead, Folkestone, Hastings, Herne Bay, Lewes, Sheerness, Sittingbourne, Tonbridge, Tunbridge Wells, Queenborough, and Woodchurch. Reports from the delegates present were most encouraging, and showed the district to be in a healthy and prosperous condition.

"We are exceedingly glad to know," writes the editor of the Monthly Record, Auckland, N.Z., "that the Melbourne Y.M.C.A, with which we had so recently to sympathise in the loss of their magnificent premises, and the deep trouble into which our friends were thus thrown, has not by any means been extinguished. A brave-hearted remnant stuck to their colours, and continued to carry out the work, and now the Association has secured a home in Collins-street, No. 165; a more central situation than the one they had in Bourke-street. We understand Mr. Arthur Nicholls, the new general secretary, is a most capable man, and withal an earnest, spiritually-minded Christian."

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

The University sermon in Great St. Mary's on Sunday last was preached by the Bishop of Armagh.

Over 100 men availed themselves of Mr. and Mrs. Moule's kind invitation to meet Rev. L. Lloyd, a missionary from South China, at Ridley Hall, on Saturday evening. Mr. Lloyd gave a very interesting address, dealing with the importance of educational work in China.

A good work is being carried on by undergraduates in the villages round about Cambridge. They go out on bicycles once or twice a week, and hold out-door meetings in different villages, with the consent of the clergymen of the parish.

Sermons were preached throughout Cambridge on Sunday last on behalf of the C.M.S. Professor George Adam Smith, of Glasgow, preached in St. Columba's Presbyterian Church.

On Sunday afternoon a meeting was held at Corpus, which Mr. W. Kidd, of the South Africa General Mission, addressed, his subject being "Qualifications for Service."

IRISH NOTES.

A Methodist Church Extension Scheme, involving an expenditure of £8795, has been for some time in progress in Cork, and is now almost completed and nearly free of debt.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Institutes of Waterford are doing a good work, and Commander Saunders, R.N., who was greatly esteemed during his stay in Waterford, has sent a cheque of £100 towards the objects of these Homes.

Much regret is felt in the South of Ireland at the death of Rev. John A. Smith, Presbyterian missionary, Cork. For the last twenty-seven years he has laboured with great zeal and much success as a missionary in the South of Ireland.

A singular event has happened at Dublin. Two Methodist ministers, both greatly respected, Revs. S. A. Robertson and John Chambers, died on Sunday week, and were buried side by side on Tuesday week in St. Jerome Cemetery. Both were godly, earnest, and devoted Christian workers, and each was comparatively young, Mr. Robertson being forty-six, and Mr. Chambers only thirty-four years of age.

PARMITER-STREET MISSION. — Anniversary meetings in connection with this East London mission were held on Thursday last. The chair was occupied by the president, Sir C. R. Lighton, Bart. The secretary spoke of the increase in the number of scholars, the spiritual success of the work, and the interest that was being taken in it in the neighbourhood and at a distance. They very much needed more workers, especially teachers.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. Richard Coad began, on May 4, a ten days' temperance mission in the Oddfellows' Hall, St. Helier's, Jersey.

By a large majority the Metropolitan Asylums Board have decided to discontinue the use of beer to imbeciles as an article of diet.

Mr. William Allen has given notice in the House of Commons, that he will, on the 17th inst., call attention to the question of tied houses, and move a resolution.

A bill to empower magistrates to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to persons previously convicted of drunkenness has been read a first time in the House of Commons.

The London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance has decided to hold a demonstration in support of the Government Direct Veto Bill, in the Royal Albert Hall, on Saturday, May 25.

The report of the Government committee on prisons recognises that habitual drunkards should be dealt with as patients rather than criminals, and have special medical treatment applied to them.

The long fight over the Norwegian Bill in the Massachusetts Legislature ended with the emphatic defeat of the Bill. It had been reported against unanimously by the committee on liquor law.

The monthly meeting of the Irish Church Missions Total Abstinence Society was held on Monday evening last (29), in Mission Buildings, Townsend-street. There was a very good attendance considering the evening was wet; two good Gospel addresses were given, and the children sang a few Gospel hymns. After the meeting thirteen signed the pledge.

The Anne's-place Mission, Hackney-road, E., has concluded a special month's Gospel Temperance Mission. Much interest was shown, the whole neighbourhood being aroused. The various speakers were Messrs. C. Carrington, W. Wirty, Brook, G. W. Marston, W. Tubb, F. W. Pleasence. On the closing night the choir and string band from Hoxton Hall rendered their aid.

Mr. Wm. Tallack, of the Howard Association, says, in a letter in the Times on "Prisons and Sentences": "In visiting prisons I have again and again been assured that coming to gaol prevents many offenders from going mad; for it is the drink that chiefly makes them insane. Here they get no alcohol, and hence many are saved from lunacy. Certainly they get better in gaol rather than worse; and there is no danger whatever of cellular separation for short terms injuring prisoners' minds."

The Bishop of London, presiding last week over the anniversary of the Church of England Temperance Society, at Lambeth Palace, spoke of the legislative measures which the Society had at heart, and expressed himself as not altogether discouraged at the result of his own efforts. Mr. C. Tritton, M.P., who followed, conceded the sincerity of Sir William Harcourt in bringing forward his Local Veto Bill. He was, however, disposed to rely less upon legislation than upon individual effort in the great work of temperance reform.

The Baptist Total Abstinence Association held its twenty-first annual meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle under the presidency of Mr. Alderman White. The report showed that a large amount of work had been done during the year, only two counties being unvisited, and some hundreds of meetings held. Of the ministers in the denomination, 1440 (about two-thirds of the whole number) were abstainers, and of the students 216 out of 228. In five of the colleges all the students were members of the Association. Enthusiastic meetings followed afternoon and evening.

The Wesleyan Band of Hope Union held a grand demonstration in St. George's Hall. In spite of a heavy and continuous downpour of rain the large hall was densely crowded. The chair was taken by the Mayor of Southport, and the principal speaker were the Dean of Hereford, who said the Church must fight and overcome the drink, or the drink would overcome the Church; Mr. D. S. Collin, who urged the audience to give a hearty support to the Local Veto Bill; and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who spoke on the value of personal influence and example. The report showed that seventy-one societies are affiliated with the Union, and that 1500 meetings had been held during the winter, attended by 180,000 young people.

DISCLAIMER.—Dear Sir,—As we find our names are being used by Mr. Abraham Hornstein as "subscribing to and appreciating" his "West London and City" Jewish Mission, will you allow us to say that we have given him no authority whatever to use our names thus, as we know nothing of his work. We would not have troubled you, but do not know how else to reach those who might be influenced by his appeals.—D. C. Apperly, John Lovegrove, Fredk. Sanders.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION.

EST. 1871.] KING'S CROSS, W.C. [EST. 1871

Owing to the decease of many of our old supporters, we find it a difficult task to get new subscribers for this much-needed work amongst cabmen. Only those who have to do with these men know the difficulties in getting them under the sound of the Gospel. Yet hundreds have been brought to the Saviour. We implore Christian friends to help us, that the work may not flag. Particulars of the mission and its agencies may be had of the founder, JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.

Donations may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSION TO SOUTH AMERICA.

All who desire to see the Gospel preached to the millions of Indians in South America, and are interested in the spiritual well-being of our fellow-countrymen scattered throughout that vast continent, and who also desire to see its Spanish and Portuguese speaking people brought to a knowledge of the truth, are invited to GIVE THEIR SUPPORT TO THIS SOCIETY, which sends out its Bishop and Clergy and Lay Missionaries to effect these blessed and important objects. Its work at the great ports AMONGST THE SAILORS is deeply valued.

THE MISSION TO THE INDIANS OF ARAUCANIA,

Commenced as a fitting memorial of the Jubilee Year, is intended to gather into the Church of Christ this, the finest of the aboriginal races in South America. The Araucanians were long inaccessible to the missionaries of the Gospel, but are now EVERYWHERE OPEN to welcome them. For this new mission the help of new friends and the increased support of old ones are earnestly sought. The project was dear to the hearts of Captain ALLEN GARDINER, and his son and grandson, and has been warmly advocated by the Bishop of the FALKLAND ISLANDS. Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "Messrs. BARCLAY AND Co.," and made payable to Captain E. POULDEN, R.N., Lay Sec., at the Society's Offices, 1, Clifford Inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C. c4825

CAREY HOUSE Baptist Deaconess Training Institute, Chester.—We now receive applications from Godly young women desirous of devoting themselves to Christian Work.—Address, Mrs. JONES, 2a, Chichester-street, Chester.

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Information will be given and contributions gladly received by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec.

Notes and Comments.

WE beg the attention of our readers to the excellent article on "The Gift, Character, and Work of an Evangelist," by Mr. W. R. Lane, to be found on p. 12. A desire having been expressed by those who heard it on delivery, that it should be published in a separate form, we have had a few hundred copies printed as a 16pp. booklet. Copies may be had of our publishers, price 6d. per dozen.

The fidelity of Dr. John Cairns, whose "Life and Letters" we hope to review in an early issue, is beautifully shown in his refusal of the Principalship of Edinburgh University, on the ground that he had consecrated himself to the service of Christ in the Church; his modesty is only now known, in the fact that he never spoke of the honour which had been offered him; his brothers found the correspondence among his papers after his death.

One of the most striking and hopeful features of the May Meetings among the Independents has been the place incidentally accorded to the question of Peace. The Chairman of the Union gave it a prominent place in his address on Brotherhood, and again and again it appeared in missionary speeches. The Gospel is a unit; if it reconciles man to God, it must also reconcile man to man. It presses upon the conscience its claim to regulate all life.

The May issue of National Righteousness contains the Minority Report of the Royal Commission on Opium, by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., a document of which much use will assuredly be made in the future. In the number will also be found the following resolution which is to be moved in the House of Commons on May 24 by Sir Joseph Pease :—

This House, having before it its resolution of June 30, 1893, pressing on the Government of India to continue their policy of greatly diminishing the cultivation of the poppy and the production and sale of opium, and having had presented to it the report of the Royal Commission appointed on September 2, 1893, to inquire into various matters connected with the cultivation of the poppy in India, is of opinion that the system by which the Indian opium revenue is raised is morally indefensible, and would urge upon the Indian Government that they should cease to grant licences for the cultivation of the poppy and sale of opium in British India, except to supply the legitimate demand for medical purposes, and that they should at the same time take measures to arrest the transit of Malwa opium through British territory.

This serial, which is ably edited by Mr. B. Broomhall, should be read by all students of the opium question. A yearly payment of 2s. 6d. entitles to a copy, post free, as often as published. (Special May issue, 2d. Morgan & Scott. See advt. p. 28.)

A meeting, called for the expression of public opinion concerning the Opium Commission and its Report, will be held in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, on Wednesday evening, May 22. It is hoped that Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., and others will deliver addresses. At this critical stage of the movement on behalf of national rectitude, it behoves all earnest-minded patriots and Christians to support the hands of those who are contending for the truth, and we trust there will be a great rally of friends at the meeting on May 22. Meetings of a similar character are also being arranged in several prominent cities.

It is desirable in the prosecution of this cause that Christian friends should enrol themselves in the Christian Union for the Severance of the Connection of the British Empire with the Opium Traffic. Names for membership should be sent to Dr. Maxwell, 49, Highbury-park, London, N. To meet the expenses of the Union, one shilling is expected as annual subscription.

Rev. H. Heber Evans writes to us, recalling the earnest exertions of good Lord Shaftesbury in fighting the opium iniquity. He concludes :—

To the end of his life did Lord Shaftesbury maintain that "it was the duty of every man who cares for the faith of Christianity, and the duty of every one who cares for the honour of his country, to combine in protesting, in memorialising, in giving no rest to the authorities of this country, until such time as they shall have wiped out this foul reproach from the forehead of the British empire." The Christian people of England will not lightly disregard the counsel of such a tried and trusted leader in the cause of truth and righteousness.

The Armenian tragedy is being slowly but surely unfolded, and there will be deep disappointment throughout the civilised world if the result of the commission of inquiry is not such as to render further misgovernment in these regions virtually impossible. In commenting on the present stage of the investigation, The Manchester Guardian says :—

It may be taken for granted that the assent of our Government will be given to no scheme which does not do for Armenia at least as much as was done for the Lebanon in 1860. A Christian Governor (preferably not a Turkish subject), mixed tribunals which will treat Christians as equal with Mahometans before the law, and a police force or gendarmerie composed of men of both creeds, and officered largely by Europeans—that is the minimum. Turkish promises of reform should be simply disregarded as worth less than nothing. They are conscious and deliberate falsehoods, and made only to be broken. The reforms must be guaranteed by the Powers, who will supervise and control their execution. On that condition only will they be of the slightest use, and to that condition the Turk will not submit unless compelled.

The great meeting held last week in St. James's Hall, with its rousing appeals to the national conscience, ought to strengthen the hands of the English Government in determining that substantial justice shall be done, and the absolute rule of the "unspeakable Turk" terminated in Kurdistan. We have too long shirked our clear duty in this matter, and further neglect of our treaty obligations would cause us to be a byword among the nations. All who wish to have authenticated details of the recent horrible atrocities should read Rev. F. D. Greene's book, "The Armenian Crisis and the Rule of the Turk," published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, price 2s.

An esteemed correspondent urges a more systematic effort for the evangelisation of our villages. He writes :—

Through long neglect mental and spiritual stagnation has crept over the people, and there is sore need of a warm living stream of Christian truth and life among them. I would suggest that every good-sized church in London and other cities should provide its own village missionary, who shall by precept and life make the Gospel live again before the people. From £50 to £100 per annum would suffice for each missionary. A country home for sick children from the cities and towns would probably soon follow, and what a bond of sympathy would such a work be between country folk and town dwellers.

With our correspondent's aim we heartily sympathise. There may be difference of opinion as to his suggested plan; but it is assuredly well worth a trial.

The decision of the English Presbyterian Synod to remove the Presbyterian College from London to Cambridge seems to us to be a wise step; at any rate, we have great sympathy with one of the reasons adduced by Rev. John Watson, who proposed the resolution. He did so because he wished Presbyterians to be ready to take their part in the great battle in England between priestcraft and religious liberty :—

Up till now, he confessed, he had along with others been inclined to stand aloof from the controversy, and to deprecate Church action in connection with it, for fear of the introduction of politics into religious matters. But things had been ripening very fast since last Synod, and they must now fall into line with their brethren in resisting to the utmost the encroachments of Romanism and Anglicanism on religious liberty.

The Nonconformist churches are evidently girding themselves for another struggle with their ancient foe. The real inspiring power of the Free Church Congress is the determination to break the power of the priest.

Rev. Urijah R. Thomas enforced before the Congregational Union the lesson of common service with an original anecdote which is now well on its way to immortality. After saying that there should be no leaving the duty and the honour of aiding missionary work to one and another, and still less that there should be no unseemly rejoicing over an exceptional year—the Centenary year—if each is not contributing his own best service and gift, he told of coming from a visit to the Cheddar Caves with a party of tired Bristol slum boys, when one little fellow was overheard to say to his companion, "Ain't you tired? I be." "Yes," was the quick reply; "but it don't matter, we ain't wearing out our own shoes." Shoes and all they had had been lent to them. It is easy to rejoice when others do the work and bear the cost.

The broad facts of the state of the world require to be often placed before us, and they give forth their meaning and utter their pleadings just while we look at them. What do these facts mean? There is one Christian minister for every 900 persons in Great Britain, one for every 114,000 in Japan, one for every 165,080 in India, one for every 222,000 in Africa, and one for every 437,000 in China. They mean that our forces are not wisely distributed. If all Christians lived for the world's conversion, great residential changes would immediately take place.

Mr. Thomas did not speak too strongly when he said: "There are savages in London slums, barbarians in London drawing-rooms, and heathens in London churches." The last is the most painfully true of all. The words fell on his audience with a thrill of pain—a hush of horror. They are true of other places besides London.

Dr. Reynolds makes a good suggestion, which we believe we have seen before. It should not be lost sight of, but acted upon soon after the August holidays, in every town or other centre of work. "Would it not," asks Dr. Reynolds, "be possible in every district of our Church life to meet together as elders and deacons of the churches for a whole day of prayer and praise before commencing the next winter's campaign?" Some might not sympathise, others would, and it is the men who are in sympathy who should come together. The rest would either keep themselves and their coldness away, or else come in and be changed.

The Chairman and Board of Directors of the Midland Railway Company are to be memorialised by a body of shareholders in favour of diminishing the goods traffic on Sundays. The memorial runs:—

The undersigned shareholders of the company, in view of the large Sunday business traffic involved in the carriage of ordinary light and heavy goods and minerals upon the lines of the Midland system—they do not now refer to perishables—urge that, in their opinion, this traffic is indefensible, and that the employés have, in common with all mankind, a natural right to the enjoyment of their weekly day's rest from toil. They therefore respectfully beg that steps may be taken without delay for the diminution and extinction of this traffic.

As many as 535 shareholders, representing about a million of the company's stock, have already signed the memorial, which lies with Mr. James Fox Wilson, 22, Western-road, St. Leonards. It will be presented at the half-yearly meeting of shareholders in August. All shareholders who sympathise with its prayer are requested to write to Mr. Wilson.

Rev. Arnold Foster, of Hankow, writes to The Rock:—

Is it creditable to the present state of society in England that idols appear to be recognised articles of ornamental furniture in households that are presumably Christian, at least in name? In a price list of the Army and Navy Stores that lies before me, I notice on a page devoted to illustrations and prices of Oriental goods a small figure, with the words appended, "Idols. Assorted, each 9d. to 1s. 5d." The deliberate purchase of such a symbol of disloyalty to God, the purchase of an idol as an idol, the placing of an idol in a conspicuous place in one's house as an ornament, as a thing of beauty or curiosity, or as an article of æsthetic interest, is surely an action impossible for one who accepts the Scriptural standpoint in regard to idolatry.

Mr. Foster proceeds to ask some pertinent questions with regard to the responsibility of those who make idols:—

Would any missionary be justified in baptizing a man who made his living by making idols? Could St. Paul have baptized Demetrius at Ephesus even if he himself had abandoned the worship of the idols he made? Or could Demetrius, having genuinely embraced Christianity and renounced idolatry, have still continued in his trade of purveyor of idols to other people? The questions involved affect not merely the purchasers of idols, but the shareholders of the company that deals in such things.

The curious but important questions thus raised in these later days by all parts of the world being so closely linked together, are parts of the great question of the lawful (Christian) way of making money.

The Echo contrasts the income, the number of the constituency, and the enthusiasm of the C.M.S., with those of the S.P.G., very much to the disadvantage of the latter. The sentences are memorable:—

If the position of the two great missionary societies of the Church of England can be taken as any test of the relative strength of Ritualists and Low Churchmen, then those good people who lament that Anglicanism is wholly given over to Sacerdotalism are very much out in their reckoning. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel is almost as distinctly sacerdotal as the Church Missionary Society is evangelical; both appeal to the same Church for support; yet the latter has two-and-quarter times the income of the former, and leaves it hopelessly behind in enthusiasm and enterprise. The C.M.S. is, with the exception of the Propaganda at Rome, the greatest missionary society in the world; its income amounts to over £279,000 a year, and is rapidly on the increase. Its agents have doubled within the last seven years, and last week, when it held its annual gatherings, six great meetings had to be arranged for on one day, four of them in the largest halls in London, to accommodate the crowds who wanted to attend. And then numbers had to be turned away because there was no room for them even to stand in the over-packed buildings.

Contrast this with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel that held its annual meeting in St. James's Hall. The top gallery was wholly empty, and there was abundant room on the orchestra for many more; the audience, such as it was, being largely made up of clergymen, their wives and sisters. No one who sat out part of the meeting could wonder at this paucity of attendance. There was a crushing abundance of decorum, and a painful lack of warmth or enthusiasm. The tone was more that of a side gathering of the British Association on some moot scientific point than of a band of men united together to carry out the most glorious and heroic of modern enterprises.

It is with relief and satisfaction that we see the official information of the exchange of the ratifications of the treaty of Simonoseki. the war in the East is over, and the danger of complications between Japan and the Western Powers is averted. Dr. Muirhead, the veteran missionary from Shanghai, is strongly of opinion that the effect of the treaty will be favourable to the spread of the Gospel both in China and Japan. Certain it is that the balance of the world has been a good deal disturbed, and that more and more shall we have to take into account the three great nations of the East. This blow to China will waken her up, and, as she becomes renewed in life and character, she will become an enormous force. We see no cause to fear that as a heathen nation she will swallow other nations up and degrade humanity; her power depends upon her regeneration, and that depends upon Christianity.

A Continental correspondent writes:—"There is a curious movement in French literary circles just now, which shows in a way the decay of the 'Decadence.' One might almost call it a spiritual revival among literary men. Brunetière, editor of the most important Parisian review, La Révue des Deux Mondes, after an interview with the Pope in January, threw down the gauntlet to the scientists, and claimed that they should own up to the insufficiency of their methods or proofs to replace Christianity by Materialism. Then a noted writer of light comedy announced his intention of entering a monastery, and did so. Then Pierre Loti, distinguished and brilliant writer, publishes 'Le Désert' and 'Jérusalem': notes and reflections on a pilgrimage, with passages of most touching pathos, as he mourns a lost faith. And finally, Paul Bourget, chief of the psychological school of novelists, pointed out in an open letter to Archbishop Richard, of Paris, the way in which his works were imbued with the Christian spirit. True, his argument was not very conclusive, but that he should be inclined to advance it, is the sign of the time that I notice. Taking all this in conjunction with the large increase in the numbers of men who followed the Jesuits' Lenten services in Paris, I seem to see a new Christian literary movement, which is certainly a recoil from the Voltairianism which Renan revived."

The vigour of the Papacy is a fact as tremendous as it is dangerous. Especially is this evident in Rome, where during recent years the Evangelical movement has been so active. The Pope has lost the temporal power, but he wields a wider sway; whereas in 1870 Church properties were confiscated and religious orders abolished, it is now stated that the possessions have been regained, and the influence of the Vatican is practically what it was before Victor Emmanuel entered Rome! So we read in the May issue of Evangelical Christendom, the Rome correspondent of which writes:—

Immense monasteries have sprung up in all parts of the city, where young men are recruited by the hundred for the various religious orders. The convents are constantly multiplied, and nursing sisters of charity monopolise the sick both in the hospitals and at home. No expense is spared in schools and colleges, which openly compete with the Government institutes, and thousands of children belonging to all classes are constantly under the instruction of nuns and priests.

The large number of new churches—though Rome was already full of them—the enormous wealth employed for the tomb of the late Pope, the new chancel at the Lateran, and the magnificent basilica which is to commemorate the reign of this Pontiff, would alone suffice to attest the efforts put forth of late years in Rome. What becomes more and more certain is that another emancipation of Rome is needed. Fire and sword will never overthrow the power of the Popes; it is the Bible that, as Garibaldi foresaw, must liberate Italy.

The Protestant missions in Rome have done nobly, but while they have been labouring with diligence, wealth from all quarters has been pouring into the coffers of the Propaganda. The indestructibility of Christ's Church, is, as men see things, hardly a greater marvel than the recuperative power of the Papacy. Prophecy shows that while one will stand for ever, the other is doomed to destruction.

That God is love, and that true piety involves love to God and man, is a comprehensive truth so fully displayed in the New Testament that we are apt to overlook its enunciation in the Old Testament. The last issue of The Jewish Chronicle gives a portion of a sermon recently preached in the Central Synagogue on "Judaism as a Religion of Love," in which it is shown from the Old Testament alone (1) that love is at the base of God's attitude to man, (2) that it is demanded from man by God, and (3) that it is the bond that must hold together man and man. All God's advances are the outcome of love; this was the case under the Law as well as the Gospel. At Sinai He proclaimed Himself merciful and gracious; He loved Israel with an everlasting love; and He draws men with the bands of love (Ex. xxxiv. 6; Jer. xxxi. 3; Hos. xi. 4). Not only must men "love the Lord with all their heart," but they must also (this justifies the third point) love their neighbours as themselves (Deut. xxx. 16; Lev. xix. 18, 34). With an insight that is certainly remarkable, the preacher (Mr. D. I. Freeman) observed: "In the ideals of the greatest prophets, Israel was eventually to mean the whole of mankind. View the mission of Israel broadly, and you will find that, conjointly with the immediate benefit of Israel, the ultimate salvation is for the whole human race."

NEUTRAL GROUND.—Speaking at the meeting of the Leeds Wesleyan Synod, Rev. S. Chadwick said that from his experiences in the services held at the Coliseum, Leeds, he found the people often preferrred to come to services held on neutral ground. He believed there was needed more freedom and brightness in the ordinary services.

THE UNVEILING.—19.

THE SIXTH TRUMPET.—THE SECOND WOE.

II.

What do these symbolic beings, more terrible than even the locusts which they in some degree resemble, signify? I think that substantially, like the locusts, they represent the lusts which war in our members, which war against the soul. But they mean more.

The First Woe was the consequence of sin, the inevitable fruit reaped from the seed that was sown: "His bones are full of the sin of his youth" (Job. xx. 11). The Second Woe is the present penalty inflicted upon sin under the government of God. The effects of sin are not only the natural reaping from that which is sown, but they are God's judicial punishments.

His own iniquities shall take the wicked,
And he shall be holden with the cords of his sins.

The terrible diseases which result from evil living are God's judgments against vice. "Judgments are prepared for scorners, and stripes for the back of fools." And very often the sins themselves are the means by which the judgments are inflicted.

The Third Woe will be fulfilled when the time of the dead is come that they should be judged (xi. 15, 19).

God's four sore judgments—sword, famine, noisome beasts, and pestilence—which fell upon Jerusalem, and have lain heavily upon her during all the Christian ages, have fallen no less upon the Gentile earth. God designates the locusts in Joel (which we have seen symbolize the lusts and desires of the flesh and of the mind) "my great army which I sent among you." The Apostle Paul says, "God gave them up to uncleanness in the lusts of their own hearts...gave them up unto vile affections...gave them over to a reprobate mind" (Rom. i. 24-28). And James's profound question has already been quoted: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts which war in your members?" The ravages of Attila, of whom it was said that the grass never grew where his horses' hoofs had trodden, as well as those of the Saracens, and the Ottoman Turks, and the blood which has soaked the earth in ancient or modern warfare, have all been caused by God's "great army." For "shall there be evil in a city and the Lord hath not done it?"—God permitting it, overruling it, and saying, "Hitherto, but no further."

These two Woes fall upon "the inhabitants of the earth" (viii. 13), a term which, as we have seen before, describes those who are of the earth earthy; men of the world who have their portion in this life; men who are morally the seed of Cain and Ham and Nimrod; of Ishmael and Esau and Midian; of Saul and Jeroboam and Ahab; of Balaam and Balak and Jezebel; of Judas and Demas and Alexander the coppersmith; men of whom Earth is the realm, and Self the ruling principle.

They are proof alike against outward calamities as under the first four Trumpets; the stings of remorse, and the personal judgments of God, as under the first and second Woes. They repent not of their worship of demons, nor of their evil and selfish lives. Though judgment comes in many forms, and though their kindred and companions die around them, those who remain alive remain impenitent. How constantly and painfully this is made evident in everyday experience. "The wicked still do wickedly."

It may be asked whether this description refers to peculiarly wicked people, or whether it includes all who are not Christians. In answer to this: we need to remember that the apostle John in his Gospel and Epistles draws an absolute line between those who are born again, and those who are not; between those who do not believe on the name of the only begotten Son of God, and those who do; between those who practise sin and those who practise righteousness. And so in the Unveiling, there is a fundamental distinction between those who dwell upon the earth and those who dwell in heaven; between those who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, and those who worship the Beast; between those who are sealed with the Father's name in their foreheads and those who have the mark of the Beast in their forehead or in their hand; between the harvest and the vintage; between the harlot and the bride. Many are so near the border on either side that none other than the Lord knoweth them that are his and them that are not; but all who have neglected or rejected the great salvation, all who have heard the Gospel and not obeyed it, will surely be numbered among these who repented not.

"What think you of Christ?" is the test
To try both your faith and your scheme:
You cannot be right in the rest,
Unless you think rightly of Him.

We must not forget also that God's righteous government deals on the same principle with his own people.

As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till He come. Wherefore whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord unworthily...eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many among you are weak and sickly and many sleep. But if we discerned ourselves we should not be judged. But when we are judged we are chastened of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world (1 Cor. x. 23-34).

Before the Seventh Trumpet is sounded, and the vision of the Third Woe is seen, which contains the Seven Bowls of wrath, and issues in the judgment of the Great White Throne, the spirit of the Seer is relieved by the vision of the Redeemer, the rainbow-crowned Angel of the Covenant, who, by setting his foot upon the heaving and restless sea of nations, and the consolidated earth of his own people, claims all as his own redeemed possession. For "He is the Propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the whole world." M.

JERUSALEM.—Miss Ben Oliel has opened a mission dressmaking school for Jewish girls in Jerusalem. An efficient Christian dressmaker, educated at Kaiserswerth, and speaking English, French, and German, has charge of the ten young women in training. Daily Bible teaching is given; a young widow has left because Christ is so constantly pointed to; but on the other hand many discuss the subject earnestly. Prayer is asked that the Holy Spirit may apply the word to their hearts savingly. The school is under the supervision of the Extra-European Council of the Y.W.C.A., and is supported mainly by pledges raised in the various branches of the Y.W.C.A., of which the worker is a member. The treasurer is Mr. Alfred Seeley, The Ferns, Richmond Hill, Surrey.

THE GUARDS' MISSION, 58, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, Pimlico, has closed another year's service. Sergeant George Pullinger, the missionary, writes in the seventh report:—"Four meetings are held weekly, to which soldiers and civilians are invited. Christian work among soldiers in London is very different from that in other garrison towns and camps. The barracks are very comfortable, with library, refreshment and recreation rooms, besides the canteen, where (we are only too sorry to say) the men resort to indulge in the drink that is the cause of so much sin and trouble. Then, if he goes out of barracks, the attractions and temptations which beset him on every hand are calculated to draw him away from attending to those things which concern his eternal welfare. We must pray and labour that these fine men shall not be left to perish in their sins without something being done to rescue them."

KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 22 TO 27.

In his circular letter announcing this Convention, Mr. Robt. Wilson says:—

We would in meeting together specially seek to be filled with the Holy Spirit. How much of the service of God's loving children is lacking in power, and all but valueless, for want of this "power from on high"? Let us each remember, if we are serving truly, we are "labourers together with God," and go forth in the confident expectation that his power will prevail—if his word, and not our own, is set before others. May his blessed Book ever be to us an infallible guide, preserving us, as illuminated by his Spirit, from the many inventions of men, inspired, too often, by him who is the father of lies, and whose great aim from the first, until now, has been to fritter away the truths of God's Holy Word. When thus tempted by Satan, the Great Master said to him, "Get thee behind Me."

Those who have been sent forth to foreign fields of service have our special sympathy and prayers, that they "may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." Powerless in themselves, but "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," He will assuredly "show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards Him."

Let us each in drawing together to worship in this Convention, seek to be used of God to help some soul onward; so that not only those who publicly minister the Word to us (for whom we pray) may be blessed and be made a blessing, but that fruit may abound in ministry in the home circles to his glory. Whilst thus watering others, we shall ourselves be abundantly watered, and each rejoice in some service for our beloved Lord, "Shining for Jesus," "till He come."

Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, will again kindly act as hon. secretary, to whom applications for information respecting lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired.

THE WEAK MADE STRONG.

Several weeks ago, a sad accident occurred to a poor lad who is occasionally subject to epileptic fits. One morning when the elder members of the family were at work, the younger ones at school, and his mother busy in an adjoining place washing, he was left in the kitchen alone. He took his seat before the fire, when suddenly a fit came upon him and he fell forward upon it. His mother hearing a noise hurried into the room, in time to save him from being burnt to death, but too late to prevent him being seriously injured. He was immediately conveyed to the infirmary. His pain was so severe, and his fear so great, that whenever the doctors had to operate upon him it was necessary to strap him down.

One of his medical attendants, however, wisely directed his attention to a text of Scripture, contained in a little book of Mr. Meyer's, which one of the nurses had kindly lent him: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." The truth conveyed in these words entirely changed the current of his thoughts. The idea of a loving Saviour present with him, to sustain him in all he was undergoing, and might yet have to endure, came to him with wonderful power. The impression thus made was deepened by Mr. Meyer's remarks upon the text. From this time his sufferings have been borne not only patiently, but joyfully. A bright light has broken in upon his life. In a short time he will probably return to his home. May his testimony there prove a blessing to his brothers and sisters.

Would that many of the doctors and nurses attendant on such institutions were equally ready to direct the attention of poor sufferers to the same source of comfort. M. S. H.

MR. CHARLES D. DOUBLE, of Harvey-street Hall, Hoxton (in connection with Park Church, Highbury), having completed twenty years of service, a "Three Days' Festival" was organised to do honour to the occasion; special anniversary services being held on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, May 5-7. Rev. P. Carmichael presided at the public meeting, and the speakers included Revs. P. Hester and Veryman Trimming, and Mr. W. Ives, who presented Mr. Double with a token of loving esteem.

Three Scenes in a Life.

Isaiah xxxvii., xxxviii., xxxix.

It was a day of trouble, and rebuke, and blasphemy. The armies of Sennacherib encompassed Jerusalem, and if proud, boastful words had been heroic deeds, he would certainly have carried their glory into the enemy's land. But to all these the king's commandment was, "Answer him not." And when the letter came so plainly addressed to Israel's God, the good King Hezekiah took it straight to Him for the answer. He "went up unto the house of the Lord, and spread it out before the Lord" (Isa. xxxvii. 14). "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble" (Ps. xlvi. 1). Stones of difficulty become stones of remembrance through the gracious interposition of God (Mark xvi. 4; 1 Sam. vii. 12). "Thus saith the Lord concerning the king of Assyria, 'He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor cast a bank against it. I will defend this city to save it.' So he returned with shame of face into his own land" (2 Chron. xxii. 21).

Again, it is a day of trouble. Sickness has come—sickness unto death. A faithful messenger, with a message from a Court beyond which there is no appeal. "Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die, and not live." Who among us would have prayed for life after that? Doubtless, Hezekiah's faith was strengthened by former deliverances, and like that woman of Canaan (Mark vii. 25), who pressed on with her plea to the feet of Jesus, albeit his words were most discouraging, "Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the Lord." "Call upon Me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me" (Ps. l. 15). "I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears, behold I will add unto thy days fifteen years."

Again, there is a stir in the Court of King Hezekiah. Messengers arrived from a far country, even from Babylon, bringing letters of congratulation and a royal present! It was a day of prosperity and sunshine, but none the less dangerous; and the man who had received such tokens of the Divine favour—who had but to ask and receive—followed the council of his own heart, and fell into the snare of the enemy. "Satan's opportunity is—a soul off its guard." What a solemn lesson for the child of God! When we have got our prayers abundantly answered, "with signs following," all the more need have we to "watch and pray." As long as we are down here we shall be within reach of the enemy's fire, and there will be that in our hearts ready to respond to his temptations. There was only One who could say, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me" (John xiv. 30). Paul, caught up into the third heaven, and hearing words unutterable, still needed "a thorn in the flesh" to keep him humble. "A messenger of Satan," through the mercy of God, defeated the devil's own plan. Better a thorn in the flesh than a wound in the soul. Better to suffer than to sin.

Hezekiah did not spread out these letters before the Lord. Had he done so he would have seen "the writing between the lines," and the whole affair would have worn a different aspect. "As for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped. . . . . Until I went into the sanctuary of God" (Ps. lxxiii. 2, 17). Ah! how we need to turn the light of the sanctuary on all our arrangements and transactions.

Child of God, are you in doubt or perplexity as to your path? You stand at "a place where two ways meet." You know not which to choose! Yet, "why dost thou cry aloud" as if there were none to help? "Is there no King in thee? Is thy Counsellor perished?" (Micah iv. 9). "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God." By patient waiting upon God light will arise, or if not, He will lead you safely through the darkness:—

It is better to walk in the dark with God
Than go alone in the light;
I'd rather walk by faith with Him
Than go alone by sight.

"Hezekiah was glad of them." There is something wrong when a child of God confides in worldlings, and is "glad" of their company. Sooner or later he will find it is a deceitful world. "The staff of a broken reed, whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand and pierce it." (Our enemies themselves being judges, Isai. xxxvi. 6.) This is not the way to become a blessing to the world. The more utterly separate that we are, the more power will we have with God and man. Jesus drew the line straight and clear in one sentence twice repeated. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John xvii. 14, 16).

"The world seeks for joy: they seek everywhere but in Christ. The world advertises its great days, but we only look for one great day, the day when we shall see Him as He is. The world has its banquets, but they have no charm for us, for He has brought us to the banqueting-house, and his banner over us is love. The world has its reformation schemes; we know of only one remedy, and that is Christ."

Marvel not that Christ in glory,
All my inmost heart hath won,
Not a star to cheer my darkness;
But a light beyond the sun.
I have seen the face of Jesus—
Tell me not of aught beside;
I have heard the voice of Jesus—
All my soul is satisfied.

A satisfied soul cares not to wander! Hezekiah "shewed them his treasures." And are "silver and gold" and such like the "treasures" of a child of God? Surely no! "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord." The only safe boasting for a pardoned sinner! In speaking of ourselves, even of our spiritual attainments, there is considerable danger, because of the presence of the great enemy, and because of the pride that may be lurking in our own hearts. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall" (1 Cor. x. 12).

There is a man who often stands
Between me and Thy glory,
His name is self—
My carnal self
Stands 'twixt me and Thy glory.

Oh mortify him, mortify him,
Put him down, my Saviour;
Exalt Thyself alone; lift high
The banner of the Cross, and in its folds
Conceal the standard-bearer.

WORK IN BOMBAY.—Mr. M. H. Mody, known to many friends in England, is about to revisit this country, with Mrs. Mody. A sister of the latter has recently died in England, and this, with Mr. Mody's poor health, has made the visit advisable. They hope to reach our shores about the end of May. The work carried on by these friends in Bombay, among young people, and in the open air among Parsees, Hindoos, and Mohammedans, continues to prosper. During their absence it will be cared for by Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, of the Christian Alliance Mission. An enlarged effort is being made on behalf of work among Jews. Mr. and Mrs. Mody, during their short stay in England, would be glad to address gatherings of friends interested in India. Letters to them may be addressed to the editor's care.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.—1.

By an OLD SOLDIER.

"And why take ye thought for raiment?"

On leaving the army I was engaged, as clerk, by a prosperous building firm in the neighbourhood of the town in which I had settled down, and, with salary and pension together, was doing fairly well. I was married, and had a family of children dependent upon me, only one of whom, a lad of fourteen, was earning; the kindness of my employers having created an opening for him, thus the wolf had been effectually kept from our door. But "man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward," and for the first time in my life dark shadows cast their painful gloom upon me.

A slight throbbing, painful sensation in the forefinger of my right hand one morning, followed by increased pain and swelling, in a few days compelled me to desist from work—"not for long," it was thought at first, but as fingers of either hand became successively attacked with phlegmons, full eighteen months had elapsed before I was rid of the malady, and to this day I bear traces of the surgical knife and its ineffaceable mutilations.

"You will never be able to use a pen again," said the doctor; and so the firm presented me with a five-pound note, and filled up my place.

But our resources had been severely strained during the eighteen months before I began to feel myself able to get to work again.

One evening my son came home from work without his overcoat. A tramp, he said, had made off with it whilst he was engaged football playing with other boys. "What am I to do, father? The weather is so very cold, and the mornings so dark, and the way so long to the yard." "Well, my son, you must take my overcoat, and I will trust in the Lord to provide me with another."

Long and weary weeks indeed followed the transfer of my own overcoat to my son, but none had come to supply its place. "Had God forgotten to be gracious?" I sometimes asked myself, "Is his mercy clean gone from me for ever?" And then would come to my mind such passages as—

Firm as a rock his truth shall stand
When rolling years have ceased to move.

But one day with faithless thoughts I roamed from room to room as if in search for something I had lost. I paused an instant before the table upon which lay our family Bible. Reverently inserting my hand, it opened at the 50th Psalm, and in an instant the fifteenth verse attracted my notice—"Call on Me in the time of trouble, I will hear and deliver thee."

As though I had sustained an electric shot I threw up both hands, exclaiming "There! There! Fool that I have been all this time, charging the Lord instead of myself with unfaithfulness. See here is his promise awaiting me." I hastened upstairs to my bedroom, and, falling on my knees, besought pardon of my sin, and pleaded the promised help according to his Word. My petition was definite—as all petitions ought to be—I was in want of an overcoat, and my prayer was "That the Lord would be pleased to send me an overcoat."

The last sentence was still on my lips when my daughter came in to say that a gentleman was waiting below to see me.

"How do ye do, Mr. C——; how do ye do?" and before I could reply the visitor—our incumbent—taking me by the arm, said in a whisper, "You will excuse me, Mr. C——, but I thought you might know what to do with an overcoat, as the weather is still very cold. I have ordered two to be taken to the parsonage. Will you send and fetch one away, if it suits you? Good morning—good morning!" and he grasped my hand with a vice-like grip. The next moment the good man was in the street walking at a pace and rate as if dreading pursuit, or as though fearing the echo of the praise of his good deed should overtake him.

In recording this striking fulfilment of the promise which had led me in so singular a manner to ask the Divine help on this occasion, I have always felt it binding on me by a sense of gratitude to carry out the latter part of that promise—"to glorify God" by telling of what He had done for me "in time of trouble"—indeed, so timely was the fulfilment of the Divine promise on this occasion, that it literally bears out the prophetic declaration of Isa. lxv.: "Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." Even so, before I began my supplication the good minister must have started on his errand of mercy—arriving just as I ceased.

The Faith of God's Elect.

1 Sam. xvii.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

In the valley of Elah to-day, the traveller finds the remains of an immense terebinth. Perhaps this gave it its name, "the valley of the terebinth." Starting from the neighbourhood of the ancient city of Hebron, the valley runs in a north-western direction towards the sea; it is about a mile across, and in the middle there is a deep ravine, some 20 feet across, with a depth of ten or twelve feet. Winter torrents have made this their track.

Having recovered from the chastisement inflicted on them by Saul and Jonathan at Michmash, the Philistines had marched up the valley of Elah, encamping on its western slope between Shochoh and Ephes-dammim, a name with an ominous meaning, "the house of blood," probably because on more than one occasion it had been the scene of border forays. Saul pitched his camp on the other side of the valley; behind them the Judean hills, ridge on ridge, to the blue distance, where Jerusalem lay, as yet in the lands of the Jebusite.

That valley was to witness an encounter which brought into fullest contrast the principles on which God's warriors are to contend, not only with flesh and blood, but against the principalities and powers of darkness. Three figures stand out sharply defined on that memorable day.

First, the Philistine Champion. He was tall—9ft. 6in. in height; he was heavily armed, for his armour fell a spoil to Israel, was eagerly examined, and minutely described; they even weighed it and found it five thousand shekels of brass, equivalent to two hundredweight; he was protected by an immense shield, borne in front of him, so as to leave his arms and hands free; he wielded a ponderous spear, whilst sword and javelin were girt to his side; he was apt at braggadocio, talked of the banquet he proposed to give to the fowls and beasts, and defied the armies of the living God.

Second, Saul. A choice young man and a goodly: there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he, from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people. He had also a good suit of armour, a helmet of brass, and a coat of mail. In earlier days, when he had blown the trumpet its notes had rung throughout the land, stirring all hearts with anticipations of certain victory. Even now, the formula of his former faith and fervour came easily to his lips, as he assured the young shepherd that the Lord would certainly be with him; but he dared not adventure himself in conflict with what he reckoned were utterly overwhelming odds; he was near daunting David with his materialism and unbelief. "Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him, for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth."

Third, David. He was but a youth, and ruddy, and withal of a fair countenance. No sword was in his hand; he carried a staff, probably his shepherd's crook; no armour had he on, save the breastplate of righteousness, and the helmet of salvation; no weapon, but a sling in his hand, and five smooth stones which he had chosen out of the torrent bed, and put in the shepherd's bag which he had, even in his scrip. But he was in possession of a mystic spiritual power, which no onlooker could have guessed, and which he might have found it difficult to define. The living God was a reality to him. His countrymen were not simply, as Goliath insinuated, servants to Saul; they were the army of the living God. When he spake of armies, using the plural as of more than one, he may have been thinking of Jacob's vision of the host of angels at Mahanaim, or of Joshua's, when the Angel of the Covenant revealed himself as captain of the Lord's host that waited inside under arms, prepared to co-operate with that which Israel's chieftain was about to lead across the Jordan. As likely as not, to the lad's imagination the air was full of horses and chariots of fire, of those angel hosts, which, in after days he addressed as strong in might, hearkening unto the voice of God, and hastening to do his pleasure, in all places of his dominion. At least, he had no doubt that the Lord would vindicate his glorious name, and deliver into his hands this uncircumcised Philistine.

LET US STUDY THE ORIGIN AND TEMPER OF THIS HEROIC FAITH.

It had been born in secret, and nursed in solitude. As day after day he considered the heavens and earth, they appeared as one vast tent, in which God dwelt. Nature was the material dwelling-place of the eternal Spirit, who was as real to his young heart, as the works of his hands to his poet's eyes. God was as real to him as Jesse, or his brothers, or Saul, or Goliath. His soul had so rooted itself in this conception of God's presence, that he bore it with him, undisturbed by the shout of the soldiers as they went forth to the battle, and the searching questions addressed to him by Saul.

This is the unfailing secret. There is no short cut to the life of faith, which is the all-vital condition of a holy and victorious life. We must have periods of lonely meditation and fellowship with God. That our souls should have their mountains of fellowship, their valleys of quiet rest beneath the shadow of a great rock, their nights beneath the stars, when darkness has veiled the material and silenced the stir of human life, and has opened the view of the infinite and eternal, is as indispensable as that our bodies should have food. Thus alone can the sense of God's Presence become the fixed possession of the soul, enabling it to say repeatedly with the Psalmist, "Thou art near, O God."

It had been exercised in lonely conflict. With a beautiful modesty David would probably have kept to himself the story of the lion and the bear, unless it had been extracted from him by a desire to magnify Jehovah. Possibly there had been many conflicts of a similar kind, so that his faith had become strengthened by use, as the sinews of his wiry young body by exertion. In these ways he was being prepared for this supreme conflict.

What we are in solitude, we shall be in public. Do not for a moment suppose, O self-indulgent disciple, that the stimulus of a great occasion will dower thee with a heroism of which thou betrayest no trace in secret hours. The crisis will only reveal the true quality and temper of the soul. The flight at the Master's arrest will make it almost needless for the historian to explain that the hour which should have been spent in watching was squandered in sleep. It is the universal testimony of holy men that lonely hours are fullest of temptation. It is in these we must conquer if we would be victorious when the eyes of some great assembly are fastened upon us.

It stood the test of daily life. There are some who appear to think that the loftiest attainments of the spiritual life are incompatible with the grind of daily toil and the friction of the home. Emancipate us from these, they cry. Give us nothing to do except to nurse our souls to noble deeds, deliver us from the obligations of family ties, and we will fight for those poor souls who are engrossed with the cares and ties of the ordinary and commonplace.

It was not thus with David. When Jesse, eager to know how it fared with his three elder sons, who had followed Saul to the battle, bade David take them rations, and a present to the captain of their division, there was an immediate and ready acquiescence to his father's proposal, "he rose up early in the morning, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him." And before he left his flock he took care to entrust them with a keeper. We must always be careful not to neglect one duty for another; if we are summoned to the camp, we must first see to the tendance of the fold. He that is faithful in the greater must first have been faithful in the least. It is in the home, at the desk, and in the Sunday-school, that we are being trained for service at home and abroad. We must not forsake the training-ground till we have learnt all the lessons God has designed it to teach, and have heard his summons.

It bore meekly misconstruction and rebuke. Reaching the camp, he found the troops forming in battle array, and ran to the front. He had already discovered his brothers, and saluted them, when he was arrested by the braggart voice of Goliath from across the valley, and saw, to his chagrin, the men of Israel turn to flee, stricken with sore affright. When he expressed surprise, he learnt from bystanders that even Saul shared the general panic, and had issued rewards for a champion. So he passed from one group to another of the soldiery, questioning, gathering further confirmation of his first impressions, and evincing everywhere the open-eyed wonder of his soul that "any man's heart should fail because of him."

Eliab had no patience with the words and bearing of his young brother. How dare he suggest that the behaviour of the men of Israel was unworthy of themselves and their religion. What did he mean by inquiring so minutely after the particulars of the royal reward? Was he thinking of winning it? It was absurd to talk like that. Of course it could only be talk, but it was amazing to hear it suggested that he, too, was a soldier and qualified to fight. Evidently something should be said to thrust him back into his right place, and minimise the effect of his words, and letting the bystanders know who and what he was. "Why art thou come down? With whom?" he said, with a sneer, "hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness?" Ah! what venom, as of an asp, lay in those few words. David, however, ruled his spirit, and answered softly. "Surely," said he, "my father's wish to learn of your welfare was cause enough to bring me here." It was there that the victory over Goliath was really won. To have lost his temper in this unprovoked assault would have broken the alliance of his soul with God, and drawn a veil over his sense of his presence. But to meet evil with good, and maintain an unbroken composure, not only showed the burnished beauty of his spirit's armour, but cemented his alliance with the Lamb of God.

To bear with unfailing meekness the spiteful attacks of malice and envy; not to be overcome by evil, but to overcome evil with good; to suffer wrong; to possess one's soul in patience; to keep the mouth with a bridle when the wicked is before us; to pass unruffled and composed through a very cyclone of unkindliness and misrepresentation—this is only possible to those in whose breasts the dove-like Spirit has found an abiding place, and whose hearts are sentinelled by the peace of God; but these are they who bear themselves as heroes in the fight. A marvellous exhibition was given that day in the valley of Elah that those who are gentlest under provocation are strongest in the fight, and that meekness is really an attribute of might.

It withstood the reasonings of the flesh. Saul was very eager for David to adopt his armour, though he dared not don it himself. He was taken with the boy's ingenuous earnestness, but advised him to adopt the means. "Don't be rash; don't expect a miracle to be wrought; by all means trust God, and go. But be wise. We ought to adopt ordinary precautions."

It was a critical hour. Had David turned aside to act on these suggestions, he would certainly have forfeited the Divine alliance, which was conditioned by his guileless faith. There is no sin in using means, but they must come second, not first; they must be such as God suggests; it is a sore temptation to adopt them as indicated by the flesh, and hope that God will bless them, instead of waiting before Him, to know what He would have done and how. Many a time has the advice of worldly prudence damped the eager aspiration of the spirit, and hindered the doing of a great deed.

But an unseen hand withdrew David from the meshes of temptation. He had already yielded so far to Saul's advice as to have donned his armour and girded on the sword. Then he turned to Saul and said, "I cannot go with these," and he put them off him. It was not now Saul's armour and the Lord, but the Lord alone; and he was able, without hesitation, to accost the giant with the words, "The Lord saveth not with sword and spear."

His faith had been put to the severest tests and was approved. Being more precious than silver or gold, it had been exposed to the most searching ordeal, but the furnace of trial had shown it to be of heavenly temper. Now let Goliath do his worst; he shall know that there is a God in Israel.

The Evangelist:

HIS GIFT, CHARACTER, AND WORK.

A PAPER READ AT THE RECENT CONFERENCE OF EVANGELISTS,
By Mr. W. R. LANE.

There are three Scriptures in which the word Evangelist occurs: Eph. iv. 11, Acts xxi. 8, and 2 Tim. iv. 5. The prominent thought in Ephesians is that the evangelist is the gift of the ascended Christ. In the Acts we see a man on whom that gift has been bestowed. This naturally leads to the consideration of the character of the evangelist. In Timothy it is the work that seems to be emphasised. "Do the work of an evangelist."

These Scriptures suggest to us, therefore, the subject of "The Gift, Character, and Work of the Evangelist."

I.—THE EVANGELIST'S GIFT.

In Eph. iv. we see the heavenly origin of true ministry. It begins with the exalted Lord and Head of the Church. He is the Sovereign Disposer of all gift and power. He gives to every man his work; and He apportions our service not according to our merit or even our natural capacity, but according to his own good pleasure. We must trace our service as well as our salvation back to the spring of his eternal grace. Our Lord Christ is exalted not only to give repentance and remission of sins, but also to bestow upon his Church graces and gifts for the furtherance of his Gospel and Kingdom amongst men. All fulness dwells in Him. He is the one source of life and power. The Church may make an order of evangelists, but the Living Christ alone can create an evangelist. In the Gospels we see the lowly Jesus on earth among men. He was ever the true Evangelist, for He travelled from city to city and from village to village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the Kingdom of God; and in this He was our perfect example. In the Epistles we see Him exalted in heaven. He went up with the shout of a conqueror laden with the spoils of battle, and gave gifts to men, and in the distribution of those gifts "He gave some evangelists." He descended to the cross of shame that there might be a Gospel to preach, and He ascended to the throne of glory, and endowed men to preach it.

Provision is made for the sure foundation of the Church in apostles and prophets, for the building up of the Church in pastors and teachers, and for the extension of the Church in evangelists. Long ago Jesus said: "Other sheep I have. . . . Them also I must bring"; and He is realising his gracious purpose to-day in the evangelistic grace and energy bestowed upon his Church. Every true Gospeller is an appeal to the sons of men from the tender heart of the Son of God. He was "moved with compassion" to a perishing world when "He gave some evangelists."

Thus we see ourselves in this sacred service placed by sovereign grace in direct and intimate fellowship with our living Lord and Saviour in heaven. Our work is from Him, and in Him, and to Him. We do well to begin the consideration of the subject where the subject begins. Let us draw near with lowly and grateful hearts, and worship Him who has put in us—even us—the word of reconciliation, and as we abide this day together in his presence may we learn anew the old lesson that all our springs are in Him.

II.—THE EVANGELIST'S CHARACTER.

Acts xxi. 8 brings before us the man, the only man to whom the Holy Spirit has definitely attached the title of "the evangelist." No doubt the title "sprang out of the reality," as Alford says: that is, he got the name by doing the work; but in any case a man so denominated in the Word must be of special interest to us in our conference to-day.

In Acts vi. we get some references to him which may enable us to form some conception of his character as a disciple before he became a public minister. He was one of the seven selected by the Church for the diaconate. Of "honest report"; well spoken of by all. A Christian man of known godliness and blameless life, his sterling, stainless character commanded the esteem and the faith of the disciples. And he was one who not only had the Spirit of God, but who had proved himself as possessing that Spirit in marked and rich fulness. He had evidently learned the need of being filled with the Spirit for the daily walk of ordinary disciple life, and so he became qualified for the prominent service to which he was afterward called. It is worth noting, by the way, that Philip and his six brethren do not volunteer for this work on the assumption that they are full of the Holy Ghost. The command, "Look ye out" seven men, seems to imply that the men with the needed fitness would not be likely to thrust themselves forward. The Spirit-filled man will not need to call the attention of the disciples to the fact. They will likely "look him out" when the moment comes. He "purchased to himself a good degree," while at the work of serving tables, and soon Philip the deacon became Philip the evangelist.

When the persecution arose after the death of Stephen, he went to Samaria, where he was the means of the first great Gospel awakening outside Jerusalem. Acting on the marching orders given to the Church, he became a witness in Samaria. Multitudes turned to the Lord, and there was great joy in that city. Next, we find him in the lonely desert, after one sheep that was lost. The success of the Samaritan revival did not spoil him for a bit of quiet wayside service. He can talk to the crowd, but he can just as happily talk to one man. At the call of God, he cheerfully leaves the glad awakened city, where eager throngs were hanging upon his lips, to hold a mission in a chariot with one soul. The eunuch, with the saving knowledge of Jesus in his heart, went home rejoicing, and Philip preached his way down to Cæsarea. He could no more stop preaching than the lark in the summer sky could stop his singing.

At Cæsarea we get a glimpse of his home-life. Yes, itinerant gospeller as he was, he had a home, and a blessed home, too, for his four daughters are consecrated to God, and gifted in some eminent way for his service. He did not neglect his own vineyard. He built the wall over against his own house. The Gospel which he preached in Samaria he lived in Cæsarea. He seems to have had a comfortable dwelling (I have an idea that in those early days of first love evangelists must have been very well cared for), fit to entertain Paul and his company, and he gave them all a warm, hospitable welcome to it.

Now, underlying this man's public evangelising, was evidently a sweet and a beautiful life, a noble Christian character. His practice was a commentary on his preaching. "He lives," said Luther once of a friend, "he lives what we preach." And is not, dear brethren, this question of personal godliness of most supreme and vital moment? We must be, first of all, not preachers, but Christians, if our ministry is to be what God means it to be. Dr. Stalker says, "The effect of a sermon depends, first of all, on what is said, next on how it is said, but hardly less on who says it." We must never forget that the personal character of the worker will to a large extent determine the character of his work. Not only what we say and what we do must be considered, but also what we are. Behind the saying and the doing is the being. "As the man is, so is his strength." The best preparation for service, therefore, is the preparation of self. "Take heed to thyself, and to the doctrine, and continue in them, for in doing this, thou shall both save thyself, and them that hear thee." Those who would save others, must save themselves. Our whole manhood must be brought powerfully under the influence and control of the Gospel if we would effectively preach it to others. "He that means as he speaks," said holy Richard Baxter, "will surely do as he speaks. One proud, surly, lordly word, one needless contention, one covetous action, may cut the throat of many a sermon."

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee," said the aged Paul to the young evangelist Timothy. Even though the gift be divinely bestowed, it must be cared for and cultivated by earnest and ceaseless prayer. The further exhortation of the apostle in the second Epistle seems to indicate that Timothy had been neglecting his gift, and that he had "somewhat declined." "Stir up the gift that is in thee," he says, lit., "Rekindle it into a flame." The fire is there, but it is getting low for the want of a vigorous stir. Oh, my brothers, is there a word of counsel and warning, perhaps of reproof, for you and me in this exhortation? Does the sacred altar-fire of God burn and flame within us as once it did? Have we as much inward vital godliness as our hearers often credit us with? The question is not, how much of truth do I know, but, how much of it burns like a fire in my soul.

There are hungry souls all about us crying out for bread, but there is also a soul within us which will famish if it be neglected. The word of God must be our bread to eat, as well as our seed to sow. We do not preach too much, but do we pray too little? We have not cared too much for others, but have we cared enough for ourselves? In the incessant "go" of missions, with all that that means, not only of public meetings, but of personal dealing with inquirers and others, and of the demands of social life between whiles, in the homes where we are being kindly entertained, it is alas! too easy to miss the blessing of the quiet hour alone with God.

It will often need the most determined effort to withdraw from the rush of busy service among men to the hush of the solemn presence of God. There is a beautiful illustration of this in 2 Sam. vii. 18: "Then went King David in and sat before the Lord" in grateful and hallowed communion. And after this he smote and subdued the Philistines. There is a moral order in all this which is full of suggestion to us. He went in as a trustful worshipper, and he went out a triumphant warrior. If we learn to sit before the Lord like David in ch. vii. we shall stand before our foes like David in ch. viii. If we would be remembered of God on the battlefield, He must be remembered of us in the sanctuary. My brothers, our deep, urgent need lies here. We must be more with God. I am speaking at least for one when I say this. In the still hour there will come a mightier inflow of Christ's mysterious virtue and life to our souls. Our own spiritual life will become more vigorously and firmly rooted.

The truths of the Gospel will more thoroughly penetrate our inmost being. Our messages will then bring deep conviction to men because we ourselves are deeply convicted by them.

The great and solemn realities of Christ and his cross, holiness and sin, judgment and eternity, will become realities to our hearers because they are so real to us.

> Be what thou seemest: live thy creed;
> Hold up to earth the torch Divine;
> Be what thou prayest to be made;
> Let thy great Master's step be thine.

III.—THE EVANGELIST'S WORK.

The sphere of the evangelist's work is the world rather than the church. His desire is to bring Christ to hearts and lives where Christ is not known. If his ministry be in the power of the Holy Ghost, it will stir up and revive saints; but its main business is to save sinners. The careless will be awakened to concern, sinning men will repent, the halting come to a solemn decision, the earnest inquirer will be guided into rest and peace. Believers will be added unto the Lord. And thus the hearts of pastors, parents, Sunday-school teachers, and many an obscure but faithful worker will be gladdened and encouraged. These are some of the signs which will assuredly follow the work of a God-sent evangelist.

The title explains both the work and the means by which the work is to be done. He is one who announces good tidings. If we would make full proof of our ministry, we must make much of the message. The character of the messenger, as we have seen, is important, but the nature of the message is all-important. Paul told the Corinthians that he had begotten them in Christ Jesus by the Gospel (1 Cor. iv. 15), and in chapter xv. he repeats a summary of that Gospel, which he had preached unto them, which they believed and by which they were saved. Christ's death for sin and his resurrection according to the Scriptures were the fundamental parts of his Gospel. There is far more, of course, in this message than appears on the surface; much is implied that is not plainly stated. It is true he grounds everything upon the indisputable facts of the death and resurrection of Christ; but he carefully explained to them the meaning of these facts. He says not only "Christ died," that is a fact; but he says, "Christ died for our sins," that is a doctrine. He shows the relation between their sins and his death. The cause of his death was their sins; and he goes on to explain the vital connection between the perfect atonement for their sins and Christ's resurrection. The facts that Christ died and rose again, become the Gospel of peace and comfort to me only when the meaning of those facts enters into my soul. One Greek word which is often translated "preach" (for instance, Acts xiii. 38) means to "tell thoroughly." We must make the way clear, and make the message plain. Preach Christ, explain what He has done and is doing for men, what He can do in men, and what he becomes to men who trust Him. Preach the Cross, as the manifestation of Divine love and the measure of human sin. Preaching Christ means preaching the atoning blood, as the only ground of Divine forgiveness. The cross is the way from God to men, and from men to God. The God of Calvary is the God of Sinai, and He can clear the sinner from condemnation, only because the sinner's Substitute has been condemned for him. There is no standing for the sinner in the presence of God, nor ever will be, but in the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Proclaim the pity of Jesus that inclines Him to save and the power of Jesus that enables Him to save. Show how that salvation means deliverance from the everlasting judgment of sin, but emphasize also the powerful and beneficent effects of the Gospel in men's hearts and lives in this present world.

The subject of sin will be solemnly prominent in all Gospel testimony that aims at the conscience. The message must cut and cut deeply if the results are to be abiding. The Holy Spirit comforts, but He first convicts. We must indeed give a "clear testimony to all the doctrines which constitute or lie around the Gospel." God give us the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord, that we may in very deed preach the Gospel WITH THE HOLY GHOST sent down from heaven.

With the Independents.

THE meetings of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, held last week, were presided over by Rev. URIJAH R. THOMAS, of Bristol, whose public services, fruitful ministry, and genial brotherliness well deserve the honour which his brethren have put upon him. The business meeting was quiet and untroubled by any of those questions which have sometimes created great excitement; nothing relating either to doctrine or practice called forth opposing views.

The report, read by Rev. W. J. WOODS, contained references to evangelistic work which were of much interest. Help has been given by the Union to a church in Paris, from which encouraging results are reported. Mr. Anderson's ministry there, the report says, "is as if one stood casting seed into a rapid river, but it is gratifying to learn that he is constantly receiving evidence that the incorruptible seed of the Word of God, borne afar upon that swift current, is germinating in distant lands and bringing forth the fruits of righteousness."

WORK IN THE VILLAGES.

The report of the Union calls special attention to the weakness of village churches, which are constantly suffering from the drift of the population from the country to the towns. On Tuesday morning the subject came up again in the assembly at the City Temple, when there was some earnest and practical speaking, notably that of a plain evangelist from Huntingdonshire, who was both full of facts and burning with zeal. So caught was the assembly with his artless eloquence that he had a double share of time allowed him; and it was feeling the touch of reality as he told the story of his work in the midst of fourteen villages, how he had reopened a deserted chapel, and gathered into it a large congregation; how he had drawn the rustics from their sinful pleasures at the holiday season, and got them under the influence of the Gospel; and how, night after night, the chapels were opened for some good purpose. A touch of deep pathos was added to his powerful speech when he told how he was entirely without money when the first of his two children was born, and how the sum of two shillings and eleven pence was collected for him the next day. A thoroughly practical and resolute spirit was in the assembly, one minister offering to do without a new coat, and give the money to the villages.

The same spirit reappeared in the annual meeting in the evening. The smallness of the place of meeting was helpful to freeness of speaking, and promises of money help came in freely. The great lack, it seemed to us, was an absence of an appeal to those highest motives which can move the soul. The most effectual way of rousing Christian men is by appealing to the Cross and its infinite meanings, and although we are sure the speakers were all in sympathy with that power of God, they did not make it so manifest as they might have done; but the village will feel the good effect of the meeting for many a day.

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

The address by Mr. THOMAS was on a characteristic subject, and was handled in a characteristic way. Brotherhood was the topic of a man who is pre-eminently brotherly. It was wide enough to allow of the introduction of everything human, and full use was made of its comprehensiveness. To give even an outline of it would be impossible; some of its points are referred to in our "Notes and Comments." Its chief value lay in the application of the Christian brotherly spirit to the needs of this time, both in the Church and in the world, and great insistence was laid on the impossibility of attaining to a solution of any of the vexed questions of the day apart from Christian truth and grace.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

One of the chief features of the work were the meetings of the London Missionary Society. The prayer meeting on Monday was crowded, and was a time long to be remembered. Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE, who presided, said that the history of the Society during the last hundred years seemed to have written right across it, in luminous letters, the great word—GOD. The manner in which the idea of a society for the evangelisation of the world fastened on the minds of various men in various places, and the impulse and call by which they came together to do a common work, were clearly from God. The smallness of the beginning was another evidence of Divine working. "Splendid beginnings" are apt to mean ignominious endings; but the grain of mustard seed grows till it becomes a great tree. The time of the beginning of the Society and the time when different missionaries entered the lands of their adoption, showed the determining wisdom of God, who fixes the times and the seasons. The power which had attended the preaching of Christ was evidence that God had been working, as He never fails to work when Christ is the theme. The manner in which difficulties, always arising, now in one form and now in another, had been met and overcome, proved the faithfulness of God. Every difficulty had marked a new development and an onward step.

WOMEN AND MISSION WORK.

The meeting for women was a success; there was more life and power than in the earlier days of the women's assembling; an undeveloped vein of influence is being opened up. The change is especially visible in the larger part which is taken by women in the general meetings. On Thursday morning half the time was given to women's work, and Mrs. BRYSON, of Tientsin, spoke well on the things she has seen. Very touching were the instances she gave of the gratitude of the Chinese for kindness shown to them and services done to them; and very tender was the reference she made to the little English burying-ground outside Tientsin, where Gilmour and Roberts and other missionaries are laid. The way in which some Chinese converts will deny themselves in order to aid the truth recalls the widow in the Gospels. Mr. LEWIS, of Bellary, also had valuable testimony to give on this subject of women in India, and their marvellous power in aiding the Gospel. When a new Christian home is constituted there, both husband and wife being Christians, the effect is great, because the contrast with heathenism is great. One heathen mother testified that the home of her Christian son and daughter-in-law was heaven; she wanted no better heaven, but her Fakir son lived on a dunghill, and his home was hell; she did not remain a heathen much longer. Mr. Lewis brought out very clearly the suggestive fact that, whereas woman in India is harshly and unjustly treated, yet her influence in retaining men in heathenism is enormous; the wish of mother or of grandmother prevails. Evidence abounds that that country is indulging a profound change which reaches to the very foundations of life.

PRINCIPAL FAIRBAIRN'S SERMON.

One of the great features of the Centenary was the sermon by Dr. FAIRBAIRN, which was preached to a vast congregation in the City Temple. He chose for his text the same passages as did Dr. Haweis, when he preached at the formation of the L.M.S., viz., Mark i. 14, and xvi. 15. The first part of the sermon dealt with the preaching of Jesus. Where did He preach? Galilee, the country, not the city. To whom did He preach? To plain, simple people. In a brilliant antithetical passage the preacher contrasted fanaticism with enthusiasm. The wondrous thing was that though He made them enthusiasts, they were not fanatics. Fanaticism is zeal for trifles; enthusiasm is zeal for humanity. Fanaticism marked the priests of Jerusalem; enthusiasm marked the Apostles in Galilee. Fanaticism erects a city and keeps it sacred; enthusiasm takes a religion and makes it universal.

What did He preach to these people? The Gospel of the Kingdom, into which men could enter only by repentance and faith. In the second part of the sermon, Dr. Fairbairn gave full play to his love of history and philosophy. To summarise this long and closely welded portion of the sermon would require more space than we can command. This is worth noting—"Pity for suffering is not the same as love for souls." Jesus goes deeper than the mere pain which excites compassion—to the need of the soul which He seeks to save. Dr. Fairbairn insisted that, if missions are to extend, England must be held for Christ. Weakness here will be weakness to the farthest extremity. He pleaded also for our men and women to give themselves to this service. The sermon, which was an hour and a-half long, was spoken without the aid of a note, and so absorbed was the preacher in delivering it, that he never observed a lady who was carried out of the gallery in a fainting fit. Fine as it was, however, it hardly seemed to blaze with evangelistic fervour, and its last words, a quotation of some lines from Robert Louis Stevenson, struck one as peculiarly feeble.

THE MEETING AT QUEEN'S HALL.

The Centenary year called for a special meeting at a time convenient for all. The conversazione at the Queen's Hall, followed by a public meeting, met a great need and drew an enormous audience. The Lord Chancellor presided, and touched upon some of the historical points which the Centenary suggested, and also upon some of the objections urged to missionary work. The foreign secretary, Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, dealt more fully with the lessons of the century, and gave a good deal of attention to the Society's financial position. Five millions and a-half pounds sterling have been raised for work in that time; one million and a-half of it by converts and sympathisers living in foreign parts; it looked much, but was only the price of a few ironclads, which are out of fashion and useless almost as soon as they are built. He made extended reference to the case of Madagascar, and while anxious to avoid all political references, nevertheless expressed bitter regret that a strong nation like France should assail a feeble nation like the Malagasy, and endanger the young church which is promising to be so useful. He pointed out that France was troubling Tahiti, the first station of the L.M.S., fifty years ago, when the jubilee of the Society was being celebrated. Mr. Thompson's words, together with a sympathetic resolution passed by the Congregational Union, will show the Malagasy Christians that they are not forgotten.

Rev. E. P. RICE, from India, showed, in a thoughtful speech, how India is being changed in thought and life. Dr. Muirhead spoke powerfully from his experience as a Chinese missionary, his venerable appearance, glowing earnestness, and direct speaking recalling the days that are past. His admiration for the moderation of Japan in ceding Port Arthur and other conquests is great, and he has a firm conviction that the result of the war will aid the spread of the Saviour's Kingdom in China.

Medical missions had much attention given to them at the Thursday morning meeting, and the Watchers' Band had a most successful gathering at the City Temple. The whole of these meetings was closed by a young men's meeting, which was also good.

TEMPERANCE.

For the first time, the Chairman of the Union presided at the meeting of the Total Abstinence Association, which has enrolled among its members 2220 out of the 2860 ministers in England and Wales, and 208 out of 221 men in the colleges are abstainers. A resolution was passed in favour of supporting a deputation agent at a salary of £250 yearly. The secretaryship has become honorary. Mr. R. Mansergh resigns the treasurership through ill-health, and is succeeded by Mr. Thomas Smith, and the year opens with a balance in hand of 2s. 1d.

The claims of the Colonies and of Ireland, of the East-end of London, of the young people who are formed into Guilds, all had the advantage of meetings. The Congregational May Week has been crowded and enthusiastic.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY MAY 19.—1 TIM. VI.

Believing and Beloved (1-2).—A slave might be a fellow believer, but his unity with his master in the Gospel did not obliterate the social distinctions between them. The servant was still bound to obedience and honour. Indeed, there was the additional tie of love. Probably the entire question, so much agitated, of service, would be settled, if once we realised how sacred ministry is.

Godliness (3-10).—This is the test of doctrine. That which leads to questions and disputes, breeding strife, carries its own condemnation with it. All true Gospel teaching makes the hearers more God-like. (6) There is a natural tendency with us all to acquire. It grows as we yield to it. To yield to it is to launch upon the upper waters of a whirlpool, the inevitable result of which is drowning in perdition. God's children must retain the pilgrim spirit. We must not strike our roots too deeply into this transient world. We are as soldiers in an enemy's country, and must be prepared at all times to obey the bugle-call. Turn your thought on God, and truth, and ministry to others, and so find the supreme object of life. Money is not wrong, but the love of it. Set your love on God.

The Closing Charge (11-21).—Flee, follow, fight, confess. (13) Before Pilate, Christ witnessed to truth. He was the first Martyr, though infinitely more. (14) We are entrusted with the sacred charge of God's Gospel, and must walk becomingly of so high a vocation. Let us ever live in the presence of the Eternal Being, and in the light which is the curtain of his dwelling. (17) Our life should circle around God. If we are occupied with Him and his service, He will provide all things else we need. The only investment that is permanent and remunerative is in using our property and talents for the glory of God in ministry to men. This is life indeed. (R.V.)

MONDAY, MAY 20.—2 TIM. I.

The Treasure and its Guard (1-14).—To serve God with a pure conscience and a single eye was the Apostle's life-purpose, but how tender the tie between him and Timothy, whose tears lingered in his memory. (6) The word used here is that for stirring smouldering embers. Let us not fail to let God's air in to nourish the flame of devotion. (8) Loving and earnest as Timothy was, he lacked courage in confessing the Gospel, and Paul had detected the tendency to evade suffering and hardship. (9) God's eternal love and choice of us is an unfailing incitement to holy endeavour; we know that He will help us to realise his own ideal. Oh to be worthy of that holy calling. (10) Our Saviour by death abolished death, robbing it of its power to hurt us; as though one were to draw the teeth and claws of a lion, or the fangs of a serpent. Man always had a dim vague notion of the life beyond, but Christ shed light on it. (12-14) Our deposit with Christ is our eternal interest, which He is well able to guard. His deposit with us is his Holy Gospel and the pattern of sound words. There is, therefore, a mutual exchange. At first we barely trust Christ, then we come to know Him whom once we only believed, and at last we rest in a persuasion, which cannot be disturbed, of his ability to keep.

Onesiphorus (15-18).—Very lonely and disappointed must the Apostle have felt when those in Rome, who had known him in his former life in Asia Minor, turned from him. There was one noble exception, and often did Onesiphorus come to him in prison, bringing alleviations of his suffering. Surely the Lord Jesus can never forget such acts done to Him in the person of his suffering saints.

TUESDAY, MAY 21.—2 TIM. II.

Soldier (1-4).—There is grace enough in Jesus for every need, but we must avail ourselves of it. We can look for nothing less than hardship, since life is a battlefield. Our one aim should be to please Him who chose us to be soldiers. That we may do so, we must avoid entanglements in the world, as a garrison with the town in which it is quartered, and from which it may at any moment have to start away.

Athlete (5).—We are in an amphitheatre, filled with spectators intent on our every movement. Perhaps our worst antagonist is ourselves. God help us to win the crown of his "Well done."

Husbandman (6).—We are working for God in his vineyard and harvest field; but how imperative that we should be fed and nourished whilst we labour.

Elect (7-13).—The Apostle sketches the experiences of the elect soul. It must die, suffer, and endure with Christ, but out of all this comes its truest, richest life. There is no path to life and victory save by the cross and grave of Christ. We passed that way in the purpose of God, and must do so by our choice and daily experience.

Workman (14-19).—To work on God's plan, to use his materials, and to win his "Well done" is enough. Let us construct something in our life, so that there may be a permanent addition to the good of the world.

A Vessel (20-22).—It is more important to be clean than golden. Those that are to honour and which the Master uses are not necessarily rich in material, but pure and burnished. Let the Master use thee. Be ready for his hand.

Servant (23-26).—The R.V. should be consulted here. It describes graphically our yearning over men, our meekness in dealing with them, and under the similitude of a hunting scene describes our work in counteracting the devil's designs on the souls of men.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22.—2 TIM. III.

The Last Days (1-5).—The last days of the present dispensation are not to be full of the light growing into the millennial day, but black and sorrowful. Sin shall come to a head. The material comfort and civilisation of the world shall co-exist with manifestation of gross corruption. God is gathering out a people to Himself, not converting the world. The tares grow with the wheat till the time of harvest. Let us beware lest we hold the form of godliness and deny its power.

The Devil's Counterfeits (6-9).—The devil has always counterfeited God's handiwork: The Holy City by Babylon; the Son of Man by the man of sin; blessedness by the heartless merriment of the world. Thus the Egyptian conjurers repeated the miracles of Moses, by resorting to sleight of hand and other tricks. So there is a false gospel, which is the mimicry of the pure Gospel of Jesus. Wait, and time will show what is true and what is false.

The Sufferings and Support of the Man of God (10-17).—There must be persecution. The Spirit of Christ will ever bring us into collision with the spirit of the world. But amid all let the children of God preserve their integrity, and walk in blameless purity and beauty; and let us ever follow the conduct, purpose, and patience of this great Apostle. (R.V.) There is no sorrow out of which we shall not be delivered, when we have perfectly learnt the lesson it was designed to teach. (15) In all the stern discipline of life there is no solace or stay to be compared with the Word of God, here called "the sacred writings." (R.V.) (16) The infinite variety of Scripture adapts itself to the different states of the soul; whatever our need, we can find a solace and a remedy here. Thus also we may live a complete life, finding our equipment for all emergencies in the Bible, which is an armoury provided with every weapon, as well as a surgery with every medicine and antidote.

THURSDAY, MAY 23.—2 TIM. IV.

Preach the Word (1-5).—This, in Paul's judgment, was the panacea for the evils of the world. Not committees, or movements, or leagues, but the full and constant reiteration of the Gospel message. We may infer from it that Christ's appearing will precede his Kingdom. That men weary of the Gospel, and turn from it, is no reason for our ceasing its proclamation. We are sent to be witnesses unto the truth as it is in Jesus, and our witness is to be determined from our relation to God, not by our reception by man. (5) How succinct and clear and stirring are these brief soldier-like messages.

The Crown (6-8).—His approaching decease made this lion-heart more than ever eager that Timothy should arouse himself to take up and carry on his work. Let us so live each day that we may have a conscience void of offence toward God and man, so that when the time comes for rendering up our account, it may be with the glad consciousness with which the Apostle anticipated the time of his home-going. (8) The true servant of God has no desire for a selfish heaven, his conception of the hereafter is always associated with the bliss of others.

Last Words (9-22).—The Mamertine cell was damp, hence the need for the cloke. (17) It is impossible to be really alone; the Lord is always standing in the shadow, keeping watch upon his own. Paul's one thought was that the Gospel message should be heard. If that were secured, he counted not the cost to himself. (18) We are being delivered and saved, even when our life is full of suffering, and the spirit is constantly being renewed and repaired by the love and grace of God.

FRIDAY, MAY 24.—TITUS I.

Entrusted with the Message (1-4).—God's elect believe; they know the truth; their lives are godly; they hope, with a hope that cannot be ashamed, for the life which is life indeed; they have already begun to live in eternity. God's purpose for us, which lay as a germ-thought in his being, before the worlds were made, has been realised in Christ, and is unfolded in the Gospel. What a charge it is to be entrusted with the proclamation of that Gospel to men! May we be found faithful!

Elders (5-9).—The constitution of these infant churches was very important. That the elders should be godly and consistent men, and be able to commend the Gospel by their lives. All Christians should study this portraiture, and seek to reproduce its outlines, without interfering with the play of natural individuality. All faces have the same general features, though each differs from all the rest. Whatever comes, we must hold to the faithful word, which is sound and healthy, and which gives health like the breath of the sea.

Unruly Men (10-16).—The Judaizing teachers were always on Paul's wake, visiting the churches he had planted, and diverting his converts from the simplicity of faith in Jesus. Their motive in many cases was the love of self-aggrandisement. Such men were to be opposed and resisted, however unfortunate it was to show divided ranks in the face of the common foe. (15) What a marvellous power the heart has of casting its own colour on everything. We see life in lines borrowed from within. Oh for the pure and undefiled nature that passes through the world like a beam of sunshine, irradiating all, contaminated by none!

SATURDAY, MAY 25.—TITUS II.

Exhortations to Specific Classes (1-10).—Our teaching must be healthy and health-giving. Judge the quality of a man's words by their effects. Do they produce nobility and purity in those that hear and receive them? What a portrait of an aged man! strong, calm, patient, full of faith, full of love. And of an aged woman! reverent, able to teach, with only love on the lip. So for young men and women! what a life is here shadowed forth, against which the very tongue of slander should be dumb, having no evil thing to say. The servants here addressed were household slaves, employed in the most menial drudgery; yet they were taught that they might adorn God's Gospel, and be to it what jewels are to beauty, setting forth its loveliness. To please one's superiors in all things, so far as our loyalty to Christ admits, is to commend Him whom we love to others, and to win his well-done.

The Grace of God (11-15).—It had always filled God's heart, but in Jesus it was unveiled. It came laden with the gift of salvation for all men. Not simply deliverance from penalty, but also from the love and power of sin. Ungodliness is the other side of worldly lusts. When we throw ourselves headlong into these we are naturally drawn away from the unseen and spiritual. Stop the leakage of your soul-life earthward, and it will turn heavenward. Soberly in regard to thyself, righteously to men, godly to God. Let us sit in the school of Grace, so that she may instruct us how to live this life. The vista of coming glory is a great incentive for a holy life. (14) Our Lord Jesus is one with the great God. Redeemed from all iniquity, purified to be his own, consecrated to his service, and zealous in all manner of good works. Such is the purpose of God in the redemption of his people.

LAW CLERKS' CHRISTIAN UNION.—This union celebrated its fifth anniversary on Friday, in the parlour, Exeter Hall, Mr. W. F. A. Archibald in the chair. In the report it was stated there had been an increase of ten in the membership. Mr. R. H. White, Mr. S. J. Daw, and Mr. E. Bannister dealt very forcibly with the necessity of being earnest, faithful, and strictly honest in their calling. Several managing clerks testified to the usefulness of the union.

MAY 26.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.—Mark xv. 22-37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Rom. v. 8.

THE place of the crucifixion was called in the Hebrew Golgotha (22), and in Latin Calvaria, suggesting our word Calvary. Its exact site cannot be determined, but the more general opinion is that it lay "outside of the north wall of the city, but near to it—about one hundred yards distant." Its skull-like shape suggested its name. Two incidents are mentioned in connection with the journey here. (See Matt. xxvii. 32, and Luke xxiii. 27-31).

The drink offered to Jesus just before the crucifixion (23) was "common wine, such as the soldiers used, mingled with a powerful narcotic drug, bitter, but offered as an anæsthetic, to stupefy and dull the sense of pain" (Lange). Jesus tasted it (Matt. xxvii. 34), but would not drink it. He did not desire to be stupefied. His work required the possession of all his faculties. He had come to the cross not merely that his enemies might kill Him, but that He might offer Himself to God.

"Crucified Him!" (24). How easily the words are spoken, and how familiar they sound; yet how little we understand of their meaning! Think of our Lord as first nailed to the cross as it lay on the ground, the nails penetrating the most sensitive parts. Then of the cross with the suffering victim upon it, being dropped into its place in the ground. Think of the shame of it. He was only raised a foot or two above the ground, so that every indignity could be done to Him. So degrading was this method of dying that it was never inflicted on Roman citizens, but was reserved for slaves, and the very worst of criminals. It was the third hour (25), about nine o'clock, when the first act in the crucifixion took place. It was the ninth hour (34), about three o'clock, before He died. For all these hours Jesus submitted to this humiliating torture.

Painful though it was, all the bystanders sought to aggravate his anguish. He was placed between two robbers, as though more guilty than they (27). The passers-by railed upon Him, recalling and misquoting his own words (29). The chief priests and scribes were more contemptuous still (31, 32). Even the agonising cry (34) became another theme for mockery (35). Human hatred, backed up by Satanic malice, never found a more cruel expression than when Jesus hung on the cross.

But we must gather from the story some of its teachings. It seems like a strange close to a life which was introduced into the world by angels' songs. Have his enemies triumphed over Him after all? Is He defeated in his efforts to save? Look at the cross more carefully, and it will speak to us in a different language.

I. All that is done to Jesus proves Him to be the Messiah. The Jewish rulers objected to the superscription (26 John, xix. 20-22), because it seemed to charge them with the guilt of crucifying the King of whom their prophets had spoken. But their very treatment of Him furnishes unmistakable proofs of his Messiahship. Compare Psalm xxii. 6-8; 13, 16, 17, 18; and Isa. liii. 3, 7, 12. These accurate fulfilments are not accidental. They turn the seeming triumph of the wicked into an ignominious defeat. When they have done their worst they have only fulfilled the counsel of God (Acts iv. 28). There is a glory shining through the shame of the cross.

II. The spirit in which He endured the suffering was Divine. Perhaps it was this that enlightened the dying thief and emboldened him to make such a confession (Luke xxiii. 41, 42). And this had something to do with the conviction of the Roman centurion (Matt. xxvii. 54). To answer such cruelty with prayer for his murderers; to receive every form of indignity without retaliation, was more than human. Even a sceptic has been constrained to say, "Socrates died like a martyr, but Jesus died like a God"! Remember that the power which had wrought miracles was still in Him, and could easily have been turned against his enemies. Was ever love like his?

III. The important lesson is—all this He submitted to for us. The most painful part of it was that sense of God-forsakenness which was expressed in his awful cry (34). For three hours He had been concealed by miraculous darkness from the gaze of the multitude. What He endured during those hours none can tell; the cry which burst from Him at the close gives us a faint idea. But why should he endure that? Was there any reason in Him why He should feel God-forsaken? Not in Him, but there is in us. And He takes our place. The way to life is by trusting Him who died in our stead. And the most awful guilt that can be incurred is that of deliberate rejection of Him. The all-important question is,—What is the Cross of Jesus to you? Are you in the "us" of the Golden Text?

For the Young.

AMONG THE MOUNTAIN SHEEP.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—It is long since I have written to you, for it seems to me that you have so many teachers, and so many preachers, and so many books that you need no teaching from an old woman. But to-day, as the rain is falling heavily, and I cannot get at the little French children I hoped to reach, I will give you the time I meant to give them, and tell you of two little incidents that I have seen among the mountain sheep here.

Last Friday, after sunset, as we were coming home from a visit, our donkey climbing the steep hillside, we heard a pitiful bleating above us, and could just see a little lamb high above our heads, evidently lost, for by that time all the flocks are shut up for the night. A young French student who was with us went at once to look after the lost sheep, for it was so young that some hungry fox or raven would have made a meal of it before morning. Our young friend went towards the nearest farm, to which the wanderer probably belonged, and was soon with us again to tell us it was in safety.

"How did they catch it?" I asked. "Oh," he said, "I tried to call it, but it was afraid of me and only went further astray, but the shepherd turned out all the flock, and as its mother was bleating after her lamb it recognised her voice and came at once. It was an affair of two minutes." I thought boys do not always mind their mother's call so quickly. And yet what call should be more powerful to recall a wanderer than that of a mother? You read many things, boys and girls. Do you ever read Hood's verses, beginning

> Love thy mother, little one,
> Kiss and clasp her neck again?

Yet there is a voice more tender, a call more mighty.

One summer's night I was away high up among the mountains at Ancelon. There the custom is to let the sheep and goats feed very late; sometimes it is not far from midnight when they come home. It was always an interest to hear the patter of their feet on the stony paths that lead to the village, and to see them rush past our window to the stable just beyond our house. So I was leaning from the window, as usual, to watch them, listening at the same time to the distant cry of the owls in the deep ravine below. The flock arrived, as usual, with its young shepherd; but that night they were to sleep in a different stable, and as sheep are what the French call routinier, there was a little difficulty in turning them, and in the confusion one lamb got separated from the flock.

The little shepherd's mother was on the watch, and caught the lamb; but how to make him follow the footsteps of the flock was another thing. We could guess at her difficulties in part by the phrases of coaxing or remonstrance which reached our ears. She had seized the runaway, and, holding fast, she was trying to make him walk in the direction of the stable. But he—strong, active, and self-willed—had no idea of submitting, and she was very weary. We heard her say, "Oh, que tu m'ennuies"; and no wonder. Then she called in patois to her son, and we heard a gay child's voice call (the pet name for a young lamb in patois), "Birri! Birri!" Quick as thought the lamb recognised his shepherd's voice. It sprang out of the grasp of the woman and danced along the path towards the voice so dear to him—to the safe shelter where the woman had been vainly striving to make him enter.

Ah! I thought, if only wanderers could hear the voice of the Good Shepherd it would no longer be hard work to walk in the narrow way. So long as it is only the voice of parents and friends that urges us to enter by the strait gate it is hard work, but once we hear the loving voice of the Good Shepherd and believe in his great love we find his ways pleasantness and all his paths peace! This is my wish for you, dear young English friends.

A PROTESTANT VILLAGE IN ITALY.

MANY readers of THE CHRISTIAN will remember the case of the little Alpine village of Montorfano, near the Lake Maggiore, whose inhabitants some five years ago left the Church of Rome, and formed themselves into an Evangelical community.

In their secession, they brought with them the ancient church of the hamlet, removing from it images, confessionals, and other symbols of the worship they had abandoned, and adapting it to the simpler and purer services of their new faith. This was done in the full conviction of their right thus to dispose of the building, and with the sanction of the local civil authorities. In fact, for nearly four years their use of the church for Evangelical worship remained undisturbed.

But rather more than twelve months ago the bishop of the diocese interposed, and brought the case before the civil courts. I need not go into the details of the litigation that ensued; nor would it be seemly thus publicly to criticise the decisions of an Italian legal tribunal. Suffice it to say, that after various hearings in various courts, and various sentences, not all of which were unfavourable, the ultimate finding of the superior tribunal definitely restored the edifice to the Church of Rome, thus depriving the little community both of house of prayer and of schoolrooms, the latter forming part of the building in question.

This issue, though grievous and disappointing, has not shaken in the least the steadfastness of the Montorfano Evangelicals. Not a member has left the church, not a child has been withdrawn from the school. The effect has rather been that of purifying and strengthening their faith in Christ, by eliminating from it all non-essentials. The sentiments of all were well expressed by one of their leaders, who, when the priest was carrying off the keys of the church, exclaimed, "Yes, you may take from us the four walls, but you cannot take from us the precious truths we have learned within them!"

Meanwhile the poor people are left without a suitable place either for public worship or for the instruction of their children. During the winter both services and schools have been carried on in one of the peasant's cottages, in a small low room altogether insufficient, and for the children unwholesome, with the variation of an occasional meeting in the open air under the chesnut-trees.

But they must not be thus abandoned. Their ancient church, while yet in their possession, drew to the spot hundreds of sympathising visitors from all lands; surely some of these will remember the simple mountaineers in this their time of adversity. The whole country-side is looking on with interest to see what Evangelical Protestantism will do for this little group of co-religionists.

It is not proposed to do anything in a spirit of parade or antagonism, simply to meet the bare necessities of the case by erecting, at a seemly distance from the Romish edifice, an inexpensive building containing preaching-room, school-room, and a lodging for the teacher. The entire cost need not exceed £220. For this sum appeal is made to the sympathy of all who are interested in the progress of Evangelical Protestantism in Italy. The minister in charge of the locality is Sig. Gaspare Cavazzutti, Pastor Evangelico, Omegna, Provincia di Novara, Italy. HENRY J. PIGGOTT.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Lord Brassey has promised to take the chair at the twenty-ninth anniversary meeting of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, in the Royal Albert Hall, on Friday, 21st June next.

THE WAYSIDE BIBLE CARRIAGE has begun its summer work in the villages. It is well equipped for its colportage campaign, with Bibles and Christian literature. From pressure of other labours I am unable at present to be with it. A good solid work of sowing Gospel seed, and of testimony from village to village, from cottage to cottage, has been begun, and will be continued throughout the long summer months. JOHN M. MCAULIFFE.

SALVATION ARMY FARM COLONY.

Just at this moment, when the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the "unemployed" question has issued its preliminary report, and drawn the attention of the British public to the subject of land colonisation, it may not be out of place to notice the present position of General Booth's Farm Colony at Hadleigh. The Hadleigh Colony may fairly be considered the parent of all the present day efforts to establish home colonies, which have been the result of the "Outcast London" and "Submerged Tenth" agitations.

This colony is now in its fourth year of existence. From the commencement it has been remarkable for the magnitude of its operations. General Booth is no believer in puny attempts being put forth to remedy a gigantic evil. He believes in the plaister being equal to the wound. Hence, in his first attempt at drafting some of the surplus population on to the land, he went about the business in a wholesale manner. The farm was quickly adapted for the reception of 300 colonists. The officers at the colony have had to purchase every atom of experience they have gained in respect to the working out of the scheme as a means of bettering the men brought within its influence. Technical assistance in the various industries, as well as in the agricultural and horticultural pursuits, upon the colony has been for the most part gladly placed at the General's disposal gratuitously by well-known experts in the various branches. But for dealing with the men themselves, for the principles of management and government of the colony, they have had to fall back upon their own past experience as officers in the Salvation Army, and as each new development of the colony has required a step farther in discipline and tact, the initiative has had to be taken fearlessly, with possibly no past experience beyond that of strict adhesion to principle. Fortunately the General was no novice in the management of men, nor those who have been directly responsible for the control of the colony. It certainly speaks well for the management that, without the aid of legal authority and power, a body of 300 men, belonging to all sections of religion and grades of society, among whom a great many are entirely without regard for God or man, should be not only controlled, but made to live together in a spirit of brotherhood. No undue pressure is brought to bear upon them to become converted, no special inducement is held out to them if they will profess the name of Jesus Christ; but day by day, week by week, and month by month, Christian example is continually held up to their sight, and the principles of truth, righteousness, and mercy are forced home upon their attention at every opportunity. That a certain number should be influenced is inevitable, and excepting the few here and there who will not be helped, it is a matter of consolation to the officers of the colony that the men under their charge are daily receiving influences which must at least be remembered, and which, as proved, thank God, in so many instances, often results in an honest effort to serve God and become "new creatures in Christ Jesus."

Great stress is laid upon the farming, dairying, and market gardening operations. Each of these branches constitutes a separate section, with a competent manager, under whom is placed a number of the colonists, according to the demands of the work to be done in the section. There is also a poultry farm and a nursery garden section. The produce of all these sections is of course sold in the markets. We understand that Colonel Stitt is desirous of instituting a system whereby some portion of this produce shall come direct into the hands of the consumer. He is anxious to give to friends of the "Darkest England" scheme a participation in its benefits, by supplying to them mixed hampers of produce fresh from the farm. These mixed hampers can be made up of vegetables and fruits of all kinds, according to the season, cucumbers, tomatoes, eggs, butter, fowls, seeds, and plants, etc. He invites correspondence from friends, in order to ascertain to what extent he could rely upon their support, before starting this scheme.

In addition to the agricultural branches, there are a large saw mill and joinery works (which manufacture "English-made" doors and sash-frames), two brick-fields, and a wharf adjacent to a branch of the Thames, to which come large quantities of London dust and timber, and from which go large loads of bricks, door-frames, sashes, etc.

Our readers cannot do better than go and see the Colony for themselves. There is a refreshment-room for the benefit of visitors, and for those who would come to make a longer sojourn, and spend a holiday there, Park House is a veritable "home," where visitors are received on moderate terms. All communications relating to the Colony should be addressed to Colonel Stitt, Farm Colony, Hadleigh, Essex.

THE POPE'S LETTER TO ENGLAND.

Protestants in Continental countries, who endeavour to disseminate Gospel light in the midst of "Christianised heathenism," recently read the Pope's "Letter to the English people" with an intelligent suspicion as well as a curious interest.

Mr. W. Watson writes from Algeciras:—"The Pope speaks of 'The general spirit of respect for Holy Scripture,' which it is his great and longing desire to promote. Does he think to fool us with these fair speeches? Well do we know from the past what Rome would do if she had it in her power, with regard to the Scriptures; and not only in the past, but in the present, we have abundant proof of her 'general spirit of regard for the Holy Scriptures.' In Malta, under Popish rule (shame to our nation) tracts are not allowed to be distributed in the streets. As a missionary among the Spaniards, I can bear testimony as to the respect (!) for the Holy Scriptures. The priests tell the people that if they do not want their souls to be damned, they are not to read the Bible; they themselves being utterly ignorant of its contents. 'They have taken away the key of knowledge' (God's Word); they do not enter in themselves, and those who are entering in, they hinder. If any think that the Rome of the nineteenth century is different from the Rome of the middle ages, let them come out to Spain, and they will soon be cured of their delusion. Rome cannot alter.

"Let us who know the living God cry to Him that He may deliver our land from the awful pit which is being digged for her destruction by thousands of Jesuitical hands; that she may repent of her national sins, and hold fast that liberty wherewith Christ hath made her free."

Miss Lawrence writes from Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona:—"The following lines, translated from the Spanish Liberal paper, El Diluvio, may interest your readers:—'Leo XIII. has addressed a letter to the English people, in which he commends in detail the religious spirit of that nation. But he further adds that God will not bless the efforts of the English race until they return once more to the fold of the Catholic Church! Now we understand the reason of England's sad decay, whereas Spain and Italy swim in a sea of prosperity. The latter are Catholic, the former is Protestant. On how little depends the prosperity of a nation!'

"As you will perceive, the language is sarcastic, but it has a deep and true meaning. England, thanks to the entrance and free course of that Word which 'giveth light,' has prospered in temporal as well as in spiritual affairs, whereas Italy and Spain, especially the latter, enslaved by the doctrines and traditions of men, have sunk to the depth of poverty, ignorance, and misery. To be readmitted to the Catholic 'fold,' England would have to relinquish first among her dearly-bought liberties her open Bible! Rome's hatred of the Word of Life never changes. Of this we have constant proofs in this unhappy country. A few weeks ago, the rector of this little town performed an auto-da-fé upon a number of portions of Scripture he had collected from the children and young people who attended his Lenten classes for religious instruction. He imposed as a condition to their receiving the Communion at Easter that they should deliver to him all Protestant books in their possession."

"THE CRIPPLES' SONG"—Under this title Mr. F. T. Watt has penned a neat booklet, giving a touching and pathetic account of the work of the R.S.U. Home at Southend, and of the poor little cripples who are sent there, who have benefited greatly thereby. Many incidents are given of a most delightful character. Copies may be had from the Ragged School Union, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand. On Tuesday the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise visited Southend, and laid the foundation of the new Cripples' Home.

A KAFIR MEDICAL STUDENT.

Dr. Valentine, of the Medical Missionary Training Institution, Agra, India, writing to the Quarterly Paper of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, gives an account of one of his students, named Nazzurullah. He says:—

The name means "The Gift to God." He is a native of Kafiristan. I suppose I need not tell you that Kafiristan, Caffreland, and Caffraria all mean the same thing. The word Kafir is Arabic, and means "infidel." It is applied by the Mohammedans to everyone who does not believe in the religion of Mahomet, and as such was applied to the people of Africa with whom they first came in contact, and to the country to which Nazzurullah belongs. Kafirstan is a country, or tract of country, lying between the north-west frontier of India and the Hindu Kush Mountains. Most recent writers believe that the Kafirs are a mixed race, some even going the length of saying that these people present some of the characteristics of the Saxon type! No Kafir is looked upon in his own country as worthy of notice unless he has managed to kill one or more Mohammedans during the course of his life.

The Kafirs believe in one Supreme Being, whom they call Imbra, as well as in a number of evil spirits. Sacred stones are set up to these in their temples, but little attention is paid to them either by the priests or the people. Nazzurullah's father was a tribal chief among the Kafirs. He was evidently a man of considerable force of character, and one who had made his influence felt beyond the borders of his tribe. The Mohammedans beyond the frontier had a special grudge against him, and they made a raid upon his tribe, and carried off Nazzurullah to a mountain village beyond the frontier. Several years afterwards Syed Shah, originally a native of some frontier tribe, but then a Christian in connection with the C.M.S., Peshawur, was "on a journey of evangelistic exploration," and arrived at the village. Learning his history, Syed Shah became doubly interested in Nazzurullah, and succeeded in carrying him off to Peshawur, and lodged him in the Mission.

He was afterwards sent to the excellent boys' school connected with the C.M.S. at Batula. Being a modest, good-tempered lad, with a dash in him of the humour peculiar to his people, he soon became a great favourite, both with the teachers and pupils of the school. He also showed great aptitude in his studies. In 1891 Dr. A. Neve visited Batula, and took a fancy to Nazzurullah, and, with the consent of the teachers, took Nazzurullah back with him to Kashmir, and employed him as a compounder in the Mission Dispensary, from whence he was sent to us, and entered as a student in our Institute. He is now almost twenty years of age, and maintains his character of an industrious, quiet, good-tempered lad. He has several times spoken most appropriately to our beggars on the Sabbath mornings. Yesterday morning we had a congregation of 267. Such, in a few words, is the history of Nazzurullah. I most sincerely trust that, after he takes his diploma, he may return to his home and people, and tell them the story of Jesus and his love.

ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGE.—Mr. J. Coates started out on May 1 with his Bible carriage for his annual tour among the Herefordshire fairs. During ten days some 8000 Gospel books and tracts were distributed, in addition to sales.

THE DUTCH BAPTISTS.—Fifty years ago, in the fen districts of Holland, some distance beyond Groningen, the first seven believers were baptized by the late Pastor Köbner. Two of them are yet living, aged seventy-four and ninety-two. Those seven, with three others, were formed into a Baptist Church by the late Pastor Oncken, of Hamburg, and became the pioneers of the present nineteen Baptist churches in the Netherlands. The jubilee celebration of praise and thanksgiving will take place at Stadskanaal, near the Old Trench, on May 22 and 23.

NORWAY.—An English lady resident in Norway is anxious that Christian visitors to the country during the summer months should freely distribute tracts setting forth the Evangelical doctrines of the Gospel, as an antidote to the Ritualistic teachings that are disseminated through the usual ecclesiastical channels. Visitors are also earnestly asked not to encourage in any way the Norwegian habit of spending the Sabbath-day in fêtes, sport, etc. Correspondents are reminded that the new English postcards are not admissible abroad, and are charged excess postage.

The late Eustace G. D. Maxwell,

(Pembroke Coll., Camb.),

A Young Servant of Jesus Christ.

In departing somewhat from our usual plan of selection in the subject of this sketch, we have done so in the hope that the bright young life which was brought to so tragic a close on earth may serve to stimulate in our younger readers an ambition to live as nobly and as well.*

Eustace Maxwell was the elder son of Rev. D. and Mrs. Maxwell, now of St. Silas' Vicarage, Handsworth, Birmingham; and doubtless to their training was due the fervour of his Christian life. Born in 1876, he grew up to be a thoroughly natural boy, and a perfect young English gentleman. Full of fun and buoyant spirits, entering heartily into all legitimate forms of healthy recreation, he was second to none in his enjoyment of life, whether at home or at school. Yet first and foremost stood the loyalty of his soul to God, and (in all things) to what he knew to be right. Gummed into the fly-leaf of his beloved Bible, was a verse written by Marianne Farningham, which well describes the attitude of his heart to his Maker:—

Just as I am—young, strong and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth and righteousness, and Thee,
Lord of my life, I come.

It was in 1887, while quite a little lad, that he first realised in a measure the hatefulness of sin; that while it remained unconfessed and unforgiven, his mind could know no peace. He had heard Mr. Arrowsmith speak at a children's meeting of the "stony heart" and the "new heart." Sorrowfully the remembrance came to him of a falsehood he had told at school, and not until he had written for and received his master's forgiveness, was the load removed, and his spirit set free. Nor was he slow to let his light shine. He could only appear what he was, and the transparency of his character won the confidence of master and playmate alike. So it became no hard matter to induce several of his schoolfellows to become members of the Children's Scripture Union, and he joyfully wrote home, "I have got seven, and Bertie" (his brother) "has got four fellows to join."

After five years at a preparatory school he realised one of his ambitions—viz., to be "a public-school boy," and accordingly Repton soon became the richer for his presence. That he was human enough to fail for an "entrance scholarship" may to some of our young readers be rather a commendation than otherwise. But he was not disheartened by disappointment, and his three years of residence at the school were noteworthy for the persevering industry, and untiring energy of purpose, which in work and play characterised his whole life. As a result, in 1893 he won the Entrance Classical Scholarship to Mason College, Birmingham, where for a year he plodded on with the same earnestness and zeal, until the way was open for him to enter the University. To this he had long looked forward with great enthusiasm, and one of his bitterest trials was when he learned that circumstances which he could not control placed this coveted prize beyond his reach. Yet he did not murmur, strong in the confidence that it must be right, because the trial came in the Divine ordering of his life. It was, therefore, with added joy that he learned, later on, how the Lord had removed the difficulty, and that his desire was now to be fulfilled.

It was at this period of his career that various influences impressed upon him the blessing of a wholehearted surrender of will and life to the Master whom he loved. He came home from attending the Birmingham Convention for deepening spiritual life with a new sense of what he termed "the surprises in the Christian life"; and realised more than he had hitherto done how nigh the Lord can be to those who fear Him. That same summer he joined the Student Volunteer Camp at Keswick, after which he was one of a party of young men for the Children's Special Service Mission at Port Erin, Isle of Man. Very touching memories of his sojourn among them are treasured by his fellow-workers. Unsparing of energy in his spiritual work, his love of games, which had added to popularity at school, now stood him in good stead in his efforts to win the children's hearts for Christ. He was also anxious to reach the children of older growth, just on the borderland of manhood, for whom he held "Nicodemus meetings" in the evenings. To several of these his words were blessed in leading them to the Saviour.

At last came the glad day when he presented himself for residence at Pembroke College, Cambridge. Destined to spend there but a single term before he was summoned into the presence of his Divine Master, he nevertheless left such an imprint of a holy life as his college—or any other—has but seldom known. Says one of his friends:—Everybody he met knew of his profession to be a servant of Jesus Christ, and at Cambridge he shone grandly for his Master. When he first went up I asked a friend of my own to call upon him, thinking that he might be a help to Eustace in introducing him to a good "set" of men. He replied a few weeks later: "You asked me to look up Maxwell, but he doesn't need looking up. He has come out for Christ grandly, and everyone knows he is a servant of the Lord, for he is 'tackling' non-Christian men right and left."

Indeed, some of the most valued glimpses of his life are given in letters received by his parents since his death from those who knew him during his brief college career. "He entered with the keenest delight into social life, into boating and the like, but no less hearty was his devotion to other things." "He was always up early to the prayer-meetings in my room, helping me in arranging it, and many fellows in his year he brought with him. On the river it was just the same; I always looked forward to when I had to coach him, he was so enthusiastic." A father writes: "My son was a Freshman with him at Pembroke. He told us of several ways in which your son had helped him to choose the right and resist the wrong. He was one who had the courage to say, 'Stop that, I do not like it!' when evil was spoken." Yet there was no ostentation about him. Dr. Searle, Master of Pembroke, speaks of him as "Such a decided Christian, never ashamed of his Master, and yet so delicate in declaring himself his servant." "Amongst other things," says another friend, "was his tact in approaching other men on such subjects as the college prayer-meeting. There seemed nothing strange in a request to anyone to come to it when it came from Maxwell. The number he influenced was by no means small, and this made his great humility all the more apparent, as he almost invariably sat in one of the last rows of seats." Testimonies of similar import come from the head and assistant masters at Repton School and Mason College, from his tutor, his Natural Science lecturer at Pembroke, and from Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity, whose words are full of significance:—"Not in his own college only, but throughout the University, we greatly recognise the value of such an example as he appears to have set during his one Freshman's term."

More than once he was exercised on the subject of smoking. But on reading the life of Rev. J. G. Paton, the veteran missionary of the New Hebrides, he said: "I believe I shall have to give up all thought of smoking. If that dear old fellow felt he must give it up, it would be strange for a youngster like me to take to it." At Cambridge the desire came again, with the specious argument that he might influence other men if he joined them in the habit; but the wise counsel of a friend was, "Separation to Christ comes before sympathy with the world. It will not be you and your pipe, but Christ in you, that will lead others to Him." That settled it.

It had long been the desire of his heart to be a medical missionary, and his studies were largely directed to that end. This, coupled with a strong and thoughtful interest in the Jews, led him to select Damascus as his hoped-for destination. The motto, "Ready for Either," illustrated by a bullock standing between an altar and a plough, was, he used to say, the language of his heart; and when the swift and sudden mandate went forth from the King of kings for his translation, who can doubt his readiness to enter into the royal presence? The disastrous railway accident near Crewe, which saddened so many homes, and beclouded so many gatherings last Christmas, is only too vividly remembered by those who loved him.

Not in the noontide glory,
Not in its twilight dim;
But in life's dewy morning,
The home-call came for him.

He stood like a reaper, ready
To do his Lord's command;
But as he raised the sickle
With strong and willing hand,

In the flush of strength and beauty,
With a spirit full of fire,
From the threshold of the vineyard
He was called to go up higher.

And what is the message of such a life to you, young reader? Will you not learn that true religion goes hand in hand with happiness; that it is worth living for to win such a record as this, to leave behind such a memory as remains in the hearts of those whom Eustace Maxwell influenced for their eternal good?

* The information here given is gathered from a pathetically interesting memoir from the pen of Mrs. Maxwell, entitled Translated (1s. Marshall Brothers), the proceeds of which will be devoted to a memorial fund for the maintenance of a medical missionary in Damascus. We earnestly commend it to the perusal of our readers for the sake of much that is necessarily omitted here.

MAY MEETINGS.

Presbyterian Foreign Missions.

The deep interest taken by the English Presbyterians in foreign missions was again exemplified by the enthusiastic gathering at the annual meeting held on Friday evening in Exeter Hall. The Association of North London Choirs lent effective service in song.

The report begins with regretful reference to the war in the East—now happily ended—and its disorganising effect on the missions of Irish and United Presbyterian churches, whose work is largely in Manchuria. The statistics of the English Presbyterian Mission show 50 stations in Amoy, 29 at Swatow, and 36 in Formosa, also in Hak-ka, and Singapore, with a total Christian native membership of 7780. Cheering accounts are given of progress, the Hak-ka mission appearing to be specially blessed. In Formosa distinct advance has been made in the Chiang-hoa region. In the city itself the brethren have been quickened and their number increased, and at Katauga, some eighteen miles to south of it, a genuine spiritual work is going on under the guidance of an earnest young preacher named Lan Bo-khun. It was at this latter place that Mr. Campbell lately examined twenty-eight candidates for baptism, fourteen of these having been joyfully received into Church membership. At another new station, Sia-thau-lun, the Christians have collected money, secured a capital site, and put up a good-sized chapel with rooms attached, placing the whole in charge of a resident keeper, whom they pay. In other parts of the island also there are evidences of much encouragement.

In Singapore good work is going on; while Dr. Morison's Mission at Rampore Bauleah, Bengal, has been vigorously and usefully sustained. In the formation and development of the Native Church, our missionaries have met with remarkable success, and the aim which is steadily advanced is to extend the work through the length and breadth of the districts covered by the dialects they speak. Training, the highest possible, is given to native agents at the several centres; native pastors are supported entirely by the congregations over whom they are ordained; medical mission hospitals are strongly in evidence (the mission has ten), and very influential in paving the way for the Gospel; and schools, congregational, middle, and girls' schools are all doing admirable work. Women's work is becoming more and more influential in elevating family life. Amoy, besides its college and other central work on Kolongsu and at Emg-kang, has two important sub-centres at Chinchew and Changpu, while a third is about to be established at Engchhun. Swatow, with its hospital, the largest in China, its college and schools, has a sub-centre at Chao-chow-foo, and there is a great opportunity for the formation of a second sub-centre at Sua-bué, in the South-west, so soon as the state of the funds will admit of its being efficiently manned. Wu-king-foo, in the Hak-ka country, is the centre for work among that people with their separate language. It also has its hospital, college, and schools. Formosa has its main centre at Taiwanfoo, with hospital, college, and schools, and a sub-centre in the North, to work the district that contains the Prefectural city of Chiang-hoa. The Formosans support a missionary to the Pescadore Isles.

There are fifty-six European agents, twenty-two of whom are lady missionaries, in addition to the wives of missionaries; and the native evangelists number 117. The total income for last year was returned at £19,629.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland, Mr. T. Shaw, M.P., presided, and, in the course of his opening address, said that, while he was an ardent and loyal Presbyterian, they were met there in a nobler cause than that of promoting any one denomination. He rejoiced that the policy of England had been one of strict neutrality as between China and Japan. There was now a fresh opportunity for Christian development, but they should not be too sanguine in view of the contingency that China and Japan might become weary of Western notions, and might settle their differences and arrange their affairs on an entirely Eastern basis. There would then be an agglomeration of Eastern against Western people, and a great struggle might be only averted by promoting the Gospel of Christ. It had been said that if we did not civilise the East the East, would uncivilise us.

Rev. W. Campbell, of Formosa, gave a most cheering account of work in that island, showing how the Gospel was winning its way into the most inaccessible parts. Naturally, coming as he had done straight from the field, the speaker had much to say about the war, the disturbance caused by it, and its disastrous results for China.

Rev. William Ewing, of Birmingham, formerly a missionary at Tiberias, described work on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, and called special attention to the proposed new mission to Syrians and Jews at Aleppo.

The Lord's Day Observance Society.

The friends and supporters of this Society held their annual breakfast on Tuesday week, followed by the public meeting in St. James' Hall.

The secretary, Dr. Peake, presented the report, which showed that the income had been £1,835 6s. 10d. Of this £630 had been spent in defending the Lord's Day against the attacks of the Sunday Lecture Societies, while the ordinary expenditure, apart from this, had been £912 7s. 7d.

The report reviewed the work of the past year, and in referring to the conclusion of the controversy on the Sunday question in both Houses of Convocation and in the House of Laymen, stated that among the permanent results of this conflict may be noted: The emphatic conclusion arrived at by all three houses after a careful and impartial investigation of all the facts available; the complete and exhaustive record of those facts now included among the Society's publications; and the remarkable evidence secured concerning the attitude of both the religious and the non-religious working classes on this particular question. With regard to the action of Parliament respecting the question of Sunday observance, it was stated that during the past year the Government had exhibited marked reluctance to give facilities for introducing the Sunday question into the House of Commons.

The Dean of Norwich, who presided, was thankful for the noble work of the Society, which has taken up an unyielding and tenacious position in regard to the sanctity of the Sunday, and in opposition to the attempts being made to secularise the Lord's Day. After dealing with the opening of museums, libraries, and art galleries, he showed that these were but the thin end of the wedge. Once they were opened hosts who cared not for these things would clamour for theatres, music-halls, and similar delights. He did not believe that the working-class as a whole were anxious to desecrate the Sabbath and lose their weekly day of rest. In conclusion, he dwelt on some of the lofty principles that guard and enshrine the observance of the Lord's Day.

Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., reviewed some of the movements of the past year in regard to Sunday. In some districts the outlook is encouraging, although great watchfulness is demanded, for the enemies are ever on the alert. He regretted to observe that the Common Council had again determined to open the Art Exhibition at the Guildhall on the Lord's Day, but he understood that the attendance last year had fallen off considerably, and he thought that that was a sign that there was not such a demand for Sunday opening as the organisers of these movements would have them believe. He had also observed with thankfulness that in the provinces many of the libraries that had been opened on the Sabbath had been closed, as it was found the experiment did not answer. The opening of museums, etc., on Sunday was bound to entail extra work on a section of the community, and for that reason alone it was necessary for them to do all in their power to stop this Sunday opening in order that all classes might enjoy a day of re-

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., dwelt on the Lord's Day specially in its family and social aspect. The right observance of the day tends to strength, and upholds the bonds of family life. Many men would scarce know their own children but for the day of rest spent among them.

Vigorous speeches on similar lines followed, by Sir Mark J. Stewart, M.P., Mr. Henry Morris, Rev. G. Tonge, and others.

Friendless and Fallen.

The annual meeting of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution, so long and faithfully carried on by the beloved Mr. E. W. Thomas, was held on Tuesday in Morley Halls, Regent-street.

Mr. W. J. Taylor, the secretary, read an abstract of the report, developing in an interesting opening the importance and Christ-like character of the rescue work, and insisting on the value of the all-night Refuge as a ready means of escape, as a door of hope for the tempted and erring. This Refuge is more than a mere shelter, for the case of every inmate is inquired into, and help offered as suited to the circumstances. Details followed of the several Homes, rescue and preventive, with many illustrative cases.

The summary of operations show that the admissions to the Homes have been:—Preventive cases, 203; reformatory cases, 167; special cases, 16—a total of 336. Into the Refuge:—Preventive cases, 315; reformatory cases, 246, or 561 in all, making the total new cases 947. The re-admissions have been 345, or a total dealt with in the year of 1292.

The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Meath said that, though not personally engaged in this work, it is one which for years has peculiarly commended itself to him. He was thankful to hear the testimony borne to the results attained. His study of the report had shown him that the only unsatisfactory part is that of finance. Much more money is urgently needed, and ought to be freely spent in wisely-directed effort to save these unhappy creatures who haunt our streets. He found that £15 is the actual cost of the institution per day, and surely many might well undertake one day's cost of an institution doing rescue work on a large scale. He suggested that means might be found to interest young fellows in schools and universities. Many, he believed, would willingly subscribe to a society of this kind.

Archdeacon Sinclair felt that little was needed to recommend such work to the Christian public. He had sometimes thought that if a map was devised in which the various forms of Christian service were shown, with an indication of the classes touched, it would be seen that the ground is very thoroughly covered. As to the special theme under consideration—sin, temptation, and misery are characteristic of great cities, but how thankful ought we to be that God has laid the rescue of the lost on the heart of many of his people. The dangers of London are very great, the perils of young women are peculiar and sore, and the perversions of the human heart are so strangely sad that the ranks of the fallen are constantly being recruited. Hence the pressing need for resolute effort to rescue those who have fallen, or to save those in danger of falling. He had, in connection with this and other rescue societies, been strongly impressed with the absolute necessity for a refuge with its doors ever open to receive those who flee thither, seeking to escape from a life of sin. As to remedies, well would it be if all mothers, mistresses, and teachers realised the need for plain, faithful dealing with daughters, servants, and other girls under their charge.

Rev. J. H. Scott said he appeared as a parish clergyman to bear testimony to the work being done in the Homes of the Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution. He had himself a good deal of experience, inasmuch as he and his helpers last year alone dealt with 300 rescue cases. Many of these were sent to Homes, and some to the Friendless and Fallen, of whom two-thirds turned out well. His own special work was to get hold of these girls; but having got them they must find some Homes for those likely to prove resultful. He sympathised with the work under the care of Mr. Taylor, because he felt it is worked on right lines. The Homes are bright and cheerful, there is a wise classification, there is individual treatment, and the whole work is based on faith and prayer with the object of bringing the poor girls to the Saviour of sinners.

Rev. A. W. Baldwin, who, as chaplain of various prisons, has had considerable experience of the necessity for this kind of work and the success which attends it, emphasised the peculiar importance of the preventive side of the work, on behalf of the friendless ones. At the same time, all who know anything of the heartrending remorse of many who have gone wrong, must thank God He has laid it on the hearts of some of his children to seek and save those who have been swept under by the maelstrom of sin and temptation.

The Pentecostal League.

Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., founder of this League, presided at its annual meetings, which took place recently in Exeter Hall. There were crowded and enthusiastic gatherings. In the course of inspiriting addresses, the Chairman stated that the work of the League had spread all over the world, and into every section of the Church of Christ, and they were now calling their headquarters "International Headquarters of the Pentecostal League." His remarks dealt largely with the prevalent agnosticism, and what is commonly termed "devout doubt" of the present day, and he attributed both these conditions, in a very large degree, to the inconsistences of professing Christians.

Brief testimonies of blessing received by different sections of the Church, as the result of meetings held under the auspices of the League, were given respectively by Revs. S. C. Morgan, D.D. (Vicar of Ebrington), H. C. Sturdy, M.A. (Vicar of Dorking), R. Berry (Islington Congregational Church), and E. Goode (Free Methodist, Lower Clapton). Mrs. Reader Harris was also one of of the speakers. The gatherings closed with a special address by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, who expressed a hope that the enthusiasm of the Pentecostal League would infect the churches everywhere.

British Jews' Society.

The fifty-second anniversary of the the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews was celebrated on Wednesday, last week, when supporters and friends assembled in Exeter (Lower) Hall. The chair was occupied by Mr. Richard Cory, treasurer of the Society.

Rev. John Dunlop, the secretary, read an abstract of the report, from which it appeared that the Society had restored to the missionaries the amounts by which, through shortness of funds, their salaries are reduced during the previous year. The income, including the balance in hand at the beginning of the year, amounted to £9297, while the expenditure amounted to £7456. The committee urged upon ministers and church officers the importance of forming auxiliaries. The mission house at Spitalfields has been reopened in charge of Rev. M. Nachim, and several other changes have been made.

Principal Agar Beet, in a thoughtful address, dealt with Christian indebtedness to the Jews, and the privilege of promoting the evangelisation of the people. He began with the story of Abraham, pointing out the great spiritual helpfulness of the example and life of the Father of the Faithful, and then instanced other Old Testament worthies. The preparation for the Gospel in the history of Israel was outlined, the experiences under the shadow of Sinai, and the literature of the Old Covenant being indicated as a disciplinary course, making men ready for Christ. The apostles, too, being Jews, it is impossible to exaggerate the debt we owe to Israel. The injustice done to them during long centuries has formed in the Jewish mind an awful misconception, and they have poured upon the name of Christ the indignation excited by the misconduct of his followers. Thus the blindness of Israel has been aggravated, and we owe them reparation. We have entered into the spiritual heritage of the Jews, and our endeavour should be to share with them the blessings of the inheritance. A paralysis has come over Jewish thought, and it is time the work of evangelisation was sent forward.

After some hearty remarks by the Chairman, an address was delivered by Rev. George Hawker, who sought to encourage the workers and to engage the interest of Christians in the operations of the Society. He emphasised the fact that up to date the greatest Christians have been Jews—for we are all the spiritual offspring of men who were first Jews and then disciples of Christ. The question, often asked, as to the cost of converting a Jew, is simple materialism, and not to be considered for a moment in view of the fact that it is our duty to evangelise the Jews. Again, as in days gone by Englishmen fleeced the rich Jews, so it is only right that we should do something for the temporal benefit of the poor Jews who now settle among us.

Rev. T. S. Hutchinson also spoke, specially commending the Society to public sympathy because of its interdenominational character.

Country Towns' Mission.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Friday evening in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, Mr. Richard Cory presiding.

The report presented stated that there was no doubt that the rapid spread of extreme Ritualistic teaching and practice throughout the country, and especially in the villages, was responsible for a condition of things which must arouse the greatest concern in the minds of many Christians. By its system of house-to-house visitation the Society endeavoured to bring the simple message of the Gospel before many thousands from year to year who otherwise would not learn of the one way of salvation. Among other branches of work, the devoted missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Bullen, continued their arduous labours in the New Forest, and during the year a missionary had been appointed to work in the villages near Dunmow, in Essex, and also in villages near Maidenhead. Agents were also at work in Cornwall, Cumberland, Derbyshire, Devonshire, Gloucestershire, and a number of other English counties. The work, it was said, was of a distinctly missionary character, and the principal work of the missionaries is to visit people in their homes; they also hold cottage meetings and preach in the open air and in mission rooms. The financial statement shows an indebtedness of £600; the expenditure, with adverse balance, having been £3098.

A hearty address was delivered by the chairman, who dwelt much on the importance of adhering closely to the Scriptures, and of regarding them in every part as God's inspired record. He thought we might generally depend on the missionaries of this and kindred societies being men of God. Four of the Society's missionaries then gave accounts of their work. Two spoke of their work in Essex, one in Warwickshire, and one in Berkshire. Their earnest addresses were listened to with the closest attention as they told of souls won for Christ in the different departments of their work. Rev. Percival Smith, of Portman Chapel, also delivered a most helpful address.

Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Friday afternoon at Exeter Hall (Lower), and great interest was indicated by the large attendance. The proceedings were opened by the singing of Lord Plunket's hymn entitled, "A Plea for Spain."

The Archbishop of Dublin, who presided, was most cordially received on rising to make a statement regarding the action of himself and two bishops of the Irish Church in consecrating Bishop Cabrera. He referred first to Canon Law, arguing that all that was necessary according to the ancient canons was permission from their own Episcopate and invitation or permission from those to whom they were going. The Irish Episcopate were quite agreeable to his consecration of Bishop Cabrera, who had invited him, and it would have been preposterous to seek permission from the Romish Church, which had excommunicated Señor Cabrera. Dealing then with the Lambeth Conference the Archbishop contended it had pronounced no opinion for or against such an act, and as for English Church opinion he knew he had many friends. He declared there were a great many sober-minded and intelligent men in the Church of England who did not think he had done wrong. After referring to Convocation, the Archbishop, towards the close, referred to the authority conferred upon him on his own consecration day, and expressed his belief that he had also a higher authority for what he had done. As to statistics, his Grace said there were now about 10,000 reformers in Spain, some 3,000 of whom belonged to those in whom they were interested.

An encouraging report of work done in the Iberian peninsula was presented by the secretary, Rev. E. C. Unmack.

The Dean of Norwich, in the course of an animated speech, expressed his thankfulness for the courage shown by Lord Plunket in taking a step which he regarded as necessary for the furtherance of Reformation work in Spain. He trusted the statement just made by the Archbishop would be widely circulated. With regard to the outcry raised in some quarters he feared that there was a party whose aversion to Protestantism was greater than their love of episcopacy. With such they must deal fearlessly and faithfully though not unkindly.

Archdeacon Sinclair followed on similar lines; while the Bishop of Clogher, and of Down, Connor, and Dromore also spoke on the view of the disputed action which would have been taken by the sturdy leaders of the Reformation.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

Special services in connection with the forty-ninth anniversary of this Society were held on Thursday last. The Aldersgate-street noon prayer meeting was for the occasion chiefly devoted to the interests of the Mission. Sir George Williams, who presided, read a portion of Scripture, from John xxi., and made a few hearty remarks on his appreciation of the work among sailors of the Society. The dangers and temptations of seamen are peculiarly great; but, on the other hand, when saved they have fine opportunities of commending the Gospel far and near.

Rev. J. B. Figgis gave an address on "There go the ships" (Psa. civ. 26), in the course of which he showed by simile and parable the fleeting and the uncertain nature of life, the two utterly diverse destinations at the close of life's voyage, and the imperative need of having the Great Pilot on board. He enlarged also on the preciousness of the cargo. All this the speaker used as the basis of a strong plea on behalf of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, whose work he highly valued, having seen therefrom many precious fruits. Not only is it doing good service in London, but also in remote fishing villages, both among sailors and fishermen.

At the close of this address, Miss Hill, the secretary's daughter, sang a solo. Cheering testimonies followed by sons of the sea, English, Scandinavian, and African telling the blessing which God had made the work of this Society to their souls in bringing them to the Saviour.

Subsequently, a ladies' meeting was held at the Society's headquarters in St. George-street, presided over by Mrs. W. J. Armitage, who urged the needs of the work. Mrs. Hill made a strong appeal for more funds, to enable the Society to embrace the opportunities that presented themselves for the extension of the work; and Mrs. Maynard said that what had drawn her and her husband to like and support this work was that its sole aim was the salvation of souls. Despite trials and difficulties, the secretary and his devoted wife were loyal to the Holy Ghost, and that was what would command the sympathy of all who knew the difference between worldly method and that which had Christ for its head. Miss Messer, Miss Child, and Miss Fuller Gooch also spoke, and testimonies were given by Christian seamen.

The evening meeting was presided over by Sir George Williams. A summary of the report, presented by Rev. George J. Hill, showed that God has greatly blessed the various meetings and operations carried on in the headquarters, St. George's-street, E. The Gospel has been constantly preached, and sailors helped in every possible way. The work on the North Devon coast (at Appledore), the Cornish coast (specially at Fowey), the Lancashire and Cumberland coasts, in the Isle of Man, and in ports in Ireland has been well sustained and fruitful in blessing.

The following affords some idea of the extent of the Society's operations:—Bethel services, prayer, open-air, temperance and other meetings ashore and afloat, 12,489. Estimated attendance of seamen and others, 190,000. Missionary visits to ships, boarding-houses, and families, 33,307. Tracts, Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, and text rolls, distributed 177,674.

The income for last year was £2375 16s. 4d., the expenditure £2400 4s. 8d. The total balance now due to the bankers on the new buildings and general fund is £3415 15s. 7d. It was intimated that a special effort is contemplated next year, to raise £5000 to clear off this liability, and place the Society on a sounder financial basis. Revs. W. R. Mowll and Peter Thompson, Mr. Theo. Howard, J.P., and others gave addresses, which were listened to with much attention by the large body of seamen and others.

The Prison Mission.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on Thursday afternoon, May 9; Sir Baldwyn Leighton occupied the chair. He told how he had known Mrs. Meredith for many years, and knew that the Mission had been doing much good. Lord Rookwood commended the workers for the noble and self-denying efforts that had been made, with blessed success, in rescuing poor prison women from sin and crime. Rev. H. Brown Gold (chaplain of the Princess Mary Village Homes) read the reports, which showed that during the year £5365 were earned in the laundry.

Rev. A. W. Baldwin (chaplain H.M. Prison, Wormwood Scrubbs) gave an interesting account of the delivery of the Christmas letters to prisoners, and of the good done by them. All the letters are written by hand; 14,500 were sent to English prisoners last year, and 2000 to foreign prisoners. Rev. G. E. Parr (formerly chaplain H.M. Prison, Northampton) said that having been in constant contact with the work, he knew its value to prison chaplains and others, in their arduous tasks. The prisoners could not be influenced except through sympathy. A prisoner, who received one of the Christmas letters, was so overcome at being called "Dear Friend," and seeing the words, "The love of God," was changed into a new man, ceased his old ways, and forsook his evil companions.

Mrs. Meredith closed by explaining a scheme for forming into an Union the many workers in connection with the Mission, so that they might meet occasionally.

Irish Church Missions.

The anniversary meetings were held on Tuesday week. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who presided, dwelt on the vital union between Protestant and Evangelical workers in England and in Ireland. As one man they wanted to testify to their brothers and sisters in Ireland who were under Papal sway the truth of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. They wanted to convey to them that light which God had bestowed upon them. "A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid"; but they had first to set the city on the hill; and if they chose to hide the light under a bushel, it was no great wonder if it happened to be extinguished. It was England's fault that Ireland was Roman Catholic as to the great mass of its population, and they were seeking to make up for it by means of the Irish Church Missions, which he commended heartily to support.

The report, read by the secretary, showed that the past year has been marked by a bitter attack on the Birds' Nest work, which, however, was fully met and answered. The work in the Mission schools, in Connemara and other parts, has been most encouraging—seventy-six teachers were labouring in forty-nine schools, educating 1982 children. The itinerant and other mission work has been well sustained, and it is noted that the Irish Church Colportage Mission has become a branch of the Irish Church Missions.

Canon Eliot gave an account of a recent visit to Ireland, speaking of the work in Dublin under three heads—mission, educational, and pastoral. The mission work is chiefly among the poor. He described himself as deeply interested in the outdoor preaching on the steps of the Customs House, Dublin. He had never seen a more attentive audience—yet most of them were Roman Catholics.

Rev. R. W. Atkinson, of Tunbridge Wells, having also visited the missions in Ireland, had been much impressed with the value of the work being done in sending the Word of God to the Irish people, and in teaching the children the truths of the Scriptures. He rejoiced that the mission is carried on in faith and prayer, and that God is greatly blessing it.

Rev. Thomas Connellan, in the course of a glowing address, said that having for more than thirty years of his life had an intimate acquaintance with Romanism in Ireland, and during the five past years worked as a Protestant evangelist, he had had peculiar opportunities of looking at the question from both sides. Mission work among Irish Roman Catholics was not easy, and the evangelist does not tread a path of roses. Since the time of the Council of Trent, Rome's main and primary object had been to retain the nations untouched by the great Reformation wave. Ireland was one of these. Ignorance is the great bulwark of Romanism in Ireland, and the chief obstacle to the spread of the Gospel. Racial and religious hatred must not be forgotten in our study of the Irish problem. The 20,000 agents of Rome in Ireland get hold of the children in their tenderest years, and teach them a gospel of hatred. The two essentials of their teaching are that Rome is the one true church, and that Protestants are to be shunned as if they had small-pox. Mr. Connellan then gave two instances of the result of such teaching when he was working as an evangelist in a remote part of Ireland. The little school children were instructed to spit whenever they met him on the road. Then the other night at Derby, he was walking to his lodgings after a meeting in the Temperance Hall, when he was attacked by a mob, nine-tenths of which were little girls from the convent schools. They carried stones in their hands and cried out: "Go back to Dublin. If you come back to Derby we'll kill you." In closing he made a strong plea for liberal aid for the Society.

The other speakers included Revs. P. B. Johnson and F. W. Ainley.

The Bible League.

The third anniversary of the Bible League was celebrated on Tuesday last week, when meetings were held at the Mildmay Conference Hall. Mr. W. H. Seagram, President of the League, occupied the chair at a meeting for business purposes, at which Mr. A. H. Carter presented the annual report. In addition to organisiug conferences and lectures, the League has begun the publication of a series of "Papers for To-day," the first of the tracts being entitled "The Higher Criticism: Whence and What it is," by Rev. John Urquhart.

At the evening gathering, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided, and a paper on "Inspiration" was read by Canon Bell. In conclusion, he said:—Though the Bible has been doubted, denied, attacked and reviled, though all the sciences have been marshalled against it to prove it untrue, it stands upon a rock, and the blustering winds of doubt and unbelief sweep harmlessly around. It has sustained the assaults of centuries, but time, that weakens all things else, has but strengthened the impregnable position of the Word of God. Every age adds its testimony to the truth that God has magnified his Word above all his Name. And as it has been, so shall it be still. Although philosophers may object, and critics cavil, and unbelievers sneer, the Bible shall stand defiant of all its foes, a majestic illustration of the words of Him whom it reveals, and by whose Spirit it is inspired. Rev. John Urquhart followed with a forceful address on "Science and the Bible."

Native Races and Liquor Traffic.

The annual meeting of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee was recently held at Grosvenor House. The Duke of Westminster, who presided, said there was a general admission that the importation of alcohol was demoralising. The present duty of not more than one shilling a gallon was absurdly and inefficiently low. In this country, he would remind them, the duty was 10s. 6d. The question was, how to put sufficient pressure on the authorities to obtain an increase of the duties. Indeed, the committee held that the thing to try for was prohibition of spirits all along the West Coast, from north to south. Rev. J. Grant Mills presented an abstract of the annual report.

Sir George Taubman Goldie, Governor of the Royal Niger Company, said it was most deplorable that in West Africa the easiest way of promoting the rapid growth of commerce and revenue—to a certain point—was to combine the pacification of the country with increased facilities for liquor-selling. European rule meant the deliverance of the natives from bondage and cruelty; but if precautions were not taken against liquor, the policy of pacification, opening up avenues of trade, would sow the seeds of its own ruin. The large importation of 1,100,000 gallons of spirits in 1892 rose to 1,700,000 in 1893, and the figures for 1894 would be little less than 2,000,000. There was ample evidence that this extra liquor was finding its way to the Mohammedans of the interior, whose nominal religion was no barrier against drunkenness. An immense development of the liquor trade had begun, and he was confident, after sixteen years' experience of administration, that if steps were not taken to absolutely prohibit that trade, a state of things would be brought about that would lead to the total abandonment of the country. The really practical course would be for England, France, and Germany to make a private prohibitive arrangement among themselves, and he did not think the three smaller West Coast Powers—Portugal, Liberia, and the Congo State—would refuse to join them.

Mr. Robert Sawyer, Dr. Mahomed Golar, a son of the Rajah of Chumbe, and Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., also addressed the meeting.

Operative Jewish Converts.

Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath, was the scene of considerable animation on May 9, when the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution celebrated its sixty-fourth anniversary. At the meeting in the afternoon the Earl of Roden presided, and said that it was gratifying to know that as many as twenty-four young Hebrew Christians had been resident inmates of the Institution during the year; whilst the behaviour of the majority had been excellent, they had likewise shown a grateful spirit. The sale of Palestine-place had much exercised the minds of the committee. The committee had in view a freehold property which they thought might be suitable, and it was estimated that its purchase and adaptation, and the removal thither, would cost altogether about £5000.

The Treasurer (Mr. A. R. Pite) and Mr. J. B. Newcomb having briefly spoken, Rev. W. L. Rosedale gave some reminiscences of the men he had known at the Institution, and some of whom, notably Dr. Stern, had become illustrious in Jewish missionary annals. Rev. Dr. Gritton said he was glad to support an institution where something was done to strengthen and comfort those young Hebrews who had to endure such bitter trials. Rev. A. Bernstein spoke of many former inmates who had become valuable workers in the foreign mission field.

Protestant Reformation Society.

The sixty-eighth annual meeting of this Society was held last week in Exeter Hall (Lower). Sir C. Robert Lighton, who presided, said that he was thankful to observe that the work was growing. He felt there never was greater need than now for earnest Protestant work. Ritualism and Romanism are walking hand-in-hand, and it behoves all who love truth to bestir themselves, and resist with all their power this movement toward Rome. Captain Williams, R.N., the secretary, gave an outline of the report, showing work in progress in many parts of the country, such as at Oxford, Weston-super-Mare, Halifax, Mayfield, Manchester, Leamington, Bournemouth, Edinburgh, Hastings, Brighton, Leicester, Liverpool, Bristol, Northampton and Wimbledon.

Rev. Dr. Kane, of Belfast, followed with a fiery and eloquent speech, contrasting the prosperity, by the blessing of God, of Protestant States and towns with the decadence of places under the sway of Rome. Notwithstanding the noise and splutter of the Romanisers, he did not believe that Popery is making real progress in this land. In a series of animated passages, he proceeded to deal trenchantly with the Pope's letter to the English people, closing with a warm commendation of the Society.

Mr. William Johnston, M.P., dwelt on the usefulness of the work of the agents of the Society in recalling the minds of the people to the time when the myrmidons of the Pope burned men and women for reading and obeying the Scriptures.

Rev. Dr. Wainwright, in a vigorous denunciation of Rome, showed that the Church of Rome is not the Church of Christ; that the two are, indeed, in direct and open opposition. Speaking of the Ritualistic party within the Church of England, Dr. Wainwright quoted the words of Archbishop Longley—one of the kindest of men—who said in reference to those who would destroy the Reformation settlement which had worked well for 300 years, those who had turned the Lord's Supper into a Mass, that they were doing, though quite unconsciously, the work of the worst enemies of the Church. Their forefathers had suffered much, but they had not to sustain the shock of a confederacy in plots against the State and the Church; that was left to those in our own time to experience. He distinctly asserted, and he challenged contradiction, that for the last sixty years there had been an unimpeded progress of the Papacy towards political power outside the Church; and, added to this, there had been an absolutely unparalleled betrayal of Protestant Christianity within the Church. Was that the time, therefore, when these forces were converging, for indolence and inactivity? Some years ago, the late Lord Beaconsfield said that the confederacy between the High Church Ritualists and the followers of the Pope had shown that its hand was directed against the realm of England.

Brief words followed in conclusion by Mr. W. J. Fraser and Rev. W. R. Mowll.

Christian Instruction Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held last Thursday evening at Stamford Hill Congregational Church, and was largely attended. Mr. FRED. W. SMITH, chairman, maintained that in a great city like London there was scope for any number of Christian workers, especially ladies. The Society's deaconesses undertook work for which men were unsuited. They went into the homes of the outcast and the degraded, and in times of sickness rendered service in the homes of the poor which men could not undertake. The Society helped the poor physically as well as mentally.

The seventieth annual report submitted by Rev. ROBERT MACKAY reviewed the work of the Society during the past year, and explained that its object was the extension of the kingdom of Christ especially among the poor and neglected. To secure this end it held special missions and employed deaconesses under the direction of the ministers. During the past year deaconesses had been appointed to Lower Edmonton Independent Church, Pilgrim Fathers' Church, Southwark, Coverdale Church, Limehouse, and two at Westminster Chapel. Incidents showing the value of the work of the deaconesses were given. Arrangements are being made for tent and open-air services during the ensuing summer.

Mr. THOMAS DENCE, treasurer, spoke cheerfully of the prospects of the work, and expressed the hope that before long they would have a hundred deaconesses at work. Several other friends advocated the claims of the Society.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THE annual meeting of the Barbican Mission to the Jews has for some years been a gathering of workers, as well as of Christians less actively interested in the evangelisation of Israel. The audience on Monday evening, in the hall of the Mission House, 33, Finsbury Square, E.C., included missionaries connected with all the chief societies, and a goodly number of others who by word and deed declare themselves friends of Israel.

Herr C. T. LIPSHYTZ, the director, read an encouraging report of the year's operations. The income amounted to £855, an increase of £150 on the previous year, but less than the expenditure by £20. Among the new features were the appointment of a lady missionary, to assist Mrs. Lipshytz in work among Jewish women and children, and the regular circulation of a Gospel periodical in the familiar "Jargon." The weekly evangelistic services and the daily Bible classes continue to be well attended; and a spirit of inquiry prevails among the Jews, several of whom were baptized on a profession of their faith in Christ. The Mission continues to assist several continental agencies, but through lack of funds this development has not kept pace with the consolidation of work at the headquarters of the Mission.

Archdeacon SINCLAIR, who occupied the chair, spoke in hearty commendation of the aims and methods of the Mission. He hoped the old policy of discouragement and persecution was now quite discredited in England; the friendly relations cultivated by Mr. Lipshytz are undoubtedly such as promise the best results. The Christian teacher might show the Jew that Jesus fulfils every type and figure of the Old Testament as He answers all its anticipations; he might present Him as the Flower of the Hebrew race, the true Prophet, the true Priest, the true King, the Revelation of God to man, and the Living Sacrifice for the sin of the world. It is possible to present every fact and every act of our Lord's life in the language, and imagery, and teaching of the Old Testament; and thus the Jews, who to-day are rather ignorant than obdurate, may be shown what they hold in common with us, and may be assisted to arrive at a fulness of knowledge of God's truth. In conclusion, the Archdeacon, speaking from personal knowledge, commended the Mission to the support of all who have a sense of Christian indebtedness to Israel.

Colonel MORTON, of Mildmay Conference Hall, urged Christians to support missions to Israel. Rev. JAMES ADLER did the same. Speaking as a missionary of long experience, he said that modern Judaism is so undermined as hardly to hold together. The New Testament has made its way into the homes of the Hebrews, and many cherish its teachings and hope in Christ.

An address was also delivered by Rev. J. B. BARBACLOUGH, who thanked the Archdeacon for his services as President of the Mission. The last speaker was General G. WYNNE COLE, who gave a personal testimony of the devotion of Mr. and Mrs. Lipshytz; and, recalling his sojourn in India, described a visit to that interesting people, the Beni-Israel, of which some present would have liked to hear more.

Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission.

THE twenty-ninth anniversary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission was celebrated on Monday in the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell. Of this Mission the sainted Earl of Shaftesbury once said: "I believe that amongst these watercress girls there are many as honest and as pure as are to be found in all London. Of all the movements I have ever been connected with, I look upon this watercress girl movement as the most successful." It is no wonder, therefore, that the various speakers should have repeatedly adverted to the interest which the noble Earl manifested in this Mission, and that his spirit seemed to hover over the enthusiastic gathering.

Mr. ROBERT SCOTT, who presided, said that he had been acquainted with the Mission, so ably conducted by Mr. John A. Groom, from its infancy. He cherished the deepest regard for this and kindred institutions, although it was impossible, in every case, to show the interest he felt. Referring to the motto for the year—"Jesus and Him crucified"—he remarked that Christ was the sure foundation, "the tried stone," "the precious corner-stone," upon which this work had been erected. He had observed its growth. He had known the time when a small room would accommodate the audience at the annual meeting, whereas now a large hall was filled with the friends and supporters of the work. He rejoiced that though Christ was once crucified, yet He now lives, and welcomes to Himself everyone who trusts in Him. Remarking upon the beauty of the artificial flowers which adorned the table—and which were the handiwork of crippled girls who had been taught this business—he said there appeared to be only one thing lacking, that was the perfume. There was no fragrance, he said, in the lives of those living without Christ, but the fragrance of a holy example characterised the lives of his followers. He congratulated Mr. Groom upon the work which had been accomplished during the past year. This comprised over 500 Gospel meetings in the various branches of the Mission throughout London, the total attendances exceeding 30,000. The visits of the missionaries and Bible-women had numbered 10,000; 100,000 free meals had been supplied to destitute women and children; 120 orphan and abandoned children were being cared for in the Homes at Clacton; and over 2000 children attended Sabbath-schools and Bands of Hope.

Mr. W. J. ORSMAN, J.P., of the Costers' Mission, referred to his former efforts in the neighbourhood in conjunction with Mr. Groom. The work had originated with the children, but it could not stop there. The more you widen the diameter of light, said the speaker, the greater will be the circumference of darkness affected. There were two spirits in this world. The consideration of the one was, "What the world owes me"; this was opposed to the spirit of Christianity, which eagerly inquired, "What can I do for the world?" When the apostles went forth preaching Christ the people believed that if only their shadow fell upon the sick folk they would be healed; and to-day the preaching of the Gospel was accompanied by the same Divine power. Mr. Orsman concluded by earnestly commending the Christ-like efforts of Mr. Groom and his large staff of workers.

Mr. JOHN A. GROOM attributed the existence of the Mission to the kindly sympathy shown at the commencement by Mr. Orsman. In his visits in the early morning and late at night he had been brought into contact with misery and iniquity, of which nine-tenths of the people of London were entirely ignorant. A series of living illustrations depicting the various phases of the Mission were then introduced, which must have brought tears to the eyes of many in that vast assembly. The first portrayed a tiny group of little girls huddled together, ill-clad and homeless, by no means a novel picture to the missionaries engaged in that work of rescue; the second, a deaconess from the slums with a pale-faced child in her arms, to whom maternal care is unknown; then a brighter scene was introduced, representing some of the wee mites as they may be seen in the Home at Clacton, enjoying the toys to which they had never been accustomed in the days of their infancy; following this, a servant, nattily attired, having been trained and started in life; and, last of all, some crippled girls making artificial flowers, for which they showed great aptitude. More than £1000 had been realised last year upon the flowers thus made; and over 1100 girls since the commencement of the Mission had been taken from the streets, trained for service, and provided with situations. No girl has a right, said Mr. Groom, to be in the streets; no girl was safe in the streets; and no girl was under the necessity of remaining in the streets. He had resolved many years since to be a father to those who needed a father's care, and he rejoiced that he was enabled to train so many for God and his kingdom.

Mrs. F. A. BEVAN presented the prizes for good conduct, long service, and proficiency to a large number of girls. Some had been in situations as long as five years, others for twelve months, but the gratifying appearance of the girls must have cheered the supporters of the Mission, no trace of their former circumstances being apparent in their countenances. If only these girls had been influenced for good, this had been a sufficient proof of the value of the work. In the enforced absence of her husband, Mrs. Bevan said: She had been reminded that evening of what the late Lord Shaftesbury remarked to her on one occasion when speaking of Mr. Groom and Mr. Orsman: "I am growing old" said the earl; "but mind you never forget those two good men." As long as I live, said the speaker, for his sake I feel in duty bound to help on these two excellent servants of God. If in any way I can render any assistance, Mr. Groom knows I shall never forget the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission.

The most eloquent appeal of the evening, however, was made by the eighty or more lasses from the Home at Clacton, whose sweet action songs, musical drill, and plaiting of the maypole enlivened the proceedings in a most interesting way. They acquitted themselves admirably in every respect. Their chubby, sun-burnt faces testified to their healthy surroundings at the famous watering-place; and their creditable performances well repaid the efforts of the resident superintendent of the Home, Mr. James Groom.

A few words of kindly sympathy and approval, from the Rev. J. H. Rose, M.A., vicar of Clerkenwell, and a vote of thanks to the chairman, concluded the proceedings of the evening.

MAY FLOWERS.

RISEN, the flowers, the birds, the sun;
New life and loveliness and glee,
With the sweet May-tide, have begun—
How grand the sky, the earth, the sea!
Our hearts beat lightly, and our spirits flow,
As in those happy spring-times long ago.

For winter, brighter summer's prime;
For want, more welcome days of wealth;
For parting, happier meeting-time;
For sickness, sweeter new-born health.
With falling chains, the rapture of the free;
With sin forgiv'n, the Christian's jubilee.

What for our life's dark wintry day?
Our partings by the dying bed,
Our tears rained on the lifeless clay,
Our quenchless longings for our dead?
God will restore. The flowers that earth has riven,
In fadeless beauty bloom for us in heaven.

BREMERHAVEN.—We continue here the small Strangers' Rest, founded by Mr. Radcliffe. Last winter nearly 140 English steamers were in port. We heartily invite English brethren to come over and lend us a hand or give any assistance as they are able. The Rest is situated, am Hafen 27, Bremerhaven.

BOW COMMON, E.

The Baptist Church here, under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. T. J. Hazzard, has, by the blessing of God, been led to seek larger opportunity for service in a very needy field. The many departments of the work have so grown, that increased accommodation has been rendered necessary. A freehold site in the main thoroughfare, but close to the old chapel, was given by a friend, and a plain church building is being erected. Suitable memorial stones were laid on May 7, when a large gathering of friends assembled on the site to witness the interesting ceremony. After the stones had been duly laid, an adjournment was made to the chapel. Pastor Archibald G. Brown presided, and spoke words of encouragement and appreciation of Pastor Hazzard's work. Mr. G. J. Michell, Mr. E. Rawlings, Rev. W. Cuff, and Mr. T. A. Denny also expressed deep interest in the work at Bow.

A public service was held in the evening in the East London Tabernacle; the preacher was the Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, who preached a powerful sermon from Psalm xxxi. 3 on Divine Guidance; lessons enforced. In speaking of the occasion which brought them together, Mr. Hurndall spoke of the character and locality of the church, and of the great sympathy he felt for and with the pastor in his work. Pastor Hazzard said the proceeds of the day amounted to nearly £200. A generous friend has promised to give the last £1000 needed for the building fund, when the balance has been raised. The sum of £1000 was collected before the work was entered on. The builders' contract (exclusive of architect's fees and downstairs seating) amounts to £2785. It will, therefore, be seen that a considerable sum has yet to be made up. Pastor Hazzard's address is 52, Addington-road, Bow, E.

EAST END LODGING HOUSES.

The Spitalfields Lodging House Band, superintended by Mr. A. T. A. Millership, in connection with the London City Mission, carries on its work with considerable encouragement. In the report for the past year we read :—

"The old stamp of lodging house, frequented by criminals, tramps, beggars, disreputable women and half-naked children, is a concentrated mass of iniquity which will bear no comparison with those of modern conception, inhabited by working men, dock and casual labourers. The latter contains many men whose strict integrity is undoubted, and who only seek assistance under the direst necessity. To such it is a home, where, at the completion of their toil, they cook their food, and discuss the topics of the day before retiring. Yet, in the literal sense of the word, these men are poor, living from hand to mouth when employed, illness or an idle day imperils their ability to provide necessary food and shelter. Each man has a locker (rather larger than one cubic foot) in which to keep his belongings, and a numbered bed—many men are known only by their nick-names or numbers.

"Many lodgers have formerly occupied a higher social position; professional men, doctors, clerks, tradesmen, and even clergy are found amongst their ranks, reaping the penalty of God's retributive law, 'Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.' Strange to say (excepting homes partially supported by charity) there is an entire absence of a similar class of respectable lodging houses for poor working women; the majority of houses occupied by women only, containing a very large percentage of the vicious class. Throughout last year we conducted Sunday services in four houses, accommodating in the aggregate 780 persons. These services are the central pivot upon which the whole of our work depends; an attentive audience heartily joins in singing their favourite melodies—in one house the men always select some of the hymns."

Open-air meetings, gatherings for men only, mothers' meetings, a Sunday-school, and free meals are among the other efforts put forth by the Mission. In conclusion, Mr. Millership says: "We proclaim the Gospel to nearly 1000 people every week, and during last year we relieved 10,982 persons in the manner suitable to their requirement. This is entirely accomplished by voluntary labour, and we shall be glad to enlist in the ranks of personal service those who, having experienced the power of the Gospel, are prepared to convey it to others seeking a Saviour."

In all ten thousand "lodgers" are under Mr. Millership's visitation. No fact so eloquently demonstrates the lost condition of these people as the one already hinted at; many are only known by nicknames. Last year fourteen of the inmates who died were buried without name, being altogether unknown. Mr. Millership is able to do much good with old clothes and tracts. Communications may be addressed to the headquarters of his work, The Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, E.

BIBLE-TRAINING INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

A few months ago we gave a statement of projected undertakings on an extensive scale in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Bible-training Institute, Glasgow. Since then both schemes have been fully matured, plans have been prepared, and building operations will begin shortly. The existing Christian Institute will occupy the central position in the new block, with the Bible-training Institute on the right hand, the Y.M.C.A. Club to the left. The share capital of the Y.M.C.A. building has been fully taken up, and the directors of the United Evangelistic Association have issued an appeal for funds, so that the whole sum required may, if possible, be in hand before operations are commenced. As stated in our previous article, the cost of the building, including site, is estimated at £35,000. Of this sum, Lord Overtoun has contributed £15,000, a bequest of £10,000 has been intimated from the trustees of the late Mrs. J. E. Sommerville, and a further sum of £3500 has been contributed by various donors. The directors thus require £7000 to complete their scheme.

The students come from all parts of the country, fully one-third being from England. Of those who have completed their course, several are doing good service in various parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and three are serving in the mission-field in China. A large proportion of the students presently in the institute are designated for the foreign field.

The young women's department is to be opened in September next in suitable temporary premises, and as only a limited number of students can be received during the first session, early application should be made. Full information will be given by the Superintendent, Mr. John Anderson, 1, Blythwood-square, Glasgow.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

Sir,—I trust that the interest in Miss de Broen's Mission at Belleville will not be allowed to die out. None who know what that work has been, or what it still is, ought to cease to make it the subject of their prayers, and one of the objects of their sympathy and efforts.

Miss Douglas, writing from Belleville, gives me some information of great importance and interest. Rev. Marc Ami, who has long laboured among the French Canadians, when visiting Paris on his way to Switzerland—his native country—obtained an introduction to Miss de Broen. The result has been that he is now settled at Belleville. His experience and knowledge are of vast importance in the prosecution of the Mission.

Miss Douglas tells me of the encouragement which they have received in the full attendances at the well-known iron building. This consists not only of those who are attached to the Mission, but also of Belleville people generally, and of the young men and young women who attend the evening classes. The ouvrier women and numbers of the rough men who have received soup during the cold weather gather together to hear the message of salvation. Some of them gladly accepted the permission to sit by the stoves after addresses had been given by M. Ami, three French pastors, and two American gentlemen. It was a favourable opportunity for personal application to them of the truths to which they had listened, and the distribution of suitable tracts. The zeal and persistency with which the work has been sustained is beyond all commendation. A. A. Isaacs, M.A.

11, Great Bedford-street, Bath.

THE STAFFORD HOME for orphan working lads, 18, Bow-road, E., reports that during the two years it has been opened it has proved of real service to a class of boys who too often have to go into common lodging houses. The director is Mr. W. H. Dalton, 56, Gipsy-road, West Norwood, S.E.

AN APOSTOLIC WORKER.

Dear Sir,—The accompanying letter is from one whom I knew and valued very highly as an earnest worker at the London Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff-highway. May it arouse every true Christian to feel it to be his or her imperative obligation to spread the knowledge of Christ over the whole world, whether by mouth or pen.—Yours most faithfully,
Reginald Radcliffe.

Inglewood, Waterloo, Liverpool.

My dear Mr. Reginald Radcliffe,—You may not remember me, although we met now and then at my old college, the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, where I had the privilege of working some years previous to March, 1889, when I came to Buenos Ayres. Do you remember a large farewell meeting at Exeter Hall, in that month when Arnot, Tom Morris, and some of us took our leave of the old country for Christ's sake? When I had finished speaking you kindly put your hand upon me with the words, "May you be the father of a multitude." I felt I could not stay in England, so full of workers, and leave the precious souls out here to perish without a chance. I was in the South-Eastern Railway, and felt I could earn my living just as well in Buenos Ayres, and it is so. I am now acting traffic-manager of a railway here, and thank God for the testimony of earning my living and serving the Lord.

Why is there not more of this testimony, which is so weighty and so Apostolic? Do impress on all the need of this testimony. I cannot tell you how good the Lord has been to us. I do not know what I should have lost if I had refused to obey and stayed in England, but I realised the promise blessedly true—for all given up a hundred fold given by Him who will be no man's debtor. It is a great joy to work amongst the poor dark souls out here, and it would be a heavy trial to have to live in England again. Why don't young men come out for the Lord to this country—trusting Him to find them work when they arrive. Hundreds come out "on spec," but the Lord's children seem too timid to trust Him.

Do pray for the Argentine Republic and S. America, and always put in a word for this great continent when pleading the cause of the dark places of the earth. The Lord bless you. May your last days be your best, and your path shine more and more unto the perfect day. I often think of you and read your appeals in The Christian.

I wish for you the pleasure
Of labour in full measure
In the happy blessed service
Of your Master and your Friend,
And the great delight of knowing
That some harvests of your sowing
Shall be gathered in his garner
To his glory in the end.

With love in our Lord, yours in his happy service, C. Torre.

Estacion Central, Buenos Ayres, April 2.

OUR VILLAGE CHILDREN.

This Mission is carried on by Messrs. S. J. Hewlett and G. Goodman, on behalf of the children of the villages who seldom hear the Gospel on simple and clear lines. In their third report they say:—"Experience has fully justified our hopes and efforts. Many of the children write, and we hear from time to time from those who are carrying on the work of the reality of the change in many little lives, and of the experience of deliverance and joy they have found in Jesus. Several touching incidents of children who were brought to Jesus at the village meetings being taken home to be with the Lord have reached us. In these cases a simple, unwavering faith in Jesus carried them to the brink of the grave, and they died fearless and happy in the full assurance of hope. Thus, with tender love, has the Good Shepherd gathered in his arms these lambs who are the first fruits to God in our village work."

A second caravan is being built, and thus two vans will shortly be at work. Details of this interesting mission may be had of Mr. H. Morris, 4, Eliot-hill, Blackheath.

THE "MISSING LINK" has still to be found, in spite of the many times explorers have proclaimed they have discovered it. Dr. Dubois has been the last to describe to the world what he had found in Java, and confidently named the Pithecanthropos erectus, but his triumph has been short-lived. The Victoria Institute recently held a meeting, at which the subject was taken up, and it was shown that in all cases of so called "missing links" the crania found were those of man, but varying in capacity; that that found by Dr. Dubois, whilst possessing all the characteristics of man, simply had a smaller brain capacity than usually met with.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

On Lord's day, the 31st of March, Pastor E. Clarke completed the twenty-ninth year of his mission labours for Italy, with a sermon from the words "I seek not yours but you."

On the Monday following a public meeting was held to inaugurate the commencement of Mr. Clarke's 30th year of mission labours. Sir George Williams, of London, took the chair, and in a most lucid and forcible address set forth the great idea Mr. Clarke had kept steadily in view, in connection with his work. Mr. Clarke showed that only by the spade and axe of labour had the results, which had filled friends and foes with astonishment, been obtained. The moral soil opposed a most obstinate resistance, and the obstacles to progress had required the greatest skill and effort.

The large gathering of friends in Casa Alberto, Spezia, evinced the most intense sympathy with the discourses of the speakers, and on the following Tuesday morning a similar meeting was held, at which Sir George and Lady Williams were present. Sir George sought to encourage the teachers of the more than 700 scholars in the various Bible day-schools. In a most delightful manner he interested a numerous gathering of scholars. One great sorrow was expressed that the Spezia Mission had no locale capable of receiving more than about one-fourth part of the scholars, the teachers, and the parents of the children connected with the day and Sunday schools, a want which, it was earnestly desired, might in God's providence be supplied.

The annual meeting of the Spezia Mission, held last Thursday, at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. was presided over by Mr. F. A. Bevan. Mr. H. H. Pullen reported steady progress and rich blessing, but sorely straitened means. The chairman said he had seen the work for himself, and was fully convinced of its sterling character. Sir George Williams gave an emphatic testimony from personal observation to the service being rendered by Mr. Clarke and the Spezia Mission to the cause of Christ. He was surprised at the extent of the work, and thought it should be far better known and more widely supported. Similar testimony was given by ev. A. M'Caig and Mr. J. B. Meredith.

In the evening Mr. Pullen lectured upon Italy's spiritual needs and claims, the lecture being illustrated with views shown by oxyhydrogen light. A friend promised £100 towards the existing £500 deficit if the other £400 could be raised speedily.

WHATSOEVER CHRISTIANS.

The "Whatsoever" Band has for its rules the seven great "Whatsoevers" of the Bible:—John ii. 5, Matt. vii. 12, 1 Cor. x. 31, Col. iii. 17, Col. iii. 23, Eccles. ix. 10, Phil. iv. 8. The signed form of membership states that trusting only in his strength we make it our sincere aim, daily and hourly, to be and to do whatsoever He commands, and by his grace to live according to these rules.

The membership is for anyone, old or young. Many of the present members are among the ranks of well-known Christian workers, many others are invalids whose only service here is to "be still" and glorify Him by patient waiting and suffering. Some are missionaries abroad—in Japan, India, Palestine—others again are quietly doing his "whatsoevers" in their round of daily duties at home.

There is no subscription beyond three stamps each year to cover postage, and even that is quite voluntary; the printing expenses are met by the sale of a series of leaflets for letters, called the "Whatsoever" series. Further particulars, and also copies of the "Story of the Band" (1½d. each), can be obtained by writing to E. G. C., Mildmay House, Old Town-street, Plymouth, Devon.

GILFORD HALL, SANDYMOUNT, DUBLIN.—The annual meeting of this mission was held on Thursday evening; the attendance was encouraging. Many came from the city to show their sympathy, and were rewarded by hearing faithful, earnest, and loving addresses delivered by Revs. Ballard, J. Ervine, and Pastor Hugh D. Brown. The annual report shows no falling off in the attendance; but as those who chiefly attend the hall live at some distance, the friends who carry on this work feel the time has come for special evangelists to be employed, whose whole time should be taken up for the furtherance of the Gospel, so that the careless and indifferent may be compelled by loving entreaties to hear the "Words of Life." To enable the committee to carry this out, in much prayer they commend this their desire to their more wealthy brethren, whose contributions will be thankfully received by the hon. secretary, Mrs. Kershaw-Emerson, Blackrock, co. Dublin.

SALVATION ARMY.

The great meeting held on Monday night at the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, was rendered notable by the fact that General Booth made it the occasion of a review of the position of his social scheme. He said they divided their operations into three main stages—first, supplying immediate wants; secondly, aiming at reformation of character; and finally, placing the rescued under circumstances in which they could permanently help themselves. Though they had been hampered in their operations by inadequacy of funds and other difficulties, this movement has been the most gigantic success of any voluntary beneficent scheme ever propounded. They had now sixty-three slumposts, involving visits to 60,000 families yearly; fifty-one rescue homes for fallen women, passing through 3000 per annum, of whom seventy-five per cent. were permanently reclaimed; twelve homes for ex-criminals, accommodating 250 men; seventeen labour factories, employing 2000 workless; nineteen labour bureaux; six farm colonies, employing over 1000 men; thirty-three food depots, feeding 25,000 daily; 11,000 officers, engaged in social work; and twenty-six night shelters, receiving 11,000 homeless every night.

Referring to the scheme for an over-sea colony, the General said that when he was in Canada his attention was drawn to vast tracts of unpopulated country capable of sustaining 100,000,000 people. He had been catechised by four Canadian Cabinets—those of British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, and the Dominion—and he had reason to believe that both inside and outside these bodies there was a consensus of opinion that the colony suggested would be of great advantage to the country. Consequently he anticipated no difficulty in obtaining the land they required; at the present moment he was negotiating a survey of the country upon which his eye had been specially set. The sum of £5000 was required for the purpose of their operations during the present year.

Letters to the Editor.

CONVENTION OF HISTORICAL STUDENTS OF PROPHECY.

Sir,—May I crave the favour of space in your columns to bring before your readers the following proposal, which has the support of Dr. Grattan Guinness, viz., that a meeting of Students of Prophecy of the Historical School be held in London this summer, to discuss the propriety of undertaking a winter campaign similar to that recently undertaken by the Futurist School?

All interested in the subject are invited to communicate with me at the address given below. The date and place of meeting will be settled later on; the first thing necessary is to get a sufficient number of influential speakers wishing to co-operate. It must be distinctly understood that none but Evangelical Protestants of the Historical School are invited, but there is no question of religious denomination involved otherwise.—Yours faithfully,

Alfred Porcelli.

The Laurels, Alverstoke, Hants.

"THE STORY OF THE YEAR," the people's annual report of the work of the Church Missionary Society, is a very attractive publication. The issue for 1894-5, just out, describes the various fields, and many admirable engravings brighten the pages. Miss S. G. Stock, the author, shows a large acquaintance with mission history, and her pages should be read by all who are interested in world-wide evangelisation. A map shows the extent of the Society's operations, and an appendix gives a list of the missionaries. (1s. post free. Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square.)

CONSTANTINOPLE.—The Sultan has granted and put in execution the Imperial iradé for the American College for Girls at Constantinople. Aside from the immunity thus secured from Governmental interference, there is involved a considerable financial advantage. It is part of Turkish law that school property, recognised as such, pays no taxes. In this case the iradé grants in addition freedom from what are known as vakif dues, amounts paid to certain mosques for their support. There is thus secured to the college an annual amount of not less than 500 dols. in perpetuity. In granting the iradé through Minister Terrell, the Sultan expressly stated that it is given in consideration of what the college has done and is doing for his Christian subjects.—New York Independent.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard have both conditionally accepted invitations to speak before the fifth meeting of the Anti-Alcohol Congress to be held in Basle, Switzerland, August 20, 21, and 22.

The Police Court Mission, Cheltenham, has opened a cottage where discharged prisoners and others who are desirous of redeeming their characters and wish to avoid the temptations of the public-house may spend their evenings.

The Homes for Inebriates Association reports that the experience of another year has proved strongly confirmatory of the presence of a diseased condition in many inebriates, and of the fair prospect of a cure of the disease of inebriety, especially if treated at an early stage of the malady.

Dalrymple Home, Rickmansworth, reports that during the year twenty-two patients were admitted under the Inebriates Acts, and eleven as private patients. The medical superintendent reports some very successful cases, and a larger percentage of good results than have rewarded his efforts in any previous year.

A demonstration will be held in the Royal Albert Hall, in support of the Government Local Option Bill, on Saturday evening, May 25, at 5.30, when addresses will be delivered by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., Lady Henry Somerset, Canon Wilberforce, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Messrs. W. S. Caine, M.P., T. P. Whittaker, M.P., and J. H. Raper.

Dr. Eugene Tracy, in a recent speech, related some of his hospital experiences of the results of alcohol. He declared that the wards of the London hospitals were crammed full of persons suffering from the effects of strong drink, but who had not been drunkards. He declared that four out of six beds were occupied by men who would never have been there but for drink.

The Church of England Temperance Society has just concluded another of its periodical written examinations of Band of Hope children on the "Physiological Aspect of Temperance." There were seventy-eight London and 138 country centres, and the juvenile competitors numbered several thousands. No less than 20,000 children were prepared for the examination, their ages varying from eight to sixteen years.

In preparation for the third biennial convention of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union and nineteenth annual council of the B.W.T.A., a special meeting for prayer will be held on Friday afternoon, May 17, from 2.45 to 5 p.m., in the Library, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. The meeting will be open to all. Lady Henry Somerset is expected to preside. Addresses will be given by Miss Willard, Mrs. H. W. Smith, and Rev. F. B. Meyer.

The Medical Faculty of France is drawing attention to the fearful habit of drinking absinthe, and its appalling effect on the population. The increased consumption is assuming alarming proportions in all the towns, and particularly in Paris, where it has just doubled in seven years. Women are as much its slaves as men, and the habit prevails alike in high and low circles. The moral effects are deplorable, and the physical consequences have largely brought about a great increase in lung diseases of the worst kind. The medical men are strongly urging the Government to forbid the manufacture, entry, sale, and consumption of absinthe in France as the only way of saving the nation from decrepitude.

THE CHILDREN'S FRESH-AIR MISSION reports that last year 3014 children were sent away for a change. The object of the Mission is to give poor ailing children, from the districts of Holborn, Clerkenwell, and St. Luke's especially, a change in the country. The secretary is Miss Rowley, St. Peter's, Onslow-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

MONTE CARLO.—A correspondent writes:—"A band of seventy believers have for some years been praying for the overthrow of the Casino, Monte Carlo. For twenty-nine years it was only shut for one day—that on which the old prince died. I see it is to be closed for four months this summer, and one journal doubts if it will ever be opened again." Such a result is ardently to be desired; to this end let further prayer be made.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—The fo'c'sle of the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, presented an interesting scene at the late muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew. Members of various nationalities gathered with their sympathising London friends, and the informality with which these meetings are always conducted renders them specially inspiriting. Miss Child gave out the text for the month, "In his name shall the Gentiles trust." Miss Tuck, Messrs. Toner, Pitt, and others dwelt upon this text in different aspects. A number of the seafaring members bore hearty testimony to the power of God to save and keep both on land and sea.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The next Scottish Convention will be held in Saltcoats, Sept. 10, 11, and 12.

The half-yearly conference of the Associations in the Dundee district was recently held at St. Andrews.

The Glasgow Southern Section is about to erect a fine building at the corner of Pollockshaws-road and Maxwell-road.

Mr. William Burnside, evangelist, has lately been holding meetings in connection with the Cambusbarron, Carnoustie, and Dundee Associations.

The Hackney Y.M.C.A., 275, Mare-street, N.E., has issued a good programme for the summer holidays in the Norfolk Broads, North Wales, and on the Continent, copies of which may be had from the secretary.

The Associations of Mid France have just held a most successful conference at Vigan. Some two hundred young men sustained an active part in the proceedings, and large audiences were drawn to the public gatherings.

Mr. J. Storre Fry presided at the May breakfast of the Y.M.C.A. at Totterdown, Bristol. The Hon. Sec. (Mr. J. C. Marsh) presented a brief report of the work during the past year. The branch was now three years old, and during the year they had increased their numbers and improved the provision for the comfort of the members and associates.

The Devonport Association is now actively engaged in open-air work, not only in the main thoroughfares of the town itself, but in the outlying villages. Many hundreds attend the services, and the workers are full of expectation for a rich harvest of souls. Several conversions have recently taken place in connection with the weekly Bible-class and the Sunday afternoon men's meeting.

The summer syllabuses of the Associations, many of which have now been issued, contain a great variety of recreative engagements. Special arrangements have been made with the Regent-street Polytechnic in order that Y.M.C.A. members may participate in the advantages offered by their continental and other tours. But a number of Associations are running projects of their own. Derby, for instance, has in prospect several caravan tours and stationary camps, as well as co-operative holidays in the Irish and Scottish lake districts.

The Constantinople Y.M.C.A. meets in Somerville House, Pera, twice a week during the winter months. During the past season the subject of Sunday evening study has been "The Period of the Judges." Six nights have also been devoted to foreign missions, when collections were made for the C.M.S. and L.M.S. On the Tuesday evenings there has been a varied programme. Subjects of local archæological interest were taken up. English history has been studied, and essays have also been written upon some of the prominent English literary works. The attendance throughout has been fair.

The German Y.M.C.A. celebrated their tenth anniversary on Thursday, May 2, at their rooms, 28, Finsbury Square. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Seagram. The report submitted by the secretary, Mr. J. Bartels, showed that the past year had been one of much trial, but also of rich blessing, and it had tended to deepen the spiritual life of the members and greatly to strengthen their faith. Count Bernstorff gave a brief sketch of the Y.M.C.A. work in Germany, especially in Berlin, and said he was convinced that the work for God did not suffer so much from the attacks of its enemies as from the indifference and inactivity on the part of Christians. Addresses were also delivered by Dr. Baedeker, Mr. W. Muller, Mr. J. P. Werner, and Pastor F. Fliedner.

Mr. A. P. Stockwell, who has been sent out to co-operate with Mr. J. Campbell White in the work of the Calcutta Association, writes:—"The work here is in splendid condition. It has the co-operation and sympathy of all the Protestant ministers and missionaries in the city. The business men are coming grandly forward in the matter of finance, and now, as a result of the McNeill Mission, there have been Rs. 17,000 pledged towards a building, and this without any systematic canvass. The young men of the city are in sympathy with the movement. There is an earnest band of Christian workers who are doing good work. The athletics are drawing some of the finest fellows in the city—Europeans. I find a good number of them are Christians, and only need bringing out."

The general secretary of the excellent Association at Berlin, Mr. Christian Phildius, has inaugurated a movement which, if it be developed at other large centres, is likely to prove of inestimable value to the work of Y.M.C.A.'s on the Continent. He has just held a "secretaries' course," to which have gathered a number of young officers, from Dresden, Upsala, etc., desirous of extending their practical acquaintance with Association methods; and these have been thoroughly drilled in the varied work of the Berlin Central Institution. The need of well-equipped and qualified men to take up the work in Germany and other Continental countries is very urgent; and it is the earnest desire of Mr. Phildius that the effort he is starting may lead to the establishment of a regular training-school. Two former assistants of his have become general secretaries at Leipzic and Breslau respectively, and an active member of the Berlin Association has taken charge of the work at Hamburg; but three further calls from German cities are still awaiting favourable response.

At the Eastbourne Y.M.C.A. there is a Bible-class held for German waiters, a large number of whom are employed in hotels and boarding houses of the town. The class meets late on Wednesday nights and is conducted by Mr. Steinle, of the Queen's Hotel, and another member of the Eastbourne Association. The attendance has been variable, but the work is most encouraging, affording many instances of blessing. In the autumn of 1893 one member who was converted in London, but had been largely helped in living a Christian life by the Eastbourne class, went to Cairo for the winter season. In his limited time he undertook work there for his fellow waiters, inviting them to meet for prayer and Bible study. The same man returned to Cairo last Autumn, and meeting another who had been brought to Christ at the Eastbourne class, the two established similar meetings in Cairo and Alexandria, the last letters speaking of an attendance in Cairo of thirty or forty men, with much blessing. The parent class has been established for about three years, and it is interesting to know that the majority of the men attending have been Roman Catholics. Two members of the class have entered the mission field.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A house is being taken at Keswick for Y.W.C.A. workers for the fortnight of the Convention. Particulars can be had from Miss Dashwood, 39, Bryanston-square, W.

In the Employment Agency work spiritual results are always kept in view, and that this higher aim in all the work does not interfere with its practical efficiency is proved by the verdict of a well-known paper, which sent an agent to the various registries of London, and specially recommended two, of which that of the Y.W.C.A. stood first.

In the work of the Restaurant Branch at Morley Rooms, 14, John-street, there is much to encourage. Boarders find the home very pleasant. Many have been helped to leave the bar and give up the drink. The social evenings have been much enjoyed. At one of these Mrs. Mary Davies sang and spoke on total abstinence, saying she had sung better since she became an abstainer seventeen years ago.

At the Rochester Institute and Girls' Club, Walworth-road, the members at the close of the year numbered 144, and the total number of attendances was 4996. The junior band progresses satisfactorily. Efforts are being made to promote temperance, which is greatly needed. Judging from the steady increase in numbers and the regular attendance of members, the committee feel that the Institute is thoroughly appreciated, and that many weary working girls find there recreation and refreshment and loving Christian sympathy.

The Tulse Hill and West Norwood branch is only three years old, but for some time a larger house has been needed to carry on the work. Such a house has been taken, and on the afternoon of May 10, about seventy friends gathered at Sterndale Lodge, 191, Tulse Hill, to dedicate it to the Master's service. The new president, Rev. E. J. Roxby, vicar of Holy Trinity, was in the chair, and spoke on the manifestation of God's presence at the dedication of the Temple. Miss Ellis, from the Gipsy Hill branch, followed with some very practical words on the working of a branch successfully.

The Junior Department continues to make progress under Miss Barter as hon. secretary. Several new branches were started last year. Blandford is the largest in the South of England with 150 members, 145 of whom are total abstainers; Leamington has 130 members, Windsor 127, Waltham Abbey 108. In London, Bermondsey with 136 members, Percy (King's Cross), and Princess House, are the three largest. The total junior membership in the United Kingdom is about 10,000. The work is most encouraging, and it is wished that all secretaries saw the importance of having a junior branch connected with their work among seniors.

The "Factory Helpers' Union" carries on work amongst the thousands of girls in work-rooms and factories all over London. The annual report just issued, with its long list of agencies, shows what an extensive work is being done. The committee are directly responsible for several institutes and clubs, and continuous calls are received from others which often cannot be helped for lack of funds. Just now the work is greatly in need. Workers are also needed to visit the clubs, and to adopt one particular club to which flowers, papers, magazines, etc., might be sent, and a personal interest shown to the girls. Miss Skirrow, hon. secretary, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, will be glad to hear from any willing to help.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The recent C.E. Convention in Leeds has been the means of giving fresh impetus to the movement in the district.

The societies in Keighley district have formed a district union, and have named it the "Craven District Christian Endeavour Union."

In connection with Prewett-street Mission Hall Cathay, a C.E. Society has been started with sixty-one active and twenty honorary members.

The Scottish Convention held in Glasgow was of the most interesting character, and it is believed will give a new start to the movement in the North.

The C.E. Society connected with Gifford Hall Mission, Islington, in response to an invitation to assist in the open-air services, has offered to conduct the meeting entirely on the last Sunday in each month during the summer.

The Northamptonshire Congregational Association reports great successes in connection with the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour Union. Last year there were only nineteen in the county; to-day there were forty-six. The membership last year was 813, and now it was 1868.

IRISH NOTES.

The Irish Presbyterian missionaries report 183 baptisms in China during the past twelve months, and 1020 members against 856 last year.

The Presbyterian Assembly's Colportage Association is doing a good work. During the past year the colporteurs sold 2046 Bibles, 1435 Testaments, and 1246 Rhemish Testaments.

Five students who have completed their theological course in the Assembly's College, Belfast, have offered to go into the foreign field. It is noteworthy that a few years ago the Board could not get a sufficient number of missionaries to offer for the work; now it needs sufficient funds to send out all the eligible candidates.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The P.S.A. movement is making rapid strides in the East-end of Glasgow.

Mrs. Baeyertz, having lately had a very encouraging season of work in Kirkcaldy, is now evangelising at Motherwell, near Glasgow.

The Wesleyan Methodist Synod for Scotland held its annual meetings last week in Glasgow. There has been a considerably increased membership during the year.

On Sabbath last Rev. John McNeill preached to overflowing congregations in North Woodside Free Church, Glasgow. The famous evangelist was as fresh and suggestive as ever in his expositions.

The sessions of the U.P. Synod, held last week in Edinburgh, were not marked by any features of special interest. The foreign missionary report was an encouraging one, and the missionary meeting is said to have been of striking interest, especially the speeches of Dr. Anderson, of Formosa, and Dr. Ross, of Japan.

FROM PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAYTI.

Rev. Lucius Hippolyte, Baptist missionary pastor writes from Port-au-Prince, Hayti:—Our work is gaining ground every day in spite of difficulties. In December last I baptized eight persons, who are now enjoying church fellowship with us, and the grace of the Lord Jesus. Several backsliders have been reclaimed. A young Englishman has joined us too. Our Sunday and day schools are also progressing.

The need for Gospel teaching in Hayti is as great and pressing as in any heathen land. The idolatrous superstition in which the people are brought up is shocking and degrading. The Roman Catholic priests justify the condition of things. Hayti needs Protestant elementary schools and mission halls. I shall be glad to answer inquiries about the work. I have long desired to have a magic lantern, which would be of great service to me in my mission efforts.

COLONIAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—At the annual meeting of this Society, held on Monday night at Tollington Park Chapel, the opportunity was taken to bid "God-speed" to the secretary, Rev. J. Burford Hooke, about to visit the Congregational churches in South Africa. The meeting was prefaced by a sermon from Dr. Joseph Parker.

The Book World.

A PIONEER IN MISSIONS.

The Gospel on the Continent: Incidents in the Life of James Craig, D.D. By his Daughter. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.) Here is a work to charm all who rejoice in earnest effort to extend the Gospel. It is the story of one who did yeoman service in days when foreign or continental missions were by no means regarded with enthusiasm in the professing church. Dr. Craig, who was among the early workers in his chosen field, was ordained in 1845 by the Irish Presbyterian Church to "seek the salvation of the house of Israel." How he sought it by unwearying labours and constant journeyings, and in seeking the good of Israel was also marvellously used in awakening professing Christians in various countries, forms the theme of this entrancing book. The work abounds in vivid pictures of the cold state of the Lutheran and other continental churches at that time. While thus used to arouse nominal Christians, he never forgot his chief concern was the Jews, and amongst these God gave him many seals to his ministry. His aim was to win individual sinners, and in this he was singularly successful. Although he remained in charge of the Hamburg Mission until 1874, he devoted much time to visiting workers all over Europe—from Russia to Spain, and everywhere seems to have been the means of stimulating these and bringing fresh trophies to his Lord and Master. His later years were spent in like service—mission journeyings in Spain, Italy, Germany, Scandinavia, Russia, Roumania, Turkey, Syria, Egypt, and Greece—his one desire, everywhere and always, being to awaken the Lord's people to their responsibility with regard to missions in general and Jewish missions in particular. It is a book to be read, pondered, and prayed over. It may be the means of calling forth many fresh labourers into the harvest-field.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

Isaiah One and His Book One: An Essay and an Exposition. By George C. M. Douglas, D.D., Principal of the Free Church College, Glasgow. (10s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) This work is in two parts, the first of which deals with the unity of Isaiah, and the second with the exposition of the book. Students of Scripture generally regard chapters xl.-lxvi. as constituting a second division of Isaiah; it is the fashion in modern theological literature to speak of two writers, the second division being attributed to an author entirely unknown and unnamed, who wrote a century and a-half later than Isaiah of Jerusalem, toward the end of the exile in Babylon. Dr. Douglas patiently examines the facts and arguments of the Higher Critics, and defends the unity of authorship. He shows that Israel's prophets were not mere Court advisers or political leaders, and maintains that while their work may have been primarily for their own time, it was not by any means exclusively so; they had a duty for time to come as well as for their own time (1 Peter i. 10-12). Whereas the so-called critical writers teach that a prophet's knowledge of the future was at the best vague and indistinct, it is expressly laid down in Scripture that a prophet shall be known as false or true according as his uttered predictions shall come to pass or not. As to the arrangement of the prophecies, Dr. Douglas agrees with Drechsler, in the belief that in preparing the written record of his ministry for the use of the Church of God, Isaiah took notice of the two great crises to which the people and kingdom of Israel were exposed in his day. To these crises Isaiah gave prominence by the two narratives which are found in the book, in chap. vii. and in chaps xxxvi.-xxxix., and which are intimately united with two of his greatest prophecies.

Dr. Douglas says: "I cannot imagine any more natural introduction to chaps. xl.-lxvi. than chap. xxxix. I admit without hesitation that there is a break at this point in the book of Isaiah, so that chap. xl. begins a new section. At the same time I hold strongly that this new section is in connection with the preceding one; and I also hold that there is a much more important division of the book at the end of chap. xxvii. Looking at the book of Isaiah as a whole, these are the two grand divisions into which it falls. First, to the end of chap. xxvii. the prophecies are grouped around the story of the want of faith on the part of Ahaz at the time he was tested. And secondly, from chap. xxviii. onwards they are grouped around the trial of Hezekiah's faith. This trial was successful for the moment, we might say; yet it was injured by the presence of something of the old evil; and Isaiah made this evil to be plainly seen, and also the dark shadow which it cast over the future. But his great final work was to utter the prophetic message of the universal and abiding glory, when this temporary shadow should have passed off and been forgotten." Dr. Douglas was one of the revisers of the Old Testament, and his work is based on the Revised Version. The controversial section is thoughtful and reverent; the exposition is scriptural and practical. The Higher Critics have ignored much that has been written against their methods and in exposure of their destructive reconstructions. If they ignore this work, which is as dispassionate in style as it is solid in substance, unsophisticated Bible students will draw their own conclusions.

SCRIPTURE AUTHORITY AND INTEGRITY.

The Inspiration and Accuracy of the Holy Scriptures. By John Urquhart. (7s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) This goodly volume deals with its important subject in three main divisions. First, the Scripture doctrine of inspiration is investigated; then rationalism is outlined in its rise and progress; finally, critical results are tested by modern discovery. The second and third sections are the most distinctive; and, as a historical statement, the former of these is as readable as its story is inexpressibly sad. Not having full confidence in revelation, those who should have been its valiant custodians have yielded to the enemies of the Bible in order to save it! As Mr. Urquhart says:—"Rationalism may lead to Deism, and even to Atheism; but it is not Atheism, nor even Deism, to begin with. Its attitude and motive are entirely different from theirs. They are antagonistic to the Scriptures, and it is friendly; they seek to destroy, and it comes to save. It is in the method by which it seeks to save that its deadly error lies. It imagines that the ordinary defenders of the Bible are utterly wrong. In its judgment they are wasting their strength in the defence of an untenable position, and perilling everything by an obstinate refusal to admit facts. Rationalism is panic and surrender; and as anything can be extorted from fear, there is nothing that infidelity demands that rationalism will not eventually yield."

The part of Eichhorn, De Wette, Kuenen, Wellhausen, Ritschl, and many others in the development of Higher Criticism is admirably summarised. In the third division Mr. Urquhart examines the books of Esther and Daniel, against which so many bold things have been written during recent years. These statements he analyses, and also studies the books themselves. He brings home to the critics many a misconception, and many fallacious conclusions. He has read widely, and carefully followed modern research in the East. In an appendix, Dean Farrar's recent work on Daniel is criticised. Many will be thankful to Mr. Urquhart for his book, which is written in vigorous English, and full of important facts and arguments for the integrity and authority of Holy Scripture.

In Memoriam: Rev. R. H. Lundie, D.D. (Philip & Son, London and Liverpool. 1s. 6d.) A collection of memorial addresses and sermons by Revs. James Muir, D.D., C. Garrett, John Watson and James Mellis, on the life and labours of one who had endeared himself to a wide constituency. To these are added some valuable notes and three sermons by Dr. Lundie himself. The compilation will be singularly acceptable to all who mourn his loss to the Church.
